Under the Triple-A merger plan being discussed, three American Association franchises (Denver, Oklahoma City and Dallas-Fort Worth) would become part of the Pacific Coast League, while two others (Indianapolis and Little Rock) would be added to the International League.

That would increase both the International and Pacific Coast Leagues to 10 teams each, with northern and southern divisions.

It would also reduce the total number of Triple-A teams from last year's 22 to 20. The merger would enable each of the 20 major league clubs to arrange a working agreement with one Triple-A team.

The "save the minors" program provides that the major leagues guarantee the operation of not less than 10 minor league teams each year. This would average out to five affiliates for each major league club, although some would have more and others less.

The Triple-A leagues were known to object to the program on the grounds of "inequities" in the amount of support they were due to get from the majors. However, they were faced with a "take-it-or-leave-it" alternative.

The plan called for the scrapping of the present minor league classifications and regrouping the leagues into Triple-A, Double-A and "A" categories.

The program provides for a "player development contract," under which a major league club would agree to provide a roster of players for a minor league team and pay a certain portion of their salaries.

Soccer Matches Slated Weekly

If you're a year-round soccer enthusiast, then Fetzer Field will be the place to be each Friday at 3:45 p.m.

Carolina's undefeated freshman team will combine with the 1962 varsity's sophomores and juniors and give the soccer fans a weekly preview of the 1963 for the remainder of the year.

The "1963 varsity's" opponents will be a combination of the graduating seniors and grad students. The first varsity-grad contest is scheduled for tomorow.

Any soccermen who have not been contacted are urged to meet at Fetzer Field Friday for the first post-season match.

Indoor Track Practice Starts

Varsity and freshman indoor track candidates should report to Coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton in the Tin Can this afternoon between 2 and 5.

Indoor track men are expected to work out one hour daily between 2 and 5. The first time trials are scheduled for December 14 and 15.

Debate Team Faces Oxford; Topic Is Government's Role

The UNC Debate Team will face the Oxford University debaters Monday, Dec. 10, from 4-5 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

The resolution to be debated is "Resolved: that it is the business of the Government to give the people what they need rather than what they want."

This will be a split-team debate, and will be open to the faculty, students, and townspeople of Chapel Hill.

The UNC Debating Team will consist of Mack Armstrong and Bill Patterson.

Armstrong is a veteran of four years on the UNC team, a 1962 delegate to the National Student Congress, and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He is from Rogersville, Tenn., and is majoring in History.

Patterson is from Bedford Hills, N. Y., and attended Phillips Andover Academy. He is director of the Southeast District of the College Young Republican Federation. His major is also History.

Debaters from Oxford University are William D. Madel and John B. W. McDonnell.

Madel attended Uppingham School and Keble College, Oxford. He is a member of the Oxford Union Society, the Oxford University Conservative Association, the Federation of University Conservative and Unionist Associations, and the Oxford hockey and cricket teams, and plans to go into the field of publishing.

McDonnell attended the City of London School and Balliol College, Oxford. He is a member of the Oxford University Conservative Association, the Carlton Club, the Oxford Union Society, the Editorial staff of "Mesopotania," the Coxswains' Society, and the College Sports Clubs Committee. He plans to enter law.

China Says India Violated Truce

NEW DELHI, Friday (UPI) — Communist China accused India early today of a series of violations of the nine-day-old ceasefire, raising fears Peking was sending up a smokescreen to cover new aggression before India can rebuild its shattered defenses.

The Chinese broadcasts came shortly after Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and Pakistani President Mohammed Ayub Khan agreed to meet soon to try to resolve their disputes including their rival claims to Communist- threatened Kasmir.

Agreement

Agreement between India and Pakistan on Kashmir and other problems would free thousands of Indian troops for border duty in any renewed fighting with China.

Under terms of the truce offer made unilaterally by Peking, the Communists are to withdraw from the embattled border areas Saturday, but Nehru said tonight the cease-fire proposal in its present form is not acceptable to India.

Nehru was disclosed to have received another communication from Chinese Communist premier Chou En-lai Thursday night but its contents were not disclosed.

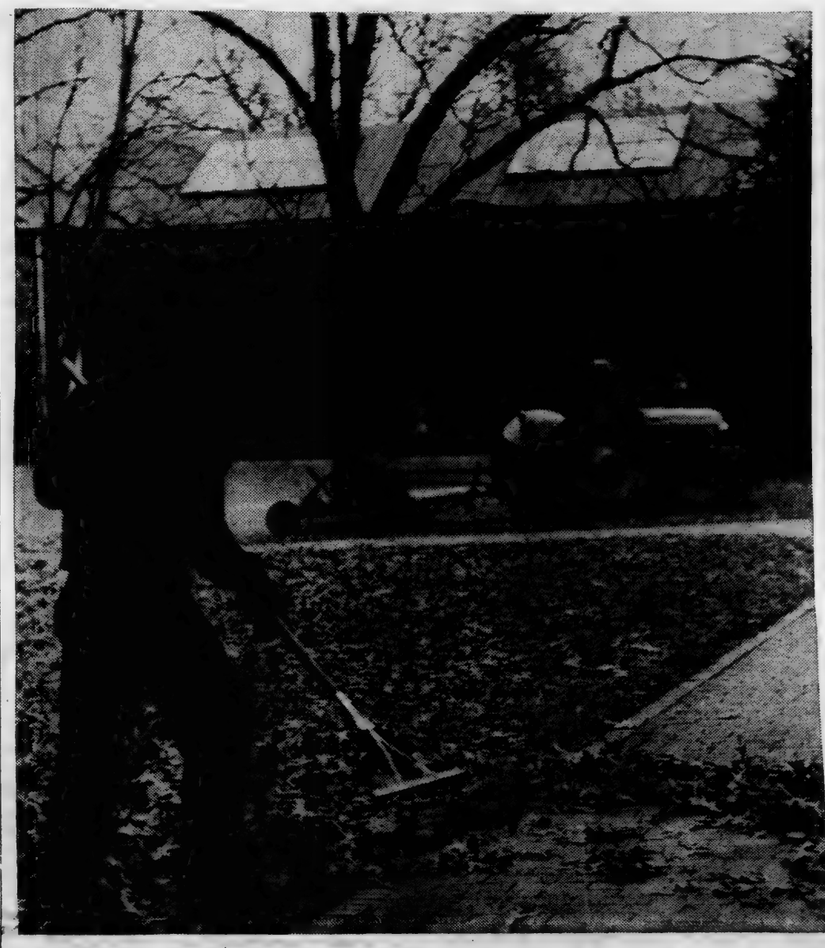
Chou's message came after an Indian spokesman said recent "clarifications" asked from Peking earlier made it clear the Communists intend to retain the 2,000 square miles of Ladakh they have occupied since the start of border hostilities last month. He called the clarifications "quite confusing."

Holds Firm

Communist China, holding firm to its demands on India, claimed early today that Indian troops had pushed to within two miles of Chinese positions in the eastern section of the border and that Indian planes penetrated deeply behind Chinese lines in the west.

The broadcasts by Radio Peking said "this suggests that Indian troops are engaging in armed provocations to undermine" the truce. Observers said Peking's statement suggested the Chinese might be ready to attack again.

India has feverishly worked to rebuild its border defenses and to arm and train its men with U. S. and British weapons before fighting resumes. Tezpur dispatches said India planned to observe the cease-fire because of the urgent need of a military buildup.



9 Fraternities Censured For Parade Floats

The Office of Student Affairs yesterday released the names of nine fraternities and one dormitory that will receive official "letters of censure" for sponsoring objectionable floats in the "Beat Dook" parade. The nine fraternities are Delta Kappa Epsilon, Kappa Alpha, Kappa Sigma, Lambda Chi Alpha, Phi Gamma Delta, Phi Kappa Sigma, and Sigma Chi. Everett Dormitory was the only dorm to be censured.

The "letters of censure" were mailed yesterday to each organization. Dean Long said that this is the first time that such official censures had been issued. He implied that the action by the Dean's office was not to be taken lightly.

When asked to comment on the critique used in determining which floats were objectionable, Dean Long noted the ones his office considered "offensive" or "in bad taste." He said that the groups singled out showed a "lack of self-discipline."

Allen Will Veto Yack Bill Because Of Clerical Error

Statutes Bill Also Incorrect, Will Get Axe

By HARRY DELUNG

Student Government President Inman Allen yesterday announced that he will veto $1161 worth of legislation, including a $951.60 appropriation to the Yackety-Yack.

The Yack bill and a $210 appropriation for the Codification of Student Government Statutes were passed by Student Legislature at their last session Nov. 15.

Allen told the DTH, "My veto of the Yack bill is not done in opposition to the appropriation. There is a numerical error in the bill the Legislature passed which should be corrected."

Allen referred to a budget deficit of $420 which should have read $465. An attempt was made to point this out in the last legislative meeting. Due to the pressure of time (five minutes before the women's curfew hour), the body passed the bill. It had been introduced by Jean Yoder of the University Party.

The vote was 14-6, with a large number of abstensions.

Allen said yesterday, "I hope the legislature will learn to be more careful by having to correct this mistake, as I certainly hope they will." According to the executive, the incorrect "whereas" clause cannot be amended. It would be necessary for the Legislature to pass a new and corrected bill.

In his veto message concerning the Codification bill, the president pointed out that "nowhere . . . is it specified from where the $210 will be drawn."

Appropriations of this nature normally specify that the money will 'come from the unappropriated balance.'

Phakavali: They Can Also Twist

"Fascinating," "spectacular," "amazing" were some of the impressions the Phakavali Dancers of Thailand made on the audience when they performed Wednesday night in Memorial Hall.

But after the performance the girls changed from their elaborate brightly-colored costumes into blue-jeans and toreodors and the boys demonstrated that they could twist, too.

Only a few of the dancers could speak English but a couple of the boys nodded rapidly when they were asked, "Twist?"

Then to prove they understood, they performed good-naturedly.

The troupe is small but select, consisting of six girls and two men and an orchestra of six. The ages of the dancers range from 18 to 30.

The Phakavali Dancers, sponsored by Graham Memorial, is touring the United States. Before coming here, it performed in several countries in Europe.

The most exciting number Wednesday night was a "sword dance" which used real swords and eventually worked into actual combat between the "demon-giant" and the "Monkey King."

At one point in the dance, one of the dancers flings his sword toward the other, who is lying on the floor. The one on the floor rolls over just in time for the sword to stab into the floor where he was lying.

After the performance the "demon-giant" said that in one performance, the "Monkey King" had not rolled over fast enough and the sword has grabbed the back of his costume and pinned him to the floor.

Another number which seemed to be an audience favorite was a folk dance which had originated in the rice-threshing fields.

Hardwood rice poles, which are beaten together to thresh the rice, are both the "percussion accompaniment" and the hazard of the game, for the dancers must dance between the clashing poles.

When asked if they had ever got their feet caught between the beating poles, they laughed and demonstrated how long they had been doing the dance by holding their hands parallel to the floor to show three feet or "little girl."

One instrumental number was performed by the six-member Thai classical orchestra. The Renaad, a kind of alto xylophone with bamboo keys, took the lead.

The orchestra uses two types of wind instruments, the flute type and the oboe, and a variety of percussion instruments.

The dances range from ritualistic ceremonies to folk dances. The dancers speak with their hands to ask questions, make challenges, and tell stories.

Five curtain calls and a statement by a student who saw the performance seem to sum it up.

"It was one of the best things I've ever seen on this campus," he said.

FOLK CONCERT SET

Obray Ramsey, banjoist and folk-singer, and Tommy Hunter, guitarist, both of Madison County in the Great Smokies, will give a recital, "Songs of the French River," in Graham Memorial Lounge Saturday, Dec. 8 at 8 p.m. Their appearance will be sponsored by GM, the North Carolina Folklore Society, and the University Folklore Council.

Ramsey and Hunter are also on the program of the North Carolina Folklore Society meeting in the Sir Walter Hotel in Raleigh Friday, Dec. 7 at 2 p.m.

Ramsey has made an album for Vanguard Records.

Shakespeare, Shaw Works Set Tonight

Tonight at 8 p.m. in the main lounge of Graham Memorial, Petite Dramatique will present "A Smattering of Shaw and Shakespeare."

The first part of the program will be a dramatized reading of Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion," with a cast of twelve. It will be directed by Dramatic Art graduate student Larry Warner. Included in the cast are Garth Ferguson, Anita Phillips, George Gray, and Judy Foster.

A selected series of scenes and monologues from the works of Shakespeare will comprise the second half of the program.

Guest artist for this presentation will be Clarence Felder, an actor who appeared this summer with "The Lost Colony" in Manteo.

Felder has held starring roles in "Macbeth," "J.B.," and "Streetcar Named Desire," all at the Town Theatre in Charleston, South Carolina. He has also appeared in "The Lady's Not for Burning" at the Columbia Playhouse in Columbia, South Carolina. Felder is currently in rehearsal for "Macbeth" as a guest artist at the Goldsboro Neighborhood Playhouse, Goldsboro, North Carolina.

There will be a reception following the show, also in the main lounge. Admission is free, and I.D. cards are not required.

FREE FLICKS

The Graham Memorial Free Flick tonight will be "Shane," starring Alan Ladd, Jean Arthur, Van Heflin, and Brandon De Wilde. "Shane," directed by George Stevens, is the story about a former gunfighter who tries to settle down, but is forced to continue his violent life. Saturday night's movie is "Singing in the Rain," starring Gene Kelly. Showings will be at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. in Carroll Hall. I.D. cards will be required.

Seeger Tickets Still Available

Pete Seeger, internationally famous folk singer, will appear Wednesday at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall in a concert sponsored by the New Left Club. Tickets are now on sale at Kemp's and at G.M. at $1 each.

Proceeds will go to Seeger who has, at past concerts, given it to SNCC. SNCC is an Atlanta-based organization whose unction is to encourage the elimination of racial discrimination throughout the nation. SNCC's membership, as its name suggests, is entirely composed of students and recent graduates. They believe that young people, through non-violent means, can be more effective than can any other group ni promoting the cause of brotherhood in the United States.

According to the Saturday Evening Post, SNCC has in two years "revolutionized the drive for integration. With sit-ins and Freedom Rides, they have won equal treatment at lunch counters, in buses, terminals, public parks, swimming pools, theaters, churches, libraries, museums and beaches in many cities and towns of the Deep South which orthodox civil rights groups had privately written off for decades." From 1962 onward, SNCC's major focus of activity will be the ballot box.

Seeger is undertaking a series of benefit concerts for SNCC. The Memorial Hall concert is the only one presently planned in North Carolina.

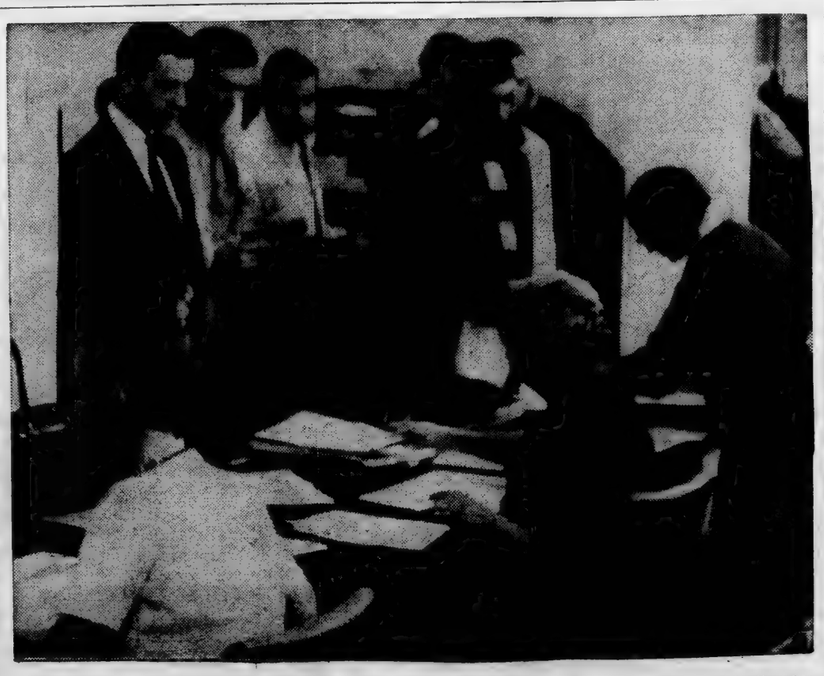
Companies To Visit Campus

The following Companies will recruit on campus next week:

Monday, December 3: International Minerals & Chemicals Corp.



Tuesday, December 4: E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Inc.; David Taylor Model Basin; U. S. Navy Area Audit Office; Union Bag-Camp Paper Corp.

Wednesday, December 5, 1962: Department of State Auditor (North Carolina); Dobeckmun Division of Dow Chemical Co.

Thursday, December 6: Dobeckmun Division of Dow Chemical Co.; Humble Oil & Refining Co. (Standard Oil of N. J.).

Students who wish to sign up for interviews may do so at the Placement Bureau Offices in Hanes Hall.

THE LAST STEP—These seniors are going through their last step of what is supposed to be their last pre-registration at UNC. Here they present their tickets and green forms to the checkers in Hanes basement. Pre-registration for juniors begins next week, and for sophomores, the week after. (Photo by Harry Lloyd)

What's In A Name? Plenty, Says State

Seven State College students picketed Chancellor John Caldwell's residence Wednesday afternoon protesting the name change of the school.

Bystanders reported one sign read "Call Us Cow College, but Never UNCR." Another said "Keep Sanford's and Friday's Politics Out."

The picketing began about 1:30 p.m.

The pickets carried signs denouncing the proposed change of the College to the University of North Carolina at Raleigh. The orderly picketing was being carried on in front of the Chancellor's home.

It has been proposed that State College be expanded and renamed University of North Carolina at Raleigh.

Caldwell has endorsed the change. Some students have opposed the proposed name.

Cordon Record On WUNC

WUNC-FM's "Let's Listen to Opera" will feature a recording of Dr. Norman Cordon of the University of North Carolina Extension Division in the part of Mephistopheles in Charles Gunod's FAUST Friday, Dec. 7, at 8 p.m.

The disk, which was recorded directly from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera Company March 14, 1942, is the only one of its kind in existance.

This is the first time since the original Metropolitan performance that it has been repeated.

Dr. Cordon, who made his Metropolitan debut in 1936 as a bass-baritone, remained with the famed opera company for twelve seasons. He states that the part of Mephistopheles was "the favorite role of my career." He appeared in the role in approximately 40 Metropolitan Opera performances.

Since the original recording was made at 78 rpm speed on a breakable disk, Mack Preslar, Assistant Director of Radio and Television, and Ralph Sargeant of WUNC-FM re-recorded Dr. Cordon's original disk on tape especially for the WUNC-FM program. Preslar and Sargeant will be special guests on "Let's Listen to Opera" Dec. 7.

Other performers to appear with Dr. Cordon in FAUST are: Charles Kullman in the title role; Leonard Warren as Valentine; Licia Albanese as Marguerite; Wilfred Engleman as Wagner; Lucille Browning as Siebel; and Thelma Votipka as Martha.

Dr. Cordon appeared on the concert stage for 20 years. He studied music at UNC and later at Salem College, continuing his studies at the Nasnville Conservatory of Music under Gaetano de Luca and in Chicago under Hadley Outland. He received his Mus. D. in 1946 at the University of North Carolina. His UNC contemporaries include orchestra leaders Kay Kyser, Skinnay Ennis, John Scott Trotter, and Hal Kemp.

Dr. Cordon is a native of Washington, D. C.

He is presently with the Bureau of Community Aoult Education of the UNC Extension Division.

2 UNC Professors Go "On The Road"

Two U.N.C. professors were "on the road" last week, one in Italy to receive an award and one in Washington, D. C. to address the U.S. State Department.

B. L. Ullman, Kenan Professor Emeritus of Classics at the University of North Carolina, is the recipient of an honorary degree awarded by Padua University, Padua, Italy, last week.

He received the honorary diploma for his contribution to Paduan humanist studies. Prof. Ullman discovered the author of the first history of literature ever written by a humanist, Sacco Polenton of Padua.

The Padua University Press recently published a book containing most of Prof. Ullman's notes on Polenton. The book was dedicated to Prof. Ullman.

Currently, Prof. Ullman is in Italy on a double mission. He attended a special meeting of the newly-formed International Balzan Foundation in Rome in October. Dr. Ullman is a member of the committee on prizes of this foundation, patterned after the Nobel Foundation, and also dedicated to peace and the recognition of outstanding contributors to the sciences and humanities. He is also doing research in Florence, Italy.

Dr. Ullman is currently the president of the Mediaeval Academy of America. He served as president of the Fellows of the Academy, a group of 50 of the most distinguished scholars in the fields of mediaeval art, history, language and literature. He is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Speaking to a meeting of the Foreign Service Institute at the Department of State in Washington, D. C. this week, Associate Professor of Political Science Robert A. Rupen said Mongolia would never attain economic self-sufficiency because she imports too many primary articles.

"The Mongol has been a poorly-adapted factory worker, and practically refused to do any construction work at all . . . he . . . would rather import Chinese to dig ditches and put up buildings and bridges than do it himself," said Rupen.

But though Mongolians make use of Chinese labor, they look to Russia for leadership. The Soviet model inspired the Mongolian Party; its Academy of Sciences, its army, its secret police, its architecture, and its literature is patterned after Russia's. Even Mongolian leaders, such as Choibosan, who patterned himself after Stalin, was erased from the minds of the people, much as Stalin was purged from the Russian hearts, Rupen said.

"Development of education represents Communism's most positive accomplishment in Outer Mongolia," said Rupen. All Mongols now go to school; four year schools are most prevalent, but seven and ten-year schools also exist. Half the Mongolian population under 40 is now literate," Rupen stated.

Infirmary

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

AT ACKLAND

"Four Centuries of Architectural Drawings", an exhibition selected from the Collection of the Library of the Royal Institute of British Architects, will be shown at the Ackland Art Center from November 22 to December 16.

Circulated by the American Federation of Arts, the 54 drawings displayed include works of distinguished architects dating from the 16th through the 19th centuries. Devoted largely to English drawings, the exhibition constitutes a unique record of English draftsmanship. There are also fine examples of continental works, notably French and Italian drawings from the 18th century.

Student Control Of Parades

The principle of student responsibility for student behavior has taken a rough beating throughout the "Beat Dook" parade affair. It is difficult to support "student autonomy" when you observed the parade's grossness and utter lack of taste, which the irresponsibility of students allowed.

"There has been no responsible student control of the parade," Dean Long said Wednesday in announcing the formation of an administrative-faculty board to review all future parades and displays. "There has been a maximum opportunity for students to control these affairs," he said, "but it has not been done."

The dean was right. There has been adequate opportunity for students to set up standards for parade participants. But no responsible action ever had been taken—so the administration acted in place of the students.

In the past week, however, the students were beginning to do something, were beginning to work toward a long overdue review of future parades. The parade sponsors, Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, met Wednesday—before they had heard of the administration's decision—and voted to establish a committee to review future "Beat Dook" affairs.

The committee consists of the PiKA president, chairman of the parade committee (a PiKA too), and a faculty member. Dr. Sam Hill of the religion department has agreed to serve on the committee.

In a letter to the Tar Heel and the Chapel Hill Weekly, the PIKAs apologized for the poor taste displayed in the parade. In order to keep out such entries in the future, the fraternity said its committee would have the power to disqualify any participant for any reason.

This seems to us a reasonable plan. Perhaps the committee could be improved by adding a representative of the student government and another faculty member, making a five-person committee. Students still would have a majority on the committee and the responsibility that would go with that majority control.

The administration was justified in taking action on unrestrained grossness, both in this parade and other events, such as the Sigma Chi Derby. But the manner in which the administration's decision was announced—without an attempt to work with the students to set up a review committee—was unfortunate. We hope the Office of Student Affairs will cooperate with the PiKAs and student government to establish a workable situation. After the indignation at the recent parade recedes, it will be possible to arrive at a conclusion acceptable to all parties concerned.

Perhaps the administrative-faculty committee could act in an advisory role to individual student review committees. The chances for such an arrangement will be greatly increased if students will take the initiative in other areas beside the "Beat Dook" parade. The Sigma Chis should set up a committee for its Derby—a committee with faculty and student government members with the power to prohibit exhibitions of poor taste. Student government should take a similar initiative in connection with the Homecoming Weekend displays and parade.

Students are paying for years of irresponsibility, but it is still not too late for them to act. If they act quickly and intelligently, perhaps the administration will be able to again place its confidence in the student's good judgment. (JC)

Laws And Politics

We noted with interest the Election Board's calm disregard of the election laws in the recent freshman presidency runoff.

Winning presidential candidate Harrell failed to turn in his expense statement—an election law requirement. Not to turn in such a statement is supposed to result in disqualification. But Harrell and and the Student Party claimed the elections laws were of no consequence because there had not been a candidate's meeting (also an election laws requirement). Because one rule was disregarded, the Elections Board assumed all rules could be disregarded.

Under this impression the board granted the SP claim and said everything was okay, and to hell with the laws. The University Party justly has appealed the verdict.

It is difficult to care who wins the freshman class presidency, but it is less difficult to care whether student government's laws are obeyed. If they are not, why have any laws at all? (JC)

Surprise

The South Carolina Supreme Court Wednesday overruled "sit-in" convictions of 42 students from Morris College.

The students had been fined $100 each and sentenced to 30 days in jail for "breach of the peace." But South Carolina's top court (repeat —SOUTH CAROLINA, not agitating Northerners) said, "In no instance did it appear that any of the Negroes commited any act of violence." The decision was unanimous.

Ah, listen closely: can't you hear the small, still voice of reason?

On the lighter side of the news:

Forty-two persons in Jackson, Miss. pledged on their honor Tuesday night not to buy any government bonds until Kennedy rescinds his housing executive order. The reason the group gave for the light attendance at their "pledging" meeting was competition from a White Citizens Council meeting in another part of town.

Too many grins. (JC)

Four Years For What?

". . . were we led all that way for Birth or Death?"

—Journey of the Magi
T. S. Eliot

It was, I believe, during my seventh year of public school education in a sleepy. eastern Carolina town—this charnel house of all past joys and griefs—that during the course of a single afternoon, I once committed to memory the hundred counties of this state, in alphabetical order.

Let me hasten to add here that this was done not from any inner prompting to become a wizard at geography, nor did it arise from any overblown sense of devotion for the state that nurtured me. It was done soley because it was commanded to be done by a teacher who shall remain nameless—but not blameless.

The next day, called upon to recite, I arose proudly and spieled them off in my best barker fashion to the great envy and instant ire of my classmates; for it seemed they had not been so diligent as I, having spent their time much more enjoyably either in the lone movie or on the football field, while I had sat in front of a mirror reciting to the pimply-faced image before me, while the autumn afternoon gave way to dusk.

At the time I would have taken all manner of oaths that, yes, I had gained an invaluable parcel of knowledge and that—though I could not have explained how—it would stand me in good stead for the remainder of my life, little germs and big bombs notwithstanding. The praise of the teacher was effusive, matched only by the anger of my classmates, and from the one I received a gold star, from the other, two well delivered kicks in the lunch room line.

Since that day, these hundred counties have been recited aloud not a few times, this usually executed in the presence of others, who more often than not, were possessed of enough charm and bubbly cheer not to challenge any flaw in my instant erudition, when I stumbled momentarily, my tongue struggling with some stubborn sybilant, reluctant to be spewed forth into smoke-filled air.

And so it went, through this year and that class, one book and another teacher, becoming embarrassingly easy to graduate valedictorian, having inherited somehow the faculty of being able to commit to memory almost anything—quickly, completely and forever.

During the early college years, when football was in flower and Truman still in office, I found it worked much the same as it had in high school. One simply sat upright in one's seat—or slouched, this depending upon the activities of the previous avening—listened, wrote down what was being said, committed it to memory, then gave it back on quiz days, as one might return a borrowed tie or umbrella.

Had I been asked then, the purpose of attending this great and good university, I would have instantly replied: "to gain knowledge," and having said so, regarded my questioner as a man hardly in tune with the melodious times.

Hearing the question now, I can only offer to buy the well-meaning person a beer or deliver him a blank look as though he might have asked me the quickest way to Mars; for in point of fact, there is no quick way to Mars—much less at this point a slow one—and the path to knowledge, now a fantastic freeway complete with endless catalogs, numbers and advisors, is equally arduous, equally lengthy and equally vague.

For those few who believe after all, they have arrived when complete with cap, key and degree, they step off the assembly line of dear-old-something-or other, finished and polished products of the diploma factory, I have a question. If you HAVE arrived, pray tell me, where, exactly, in hell are you?

For if KNOWLEDGE, as MARS, can be regarded by some as the last stop on the long, blue line, then the quiz-weary traveller might well find himsellf in the same probable position as the first man to land upon the angry, red planet, who once alighting from his magnificent craft and setting foot upon a patch of purple earth, wonders what in blue blazes it has all been about.

This remains merely a moot query for many, those button down legions who once having been handed the sheep-skin ticket, are readily taken abroad by any one of a host of Generals—Electric, Foods, Mills, Motors . . . Any future reading by them will in all probability take place within the sacroscanct pages of "Reader's Digest," and "TV Guide."

In the learning process, though—process being the ultimate reality if we are to believe Whitehead—similarly troubling questions arise, these not so much concerned with destinction as with means of conveyance, the modes of intellectual transport.

In my own case, hardly a unique one, I came to find myself in a whirl of grades, gold keys and leaden thoughts; and on one night—stopped and turned to see the way I had come. It was not a pleasant view by any standards, and I vowed if I could not alter the scenery, I would at least change course and take a different road and . . .

"I took the one less travelled by,
And that has made all the difference."

The major in business administration—it could just as well be chemistry, accounting or a half dozen others—is told by all interested parties that he should "take" as many courses as possible in the Liberal Arts College, for these, the neatly groomed man from GE tells him, will make him an invaluable member of "the team" whatever that is. Indeed, the oft repeated slogan or one of its variants may be found in any issue of a score or more of magazines. "Dupont Needs Men Who Can Appreciate a Flower." "Protons and Poetry Go Hand in Hand at Container Corporation of America."

The prospective graduate is delighted to hear this, but after a detailed examination of time remaining, courses required, and courses needed, he finds he has room for only one course in music appreciation and another in archealogy; and though he may be genuinely hungering for more, it is not in the IBM cards that it should happen. Time is running out, as is the bank balance. GM just won't wait.

Course and quiz, lecture to library and back again. Hear it; write it; learn it; feed it back. This is the way the student goes, not with a bang, with a ballpoint.

As a further aid, there remains the so called "crip courses," as a means of filling empty class hours. If "crip" originates from "cripple" we may expect those pursuing this path of slack jawed ease to go lame as the word itself donates; or if the word springs from "crib," they have only cheated themselves.

But it is time, or rather Time in the more chronological, frighteningly urgent sense that compels many to pursue such a course of expediency; for there is the problem of quality points to be raised, the spectre of parental disapproval or censure—that car may have to be sent home, the allowance trimmed—not to mention the all-seeing eye of industry, suddenly gone myopic, being able to perceive only the mumbo jumbo of grades, but totally blind to intellectual guts.

The same, dapper gentleman from GE who insisted on "young men who are well rounded" will more often than not take the square with the pretty average, the clean shirt, the right tie, the right collar and the right degree.

The game continues though, and to some less cowed or, as Mr. Reiseman might term them, more "inner directed" individuals, it is not a game at all, but instead, a very serious yet exciting way of finding out the nature of things, becoming aware of what it means to be Man and alive in the world — to be part of all Men who have ever lived and at the same time to be uniquely themselves in a society that fiercely threatens such behavior — and to discover a part of life that did not exist for them in the spanking new pastel classrooms of Lovelyville High, this year having added to its curriculum such puerile pearls as Life Adjustment and Driver Education.

To these few, then, in love with the shape and sound and feel of ideas, go the ultimate reward, realized and known only by the self and not indicated on any grade transcript, roll book or dean's roster — that inner, magic awakening that comes as it can only come to the young and curious in a great blinding flash and a sweet sense of the delicious joy of trodding that path "where thoughts smell in the rain."

Though I surely wish it were otherwise, I will carry my hundred counties to the grave with me, and I trust they will not mind having made the journey, though I rather suspect they are finding their living quarters a bit cramped these days, the grey space alloted to them growing smaller and smaller; for I have long since given up the deadly game of daily ingesting the bowlful of jellied jargon and encyclopediac mush that the bright eyed communicators would have me swallow much as a baby gums his Pablum.

I have long since ceased to regard the textbood as holy writ or the teacher as an infallible Moses who with chalk in hand, tenure in tow, will lead one from the wilderness; for in the process whereof I speak, I have come to see that if one must live by facts alone, disregarding or blind to the vital truths that breathe into these facts that fresh scent of new life they so lack in themselves, it were as though he had never made the journey at all but come to find himself along with a host of others, pen and pencil poised as weapons, notebook in hand as shield, eyes and ears to the rote ready

" . . . on a darkling plain
Swept with confused alarums of struggle and flight
Where ignorant armies clash by night."

Wade Wellman

Fascism Due To Stage Comeback

(Editor's Note: This is the first in a three-part series, written by Wade Wellman, on "The Quintessence of Fascism." It is the view of Mr. Wellman that Facism is not dead and may bloom again in Europe.

(Mr. Wellman does not agree with those who claim that Fascism is as undemocratic as Communism. He feels Facism falls midway between democracy and Communism. In Wellman's view democracy has failed, and Fascist "rationalism" offers a better form of government.)

This year, as western Europe moves rapidly toward political integration, the question of its government principles has been strangely neglected. Relatively few commentators have wondered what form of government will dominate it, but the existing speculations range anywhere from Willy Brandt Socialism to Mussolini Fascism. For my own part, I emphatically hope that a Fascist government will bind together the new Europe, and I can see some chance — perhaps a 40% chance — that this will develop. In light of the recent publicity given to such men as Sir Oswald Mosley, we might do well to consider the real nature of the Fascist system, and the first thing to realize is that the Fascism of Mussolini was not the same thing as the National Socialism of Hitler.

Every great political system, democracy excepted, is a social system as well, and necessarily hinges on a rather abstract philosophy which must be comprehended before the concrete social-political format can become intelligible. I exclude democracy because it depends almost entirely upon the theory that "all men are created equal," whereas, in plain fact, all men are created inequal, and the differences extend not only from person to person but from race to race, and nation to nation. The purpose of any social-political system should be to help everyone develop his potential to the limit of capacity, fulfilling his talents both as an individual and as a member of the community, so that all the people of the nation, working collectively, can produce the maximum in spiritual attainment (such as the fine arts) and material endeavor (such as science). And this collective expression of the people, working in a regimented social structure, is the keystone of what Fascist thinkers call the nation-state.

I said that every political system should work for this; regrettably, the only one that ever tried it in modern times was the Fascist system, as devised by Mussolini and a few of his countrymen. And this system aroused such powerful animosity in the English-speaking world that for forty years the term "Fascist" has been a synonym for S.O.B., although my personal observations tend to show that no one has ever witnessed the operations of a Fascist state without feeling some admiration, however reluctant.

Believers in democracy have often claimed that Fascism lies on the far right and Communism on the far left, while faithful democracy straddles the fence between them. A more realistic appraisal, I believe, would place democracy on the far right and Communism on the extreme left, with Fascism about halfway between. The Fascist system made a great many changes in the liberal-democratic state, but most of these were new ideas, not harkbacks to earlier abandoned methods. The only retrogression, if I may word it so, was a limitation on personal freedom; the major changes, such as the corporate system, were innovations which came closer to the Socialist theory of national ownership than to the old plutocratic concept of ownership by Jay Gould or J. Pierpont Morgan. I speak in the past tense, but this is no suggestion on my part that Fascism is a dead system. It may yet stage a comeback in the new Europe now being built by France and Germany, although it will have to do so with a different name, such as "controlled capitalism."

Consider first the spiritual principles behind Fascism. Humanity suffers from the perpetual struggle for existence, and this creates a twofold plight: the collective problem of man pitted against hostile nature, and the individual difficulty of every person surrounded by a social environment which is inimical to his personal advancement. This theory of society as hostile to the individual is an existentialist belief and occurs in the writings of Jean-Paul Sartre, but there is nothing unchristian about it, though Sartre elsewhere shows an almost psychotic infatuation with pornography. This double predicament, with the natural environment against mankind and the human environment against the individual, is due to the universal struggle for existence, and here I assume that everyone recognizes the struggle as a permanent condition of the world. I will not try to rebut the Communists, who believe that they can eventually bring the struggle for existence to a halt.

Here is one of the cardinal distinctions between Communism and Fascism. The Communist holds that the struggle for existence can ultimately be terminated, after a long period of forceful nationalization and dictatorship of the proletariat. The Fascist realizes that this struggle is inherent in every circumstance in which life attempts to maintain itself. Instead of working fanatically for an impossible goal, the Fascist accepts the struggle as inevitable and seeks not to eliminate it but to ease the burden of it. On the practical level, Facism attempts to organize society in such a way that mankind can work collectively in the struggle against nature, thus reducing the pain and misery of our assembled human experience. And secondly, Facism on the philosophical level teaches us the virtue of cooperation and inculcates a sense of duty to our fellow citizens. In this way the second problem, that of a person surrounded by hostile society, can be modified. As men we are trapped in a double predicament, and though we cannot escape the predicament (as Communism tries to do), we can look for ways to alleviate it, and this is the entire motivation of the Fascist system.

Rivalry Went Too Far . . .

To the Editor,

Sometimes the Carolina-Duke rivalry is carried a bit too far. Take for instance two Saturday nights ago at a Carolina fraternity party. There were a lot of invited Duke students present— Art Heyman, Billy Futrell, and many more. But there was ONE too many — He was constantly shooting off his mouth in celebation of Duke's wonderful victory over Wake Forest. He had the nerve or the drunken ability to babble on several occasions that "you either had to be an idiot, a nigger or a son of a B . . . . to go to Carolina. Well, Mark, we may be a student body full of idiots but for certain there is one son of a B . . . . at Duke.

Michael Discovers Times Have Changed

By PAUL COOLER

"This must be paradise!" shouted 14-year-old Michael Pappas.

This was Michael's (as he is popularly known) first reaction to America as the Greek steamship "Themistoclis" sailed into New York Harbor exploding with July Fourth fireworks in 1914.

He had $35 in his pocket and no passport.

He had left his home in Cyprus to follow the life of his grandfather — an "adventurer." On board the "Themistoclis" Michael found another Greek boy sitting on deck crying. Michael learned that because the boy had no passport, he was to be sent back to Syria, where the Turks would force him to fight against his own people.

Michael gave him his passport, and both boys entered the United States without any questioning or trouble.

Today Michael runs Michael's Grill on Henderson Street across from the post office in Chapel Hill. And, he says, "Times have changed. One time you could sell beer all day and all night and on Sunday. Today it is more strict."

After arriving in the United States, Michael put himself through grade school and high school in Pittsburgh, Pa. At the same time, he worked in a bank and in a department store as an interpreter.

During World War II, Michael served as a detective for the Pennsylvania Railroad. "During that time I had to shoot one person," he said. "A man was stealing supplies from a military train. But I only hit him in the leg."

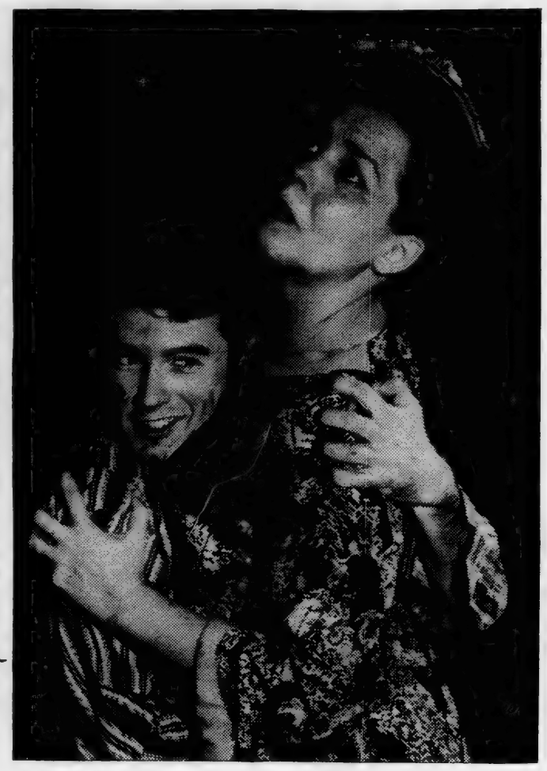
After the war, Michael returned to Cyprus. When he came back to the United States this time, he brought a wife with him.

He stayed in New York and opened "The Coffee Pot," a restaurant on Eighth Avenue and 45th Street. But he had to give up "The Coffee Pot" when his doctor told him he must find a different climate for his health.

Chapel Hill then became his home. In 1946 he opened the University Restaurant ~~where Harry's~~ is today. But Michael became homesick and returned to his home in Cyprus again.

However, Michael liked Chapel Hill so much, he returned to the United States in a short time.

He built a restaurant on Henderson Street, which was just a narrow dirt road with weeds all around at the time. "I had to get them to trim up a big tree on Franklin Street so people could see the place," he says.



When his brother died in 1950, Michael took over Michael's Grill alone and has been running it ever since.

Michael reads at least one paper a day and watches television. "And," he says, "I try to be a better citizen."

Visiting Prof To Teach Two Philosophies

Professor Stephan Korner, Mahlon Jordan Distinguished Visiting Professor of Philosophy for the Spring term, 1963, will teach Modern Philosophy and Philosophy of the Natural Sciences.

Professor Korner, who is chairman of the Department of Philosophy at the University of Bristol, England, holds the J. D. degree from Charles University, Prague and a Ph.D. from Cambridge University, England.

He was Visiting Professor of Philosophy at Brown University in 1957 and at Yale University in 1960. In addition to numerous articles in professional journals and contributions to collaborative works, mostly on topics in epistemology, philosophy of logic and mathematics, and the philosophy of science, Professor Korner is the author of the following books: "Conceptual Thinking"; "Kant"; "Philosophy of Mathematics;" and "Observation and Interpretation."

Restraint Is Advocated By Ken Byerly

"An editorial writer who thunders constantly lets his paper become a surly, snarling thing that antagonizes people and can hurt rather than help a cause," said Associate Professor of Journalism Kenneth Byerly of UNC.

In an article appearing in a recent issue of "Grass Roots," a magazine published quarterly by the International Conference of Weekly Newspapers Editors, Prof. Byerly stated that an editor should be interested in results, not in proving how smart he is.

In his article entitled "Some of the Best Editorials . . ." Byerly pointed out that an editor who seeks to solve a problem by going directly to the source of the trouble often finds the solution in a more effective manner than the editor who writes a fiery editorial.

Prof. Byerly is widely known for his textbook, "Community Journalism" which is used throughout the United States.

Computation Center Hosts

The Computation Center of the University of North Carolina will host a seminar on heuristic programming and the use of Information Processing Language on November 30.

The seminar, which will begin at 2:00 in Carroll Hall will be sponsored by the Central Carolina Chapter of the Association for Computing Machinery.

The program will include: a lecture entitled "Survey and Historical Discussion of Heuristic Programming," a general discussion of Information Processing Languages, and a demonstration at the computation center.

Tentative speakers for the event are Dr. John W. Carr, III, Mathematics Department; Dr. Tom Donnelly, Computation Center; Mr. Robert Des Jardins, School of Business Administration; Mr. Bruce Briggs, Computation Center; and Mr. Peter Brown, Computation Center. All are Carolina faculty members.

TV Teaching Debated By Educators

Should teachers be taught by television?

A three-year experiment at San Jose State College in San Jose, Calif. has shown that observation of high school classes by television is an "effective" method of instructing student teachers.

The high school observed is on the campus at San Jose State and is directly affiliated with the College. Student teachers can watch classes being taught there on televisions in their own classrooms.

This method cuts down by 50 per cent "in-person" observation by student teachers.

This program "is very good as a means of instruction," says Dr. Donald G. Tarbet of the UNC School of Education. It shows "a lot of promise."

There are no plans to start a similar program here, however. "The big problem is money," Dr. Tarbet said. Setting up a television connection with classrooms in Chapel Hill High School would be "rather expensive."

A program similar to the television idea is used here where model high school classes are taught in Peabody Hall, and education students view them through a one-way screen.

Television is used now at UNC for dental and medical students, Dr. Tarbet said.

Vance Article Published In Look Mag

Rupert B. Vance, Kenan Professor of sociology and anthropology at the University of North Carolina, analyzes the poverty-stricken Southern Appalachian area of the United States in the December 4th issue of "Look" magazine.

Prof. Vance's views are included in an article entitled "Portrait of an Under-developed Country." The article treats the "coal-rich" region comprised by the seven-state Southern Appalachian area, the inhabitants of this region, and the character and future of the dwellers who are faced with a stagnating coal market.

The article quotes Dr. Vance on the effect of the area on young nations: "The implications of the richest nation in the world to eliminate or alleviate (Appalachia's) poverty within three decades are not likely to be overlooked by those underdeveloped nations of the world seeking to solve their own problems of poverty under conditions far less advantageous."

Dr. Vance is contributor to a newly-published book entitled "The Southern Appalachian Region: A Survey," published by the University of Kentucky Press in 1962. He is the author of Chapter I in this book, a chapter entitled "The Appalachian as a Problem Area." He also contributed the book's final chapter which concerns the area as a challenge to the nation.

In connection with his work on this book, Dr. Vance has traveled extensively throughout the Southern Appalachian area and is still actively engaged in studies of this region.

A member of the UNC faculty since 1928, Dr. Vance's research areas and teaching specialties are in population ecology and social structure theory. He received a B. A. degree from Henderson State Teachers College, an M.A. from Vanderbilt University, and a Ph.D. from UNC.

Bell Tower Completes 31 Years As Campus Chimer

Externally the simple tower, crowned by a spire, and framed by box shrubbery, remained the same. But the interior reflects a gradual change as it assimilates mementos of those associated with it. A half a check, W. C.'s Alma Mater, a steamship schedule, and an empty box of Sucrets encroach upon the cob-webbed privacy of the spiders. Other remnants can be found among the yellowed pages of well-used music books. A letter postmarked in 1931, a note requesting a memoriam song to a deceased dog. And scattered around all of these things are bits of glass and ashes ground into the very cracks in the floor. This is Bell Tower—31 years old this week.

The Bells made their debut on November 27, 1931, as the leather-covered clapper broke their silence and "The Bells of St. Mary's" resounded through the Hill. Since that first day, the buildings flanking the tower have returned the echo of many songs ranging from "Happy Birthday" to the English Set Chimes.

It is often thought that the nightly concerts are automatic, but Master Bellringer Jackson Hill and assistant Bill Ficker are primarily responsible for the sunset serenades. The bells on which they take their nightly workouts are stationary, and arranged so that they may be struck by a leather-covered clapper controlled by a keyboard in the terrace room.

But the mechanisms for pealing the quarter hours and for striking the hours are automatic and entirely separate from the manual console.

Any number of tunes are possible if they are transposed within the realm of the three-day, twelve bell arrangement. Jackson plays many songs by ear and can transpose piano and organ music to tunes suitable for the bells.

Anyone with a knowledge of piano can attain the impressive title of Master Bellringer by applying to the Music Department where the faculty will select the Master. Co-eds, this includes you, too, if you think you can handle a 14,300-pound set of bells.

Still curious about the many aspects of the Bell Tower? Then listen for the evening peals, the signal that visiting hours are in progress, and go explore the tower that holds the memories of 31 years.

Frosh Talent Abundant This Year

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Last January 17, a basketball prodigy retired to the bench from his final freshman game. Billy Cunningham's eligibility had run its course, and with his departure also went all frosh hopes for an undefeated season.

Undefeated in ten games with Cunningham, the Tar Babies slumped to a 2-4 record without him and finished at a comparatively so-so 12-4 pace.

Nevertheless, that team was thought by many to be one of UNC's finest freshman groups—perhaps its best.

With this thought in mind, it would seem hard, if not impossible for Coach Ken Rosemond to come up with another crop even remotely approaching that of last year.

Has he done it? Let Rosemond explain it.

"This is potentially the best freshman team we've had here since 1955-56. We may not have the record that last year's team had but we will definitely be a better group, fundamentally.

"We have no Cunningham, of course, but there is depth on this club far superior to last season. I've got eight boys of equal ability who will all see a lot of action.

"With this setup, we can substitute freely without any appreciable weakness. We could not do this very much last year."

The eight boys on whom Rosemond is counting heavily have come to Chapel Hill in all shapes and all sizes.

Tallest of them all is Bob Bennett, a 6-8, 190-pounder from Mount Lebanon, Pa. Bennett, a lefthander, was all-state his final two years in high school and was one of Pennsylvania's best preppers last season.

"This kid has exceptional speed for such a big boy," says Rosemond on his probable starting center. "He also has a deadly outside jumper to go along with his fine play underneath."

Rebounding chores are in the hands of Bennett and another out-of-state boy, Mark Mirken. Mirken, a 6-6 strong boy out of Sheepshead Bay High School in Brooklyn, weighs 210 and shows it with his board work.

Mirken, who closely resembles varsity forward Charlie Shaffer, was all-city in New York and an All-American last year.

Rosemond attests to the big forward's ability under the backboard. "Mirkin has the potential to be the finest rebounder this conference has ever seen."

Bill Harrison, Earl Johnson and Jimmy Smithwick round out Rosemond's forecourt crew.

Harrison, a 6-3, 180 - pounder, played his prep school ball at both Rocky Mount and Virginia Episcopal School. In his junior year at Rocky Mount, he was all-conference, and last year the big forward captained his Virginia prep school team.

Harrison is a big, strong kid, whose biggest asset, according to Rosemond, is his defensive ability.

Johnson, who won all-state honors in both basketball and football while at Needham Broughton High in Raleigh, packs 205 pounds on a 6-5 frame. He is another exceptionally strong rebounder.

Smithwick, a Morehead City graduate, is 6-4 and 190.

"An aggressive ballplayer with a fine outside shot," says Rosemond.

Speed is a byword of the freshman team this year and nowhere is it more apparent than in the backcourt.

Ray Hassell, the third Hassell cousin to play collegiate basketball, will likely start with his running mate being chosen from the twosome of Jimmy Moore and Johnny Yokley.

Hassell, whose cousin Pud played on Carolina's fine freshman squad last year, is a 5-11, 165-pound guard from Beaufort.

Twice all-conference in basketball and football, Hassell earned all-state honors as well as an All-American citation in basketball last season.

"I think this kid is the best Hassell yet," says Coach Rosemond. (Note: Hassell's other cousin, Butch, is a first string guard on the Wake Forest varsity this year.)

The Tar Baby coach went on. "Ray played on three state championship teams and won 91 straight games in high school. He's got that winning habit and he's a great competitor."

Moore, an all-state guard at New Hanover High School in Wilmington, also comes in for a great deal of praise from his coach.

"Jimmy was a good leader at Wilmington and we hope he continues this fine ability here. A very fast boy . . . I would say he is the best percentage shooter on our club."

Yokely rounds out the top eight. A two-time all-conference player from Mount Airy, this 6-0, 165-pound speed-merchant led his team to 50 straight wins and two state titles.

Rosemond appraises Yokley as a fundamentally sound ball player with a sharp knack for defense.

The freshman roster lists two more forwards and three additional guards.

Charlie Phillips, last year's Chapel Hill High School star and Dave Rowe from Mount Airy are the forwards while Jim Archer, Pilot Mountain, Carl Evans, Berea, Ky., and Mike Iannarella, Sharon Hill, Pa., hold forth in the backcourt.

"In addition to our good depth this year, I would have to term the team speed on this club great," says Rosemond.

"We are very fast and we will run and fast break whenever possible. As I said before, the record may not be outstanding but this team, if it matures quickly and plays up to its potential, could be my best ever."

The freshman have a 16-game schedule lined up, including a three-game set with bitter rival Duke.

The Tar Babies open up against always-tough Wilmington College this Saturday night at six in Woollen Gym. The contest will be a preliminary to the UNC-Georgia clash.

Three Prep Star Wrestlers Head Frosh Grapple Crew

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Three much-heralded high school wrestlers head the 1962-63 version of the UNC freshman wrestling team announced yesterday.

Bill Cook, who last year was North Carolina's top schoolboy wrestler at the 133-pound level, this year will fight in the 147-pound division.

Cook, who won the state championship last year while at Boone, is joined on this year's grapple squad by a Virginia 123-pound state champ runner-up, Paul Wellstone.

Wellstone, from Arlington, remains at his 123-pound level this season.

Jack Robinson, a 177-pounder is the third outstanding fighter recruited for Coach Joe Gratto's frosh squad.

Robinson wrestled last year at Mepham High School in Merrick, L. I., N. Y.

Mike Stallings, from Huntersville, will perform in the 130-pound division while Glenn Kerns, another North Carolina boy will be Gratto's 137-pound man. Kerns is from Charlotte.

Jeff Adams, a Nashville, Tenn. product, will fight in the 157-pound division with Alex Shaw competing in the 167-pound division. Shaw is from Jacksonville.

Jerry Trachtenberg, a heavyweight from Goldsboro who was a runner-up in the state championships last year was scheduled to go in that division but came up with a bad knee.

In his place will be Nick Sears, an Atlanta, Ga. boy.

The freshmen, who open the season Saturday at three on the Woollen Gym floor, are in tremendously capable hands this season.

Coach Gratto is a former 157-pound national champion and three times won the Eastern Championship while at Lehigh.

Carolina Swimmers Open Against VMI

By LOTS BIRINYI

Carolina's Blue Dolphins host the swimmers of VMI in the season's opener for both teams Saturday at four in the UNC pool.

Last year when these teams met in the opener, VMI caught UNC off guard by being in peak condition and almost upset the Tar Heels.

Coach Pat Earey says that this year's team is coming along especially well but is sorely lacking a butterfly specialist and a breaststroker.

Earey laments that his team will be hampered in its chance for a successful season unless he can get his men in these two divisions to do better than they have done to date.

Carolina is especially strong in the freestyle and backstroke.

The Dolphins' strongest competition outside the conference will be Princeton, Navy, Florida, and Florida State.

In the ACC, Maryland is the top choice with State College and Carolina as the top title contenders.

For the Saturday opener, Earey plans to go with Bob Birkenstock and Ernie Care as his divers with All-American Thompson Mann and Jim Huffman at the backstroke positions.

Barry King and Frank Lea will swim the medley, Pete Swift and Tate Kemper hold forth in the breaststroke, Howard Cone and Dick Woodrow are the sprinters and Thad Adams, Mike Bissell and heralded sophomore Harrison Merrill will swim the distance races.

Earey has for his relay men, Scott Smiley, Barry Roberts, Harry Schiffman and Russell Redding.

Captain Willie Bloom can fill in anywhere and will be a definite asset, says Earey.

The UNC coach singled out Mann, Merrill, Woodrow and King as individuals on whom he is counting heavily this year.

Carolina is looking forward to the meets with Princeton and Navy this year but will especially aim to reach peak form for the all-important conference races.

Initial Round Mural Games Are Lopsided

Lop-sided victories and forfeits dominated Wednesday's first round of the Grail-Mural basketball tournament.

Only four of the 24 opening day winners hit 40 points or better. Phi Delta Theta topped the Everett Owls, 40-29, the DKE Blues rolled over the Geologists, 40-19, the Navy Bowlines defeated the Avery Purple, 40-19, and the History Jocks stomped the Beta Squids, 41-14.

The biggest romp of the day was a 37-4 victory by the Sigma Nu Red team over Delta Sig No. 4.

Ehringhaus, the Navy Pilots, DKE White, Old West Gamblers and the Aycock Aardvarks all took forfeit victories, 1-0.

Other scores:

Chi Psi Gold 28, Delta Sig No. three 14.
Craige B-6 25, Alexander Poobahs 17.
Sigma Nu White 23, Parker Pound 11.
Avery Black 23, Parker Pack 18.
Craige B-1 35, Joyner Straps 7.
Old East 31, Chi Psi White 12.
Joyner Jocks 29, Phi Delta Theta 18.
Winston Offs 18, Zeta Psi 17.
DU Dos 31, KA Alphas 15.
Air Force 32, Avery Orange 5.
TEP Cyclones 19, AK Psi 17.
PiKA 16, Phi Delta Theta No. Five 6.
Law Radicals 20, Alexander Esquires 16.
Law Barrows 22, Everett Grossmen 8.

Collegiate Basketball Debuts With Full Program Saturday

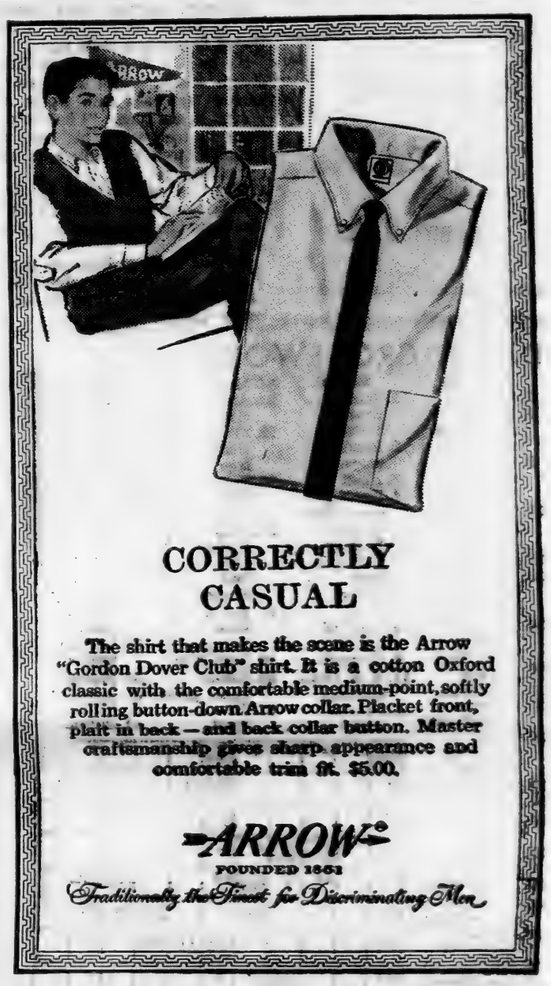
(UPI)—The 1962-63 college basketball season opens modestly with a small schedule of games Friday night and then roars into full-speed action Saturday with a full program including appearances by nine of the 11 top-ranked teams in the country.

Illinois, ranked No. 13 nationally, will be the highest-rated team to play Friday when it opens the season at home against Butler.

The Illini, with several promising newcomers added to a solid nucleus of returning veterans that includes three of the Big Ten's top 12 scorers of last season, are like other Big Ten teams this year—their championship hopes are much higher now that "player of the year" Jerry Lucas has been graduated from Ohio State.

The opening weeks of the cage season always are highlighted by intersectional games, and Friday is no exception with such games as Oregon-Brigham Young, UCLA-Denver, Georgia Tech-Rice on tap. Other top games include Washington State-Colorado St. U., Miami (Fla.)-Florida, and Southern California-Santa Clara.

That just sets the stage for Saturday when the Cincinnati Bearcats, surprise winners of the NCAA championship for the past two years, lead almost all of the most-touted teams into action.



Cincinnati, rated the No. 1 team in the country by the UPI board of coaches in its annual pre-season rankings, plays host to De Pauw Ind. and is expected to have little trouble in running its carry-over winning streak to 19 games. The Bearcats have lost 6-9 rebound star Paul Hogue through graduation, but have back stars Tom Thacker, Tony Yates, and Ron Bonham, plus a new 6-10 center, Ron Krick.

Second-ranked Duke, led by star center Art Heyman, plays host to Davidson; third-ranked Kentucky, with All-America candidate Cotton Nash, entertains Virginia Tech; West Virginia (No. 4), and its star, Rod Thorn, are at home against The Citadel.

Soccer Match Slated Today

A soccer scrimmage, the first of a weekly series, will be played at 3:45 p.m. today on Fetzer Field.

The UNC varsity's sophomores and juniors will team up with the freshman team and play the seniors and grad students. The varsity-grad contests will be played each Friday for the remainder of the year.

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

The Atlantic Coast Conference has been noted for its basketball powerhouses since the league's formation in 1953. Each season one of the ACC's teams makes its way into national prominence—either during the season or in the NCAA playoffs.

The 1962-63 season should be no exception. Duke's Blue Devils have been rated as high as second in the nation in pre-season polls. A pair of All-America candidates and two near-7-footers should keep the Methodists in the top ten all year.

But the other conference coaches are conceding nothing to Vic Bubas and his talented basketeers.

One of these is UNC's Dean Smith who will be counting heavily on sophomores to restore Carolina to national prominence. The Tar Heels finished 8-9 last year—the worst won-loss record for a UNC team since the ACC teams left the Southern Conference.

But returnees Larry Brown, Yogi Poteet, Charlie Shaffer, Mike Cooke and Bryan McSweeney—plus sophs Billy Cunningham, Bill Galantai, Ray Respess, Bill Brown and Bill Taylor give Coach Smith a number of reasons to smile.

Cunningham has the potential to be one of the top sophomore performers in the nation. If he plays as well as he did as a frosh, then the Tar Heels could be hard to handle.

But, the team's success doesn't depend on one man's showing. Carolina should have a well-balanced scoring attack. The starters—Brown, Poteet, Cunningham, Shaffer and Respess are all capable of averaging in double figures.

Around the conference Clemson and Wake Forest are expected to join Duke and Carolina in the first division, but wacky things have happened in the past. N.C. State and Maryland also have to be considered first-division possibilities.

Clemson's pre-season hopes are based mainly on the team's strong finish in the ACC tournament last year. The Tigers upset State and Duke before bowing to Wake Forest in the finals. Choppy Patterson, All-Conference in 1960 and 1961, has returned to the hardwood after an automobile accident which kept him out last year. Joining him will be eight seasoned juniors led by Jim Brennan an Nick Milasnovich. New Tiger Coach Bobby Roberts also has three beefy junior centers in Don Mahaffey, Woody Morgan and Manning Privette. If these juniors come through like they did in the tournament, Clemson could be Duke's toughest competitor.

Bones McKinney is once more expecting big things from his Wake Forest boys, the defending ACC champs. But the loss of Len Chappell and Billy Packer will make it hard for the Deacons to come anywhere near their third-place ranking nationally last year.

Big Bob Woollard, along with Frank Christie and Dave Wiedeman are the big guns in the Baptist attack. The Deacs won't be weak, but winning without Chappell may not be easy.

Everett Case, N.C. State's veteran coach, has a new right arm in his assistant, Press Maravich. Maravich came to Raleigh after guiding his young Clemson team so well last year.

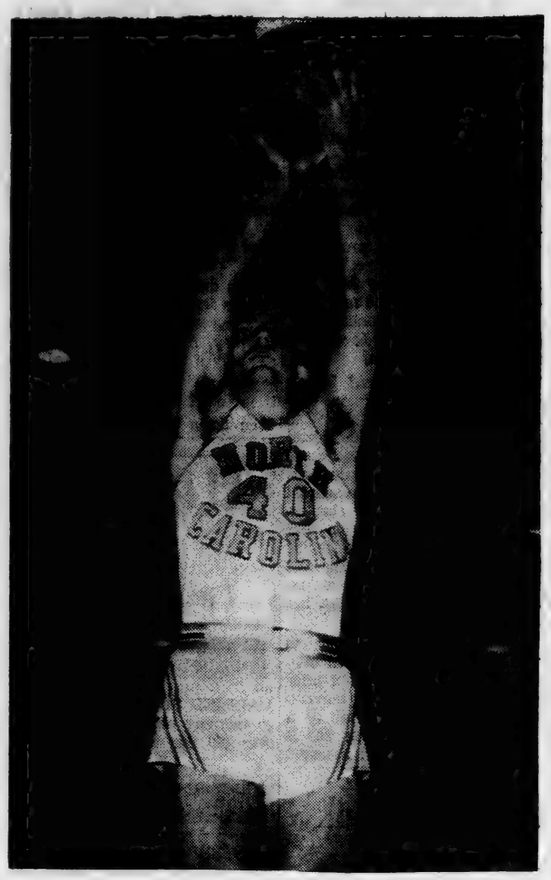
Case has his share of problems, though. John Punger, his best rebounder, quit school. State's success hinges on its center position. Russ Marvel has graduated and either Ron Gossell or John Key will have to fill his shoes.

Ken Rohloff and Jon Speaks, two of the top guards in the conference could give the Pack a strong scoring attack, though. Pete Auksel and Jim Whitfield round out Case's starting team.

Maryland will be counting on Jerry Greenspan, last year's top scorer. Other lettermen for Coach Bud Millikan are Connie Carpenter, Joe Barton, Scott Ferguson and Bob Eicher.

The Terps emphasize ball control and have given other ACC teams many headaches in the past. They can't be counted out of the picture.

Weak sisters should be South Carolina and Virginia. The Gamecocks were hit hard by graduation, but still have eight lettermen back. The best of these is Ronnie Collins, a forward, and Scotti Ward, a sharp-shooting guard.



Virginia has seven lettermen returning, but the loss of high-scorer Tony Laquintano will hurt Coach Bill McCann's team. Forwards Chip Conner and Gene Engel carry the Cavalier hopes of getting out of the league cellar.

But the other seven will have to take a back seat to Duke as pre-season favorite. Both Art Heyman and Jeff Mullins are All-American hopefuls. Tall centers Jay Buckley and Hack Tison add to the rebounding strength. Bob Jamieson, Scott Williamson, Ray Cox, Buzzy Harrison, Fred Schmidt and Bill Ulrich—all lettermen—will add to the power. And Bubas can count on help from his sophs, Tison, Ron Herbster, Brent Kitching and Ted Mann.

With all seven teams gunning for the Devils anything can happen and it likely will.

Sleeper Among ACC Stars

Yogi Poteet: Backcourt Ace

Yogi Poteet

By BOB QUINCY

Most folks don't even know his name, but the sleeper among the offensive stars of the Atlantic Coast Conference is a Yogi.

Yogi Poteet, that is.

Actually, the dark-haired native of Hendersonville, N. C., was named George by his parents. George, now Yogi, will be a starter for the Tar Heels of North Carolina against Georgia here Saturday night at 8 p.m.

How did Yogi acquire his nickname?

The way the swift young man plays defense it could be linked to the practice of yoga—which is a form of mental discipline directed at one object. Mr. Poteet can glue himself to his foe.

Yogi actually came by his name from a childhood tag associated with Yogi Berra, the Yankee baseballer. Both are capable of the home run play in the clutch.

Dean Smith, the Tar Heels hardwood coach, believes Poteet will be one of the league's most prolific scorers.

"Yogi has a remarkable touch," observed Dean. "He gets away a nice, soft jumper and is especially good at hitting from difficult angles."

In early practice sessions, Poteet, who is only 5-11 but conditioned like a middleweight set for a 15-round bout, has ripped the nets consistently.

"In our backcourt we are fortunate to have Yogi and Larry Brown," said Smith. "Each is a scorer and each can move like a scared rabbit. Larry is my quarterback. Yogi is my defensive ace. They will co-captain the squad."

While the Tar Heels are experienced at guard, it is likely they will utilize two sophomores in the front court. Ray Respess of Pantego, N. C., will be at one forward. The human kangaroo, Billy Cunningham, is slated for the pivot.

Rounding out the first five is Charlie Shaffer, a Chapel Hillian who has intense desire and a knack for placing the ball in the hoop.

"We lack height," admits Coach Smith, "but the kids are fine ball handlers and shoot well. We'll just have to battle a little harder for the boards."

After the opener with Georgia, the Tar Heels face their first ACC foe in upstart Clemson on Dec. 5 at Woollen Gym.

Major League Baseballers To Play One All-Star Game

NEW YORK (UPI) — An agreement that the major leagues will go back to holding only one All-Star baseball game each season has been reached, it was learned Thursday night on the eve of the opening of the major league meetings here.

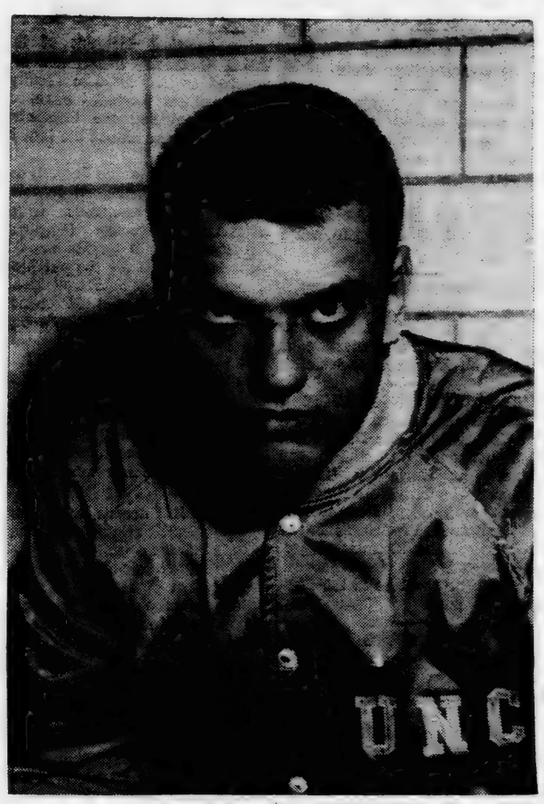
Player representatives of the major league teams wound up two days of meetings Thursday afternoon. The club owners open their annual winter conclave Friday.

There was no official announcement of what transpired at the players' meeting. But it was learned that the agreement to play only one All-Star game each year has virtually been signed, sealed and delivered.

Since 1959 there have been two All-Star games each year. The players have been more anxious to continue that situation than the owners, because the men in uniform wanted the second-game receipts for their pension fund.

However, it is understood that in return for passing up this financial windfall, the players will receive from the owners several other considerations. This could take several forms — an increase in the percentage of World Series receipts that goes into the player pool, a boost in the minimum major league salary from the present $7,000, and certain other fringe financial benefits.

The players also concentrated in their meeting on schedule difficulties, it was understood.



Bryan McSweeney Returns To Action

Bryan McSweeney, who was in contention for a starting position on the North Carolina basketball squad before being injured, returned for workouts this week but quite obviously favors an ankle which has been in a cast for five weeks. He isn't counted on for the next month—and the 6-5 junior will be missed for his scoring and rebounding power.

UNC Wrestlers Open Season Against W & L Saturday

JERRY CASE, UNC wrestler, went straight from the football field to the mats. He doubles as a football guard and wrestling heavyweight.

Carolina's varsity wrestling team makes its debut Saturday afternoon in Woollen Gym with a match against the Generals of Washington and Lee immediately following the 3 p.m. freshman meet with the W & L junior varsity.

Coach Sam Barnes, in his 13th year as varsity mentor, will be out to avenge last year's 20-6 defeat at the hands of the Generals.

Barnes reported that "the team looks very good so far, with lots of good material available especially in the lower weight classes." He added that since the team is better balanced than last year's squad it seems sure to better last year's 4-7-1 record, including a second place finish behind the Maryland powerhouse in the ACC tourney."

The 1962-63 schedule remains at 12 meets, although Appalachian was dropped to make way for East Carolina. He added that the highlights of the season will be a January 5th doubleheader at home against Pfeiffer and East Carolina and January 30th match with West Virginia as a preliminary to a varsity basketball game in Charleston, W. Va.

Senior Willis Johnson, a two-year letterman from Ashboro, N. C., and wrestler in the 147 class, is serving as acting captain this year.

Saturday's probable starting lineup:

123—Joel Fishman; 130 — John Moser; 137—Henry Foscue; 147—Willis Johnson; 157—Bill Woodall; 167—Elliott Dworin; 177 — Gene Record; Unlimited—Jerry Cabe.

This year's schedule: Dec. 10, Citadel (H); Dec. 13, Davidson (H); Jan. 5 Pfeiffer and East Carolina (H); Jan. 7, UVA (H); Jan. 12, N. C. State (A); Jan. 30, West Va. (A); Feb. 16, Duke (A); Feb. 19, VPI (A); Feb. 20, VMI (A); Feb. 23, Maryland (H).

BASKETBALL PEP RALLY

The first basketball pep rally will be held in Woollen Gym this afternoon at 5 o'clock. Head Cheerleader Hannis Latham urges Carolina students to attend the rally and give the basketball team pre-game support for Saturday's game against Georgia.

Coach Dean Smith's men will stage a scrimmage at the same time, so UNC students can see the players in action during the rally.

The Tar Heels will meet Georgia at 8 o'clock Saturday night after a preliminary contest between Wilmington Junior College and Coach Ken Rosemond's freshman team.

The first conference game for the Tar Heels will be Wednesday against Clemson.

BASKETBALL TICKETS

Basketball tickets for the Georgia-UNC game Saturday, and for the Clemson-UNC game next Wednesday can be purchased at the ticket office in Woollen Gym.

Students, faculty members and University employees should present their athletic pass cards in order to get tickets. Tickets are on a first-come, first-served basis for the first two games, both at home.

Chem Department Rated One Of Best

By MATT WEISMAN

The excellent facilities of the U.N.C. Chemistry department are matched by a first-class faculty. Both qualities combined have resulted in placing the Chemistry department here among the best in the nation.

Venable Hall is the largest departmental physical plant on campus. It houses numerous laboratories and classrooms. Industrial and governmental grants supplement State funds for the purchase of the most up-to-date equipment. A Nuclear Magnetic Resonance Spectrometer was last year's biggest purchase.

At the moment there are 19 full-time faculty members. The staff in addition to its teaching activities holds a large number of positions in scientific organizations. A large number of articles and texts attest to the scholarly work of the faculty.

With all its interests, the faculty does not omit devoting more than a full share of its time to the undergraduate students. Department Chairman H. D. Crockford stated that the faculty places a great deal of attention on the beginning courses. He said most undergraduate courses are taught by permanent faculty members. Lab instructors and graduate student fellows who are under the supervision of faculty members.

A.B. and B.S. degree programs are offered to the undergraduate. Four courses instead of three and a stronger emphasis on the number of required chemical courses differentiate the B.S. program from the A.B. program. A.B. candidates are largely pre-med students. Many B.S. majors go directly into industrial work, while others continue with advanced study, usually in schools such as Harvard, Yale, M.I.T., or the California Institute of Technology.

The undergraduate chemistry major, without neglecting work in related fields or studies essential to a broad education, spends much time in an intensive study of inorganic, analytical, organic, and physical or theoretical chemistry. He spends many hours in the laboratory in direct contact with the objects of his interest.

There are two major things which the Chemistry department strives to give its students: (1) a sound basic knowledge of the subject, and (2) ample opportunity to become technically competent in productive chemical work. For students with particular interest and ability there are "Superior Student Sections" in general organic and analytical chemistry. During the summer, many undergraduates are able to work with members of the faculty on research projects.

The aim of the graduate program, according to Chairman Crockford, is to provide well-rounded graduate training in the major divisions of chemistry, developing through research a capacity for critical and creative thinking.

Fall graduate enrollment is 82. These students come from a diversity of universities and colleges. All rank high on the national graduate aptitude tests. A large number of grants, scholarships and fellowships contribute to the quality of the graduate student body.

Since all work in chemistry relies on records left by others, the department has compiled an unusually fine and complete library.

In total, all "Venable Hall" graduates leave Chapel Hill well prepared in the field of their choice.

UP Forms Group To Air Complaints

By LOTS BIRINYI

The University Party has announced the formation of a "grievance committee" to meet in various residential districts and hold open sessions at which students may speak on problems affecting them.

The committee will consist of four permanent members and three additional members from the district in which the committee is eeting. The permanent members are Rex Savery, co-chairman and a member of the Men's Honor Council, Interdormitory Council, and president of Old West dorm; Marshall Bellovin, co-chairman in charge of conducting the meetings; Dee Johnson, social chairman of the Sophomore Class; and Bob Clawson, chairman of the Campus Affairs Committee.

The first meeting will be held in the social room of Ehringhaus dormitory at 9 p.m. Tuesday, Dec. 4. Joining the committee for this session will be Ford Rowan, president of the dormitory; Bruce Welch, president of the IDC; and Russell Perry, dormitory manager for the South Campus.

Mike Chanin, chairman of the UP, said, "In the past a student with a complaint had to go to the student government. Now we are making an attempt to bring student government to the students.

"The people on this committee are well-qualified both to answer questions and to deal with the problems involved.

"In order for this committee to work effectively it is necessary for the students to take advantage of the meetings. Therefore, I urge all students in Ehringhaus to come to the session Tuesday night."

STUDENTS

RALEIGH (UPI)—Students from outside North Carolina make up 17.3 per cent of enrollment at state institutions of higher learning.

WHEN SHE WAS ONLY 3

She Broke Up A Met Rehearsal . . .

By GORDON CLARK

Not many 3-year-olds can claim the distinction of breaking up a dress rehearsal at the Metropolitan Opera. Susie Cordon, a Chapel Hill native and one of North Carolina's best-known actresses at 22, did just that on her first visit to the theatre.

Miss Cordon, who completes her graduates studies in drama at UNC this year, is performing her most difficult role to date in The Carolina Playmakers production of "Tobacco Road" here Dec. 5 through 9. She will play Ada Lester, a role for which she must age 25 years, in the controversial stage hit that broke all records with its 7½ year Broadway run.

The daughter of retired Metropolitan Opera star Norman Cordon, she has appeared in "The Lost Colony" on Roanoke Island for the past two seasons where she played the female comic lead. She broke up the final rehearsal for the opera "Norma," she explained, when she yelled out her recognition of her father's singing voice. A long beard-piece had kept her from recognizing him earlier. Her mother promptly whisked her from the auditorium.

The striking actress hopes to break into television work in either New York or Washington after her graduation from the university. In addition to her work as a drama student and actress, she is also graduate costuming assistant for the Playmakers.

"This role in 'Tobacco Road' is different from other 'scenery chewing' parts I've played," Miss Cordon explained, "except that Ada dies violently. That's happened in three of the last four roles I've done!"

"Tobacco Road," based on Erskine Caldwell's best-selling novel, was banned in some areas across the country as deliberate obscenity when it was first presented. Miss Cordon doesn't go along with this. "People unfamiliar with conditions during the depression may not see its meaning clearly, or understand why certain things are in the play. Although the play is essentially a tragedy, it's filled with humor — often bitter, but sometimes outright. It's stark realism even down to the real dirt we'll have piled on the stage."

Among Miss Cordon's other roles are leads in UNC Sound and Fury musical productions of "Oh, Hellas!" and "Celestina." In addition to her performances in "The Lost Colony," she has played major roles in Carolina Playmaker productions of "The Beggar's Opera," "The Great Diamond Robbery" and "Dr. Faustus." Last year she received the Playmakers' coveted Master's Award for acting.

"Tobacco Road" will be presented nightly at 8:30 on Wed. through Sun., Dec. 5-9, at the Playmakers Theatre. There will also be a special matinee performance Sun., Dec. 9, at 2:30 p.m.

Reserved seats for the tragi-comedy became available to the public yesterday. Season ticket holders may reserve seats now. Reservations may be made today at the Playmakers business office (214 Abernethy Hall, 968-4468) and at Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $2.00 each.

Hilliard's Book Wins Recognition

A UNC professor's book has become a best-seller in its field. "Writing for Television and Radio", written by Dr. Robert L. Hilliard, has also been honored by Writer's Yearbook as being one of the ten writing "Books of the Year."

Dr. Hilliard is assistant professor of Radio, Television, and Motion Pictures, and director of radio at UNC. His book was published in September by Hastings House of New York.

The publisher reports that orders have come in from Bangkok, Stockholm, Rio de Janiero, Johannesburg, Amsterdam, London, Tokyo, Sydney and Warsaw despite the fact that the book was published after the beginning of the Fall semester.

Writer's Yearbook lauded Dr. Hilliard's book for "reading enjoyment, helpful reference, and direct examples of the writing art."

A review by Wallace M. Bradley, director of development at the Detroit Educational Television Foundation, says, "It's about time! Not since Wylie . . . have we had as complete a broadcast writing text as this one from Dr. Hilliard."

"Dr. Hilliard has come up with the first well-organized and usuable text in many years," said J. W. Warfield, director of Mass Communications Curriculum at the University of Pittsburgh.

If you have trouble saying it...

Say it with a Parker

If you're a little shy and have difficulty saying "I love you" or even "I like you very much"—say it with a Parker.

The new Parker Arrow makes a beautifully expressive gift and looks as if you paid a small fortune for it. It only costs $3.95, however, which should leave you with enough date money for an impressive presentation ceremony in romantic surroundings such as the second booth from the back in your local drugstore.

The new Parker Arrow comes in black, dark blue, light blue, light gray, and bright red, with a choice of four instantly replaceable solid 14K gold points. Gift-boxed with five free cartridges.

P. S. To girls: a Parker Arrow—besides being a very romantic gift—comes in one size (the right one), should last at least ten times longer than a scarf or a tie, and should bring in a harvest of correspondence you'll cherish the rest of your life.

Prosecution Closes Case In Fix Trial

Wagman Calls Self Only 'Middleman'

RALEIGH (UPI) — The state concluded its case Friday against two St. Louis men charged with bribing college basketball players to rig games.

The state finished its case with the testimony of an FBI agent who said he saw one of the defendants and was told the man was under indictment.

State witness Aaron (The Bagman) Wagman of New York City Thursday described himself as a middle man between a purported syndicate and two former N. C. State College basketball players.

Under a 43-count indictment are Dave Goldberg and Steve Lekometros of St. Louis who the state charges supplied the money that was filtered down to the cooperating players.

Wagman testified he received $4,000 through channels from Goldberg for payoffs for point-shaving in the Duke-N. C. State game of Jan. 7, 1961.

He said that when the game worked out satisfactorily for the "backers," he mailed $3,250 in a cartoon book to former State player Niewierowski and put the rest in his pocket as his share.

Niewierowski testified earlier on the stand that he turned over a portion of the money to another ex-State cager—Anton Muehlbauer.

Two other alleged syndicate members testified Thursday to their part in the ring.

Michael Stegal of New York said he attempted to influence a player at the University of Seattle and one at the University of Detroit with the backing of Bob Craw, another alleged conspirator, during the 1960-61 season.

Lou Barshak of New York told of yet another conspirator—Charles Tucker—who he said gave him the go-ahead to bribe N. C. State player Terry Litchfield to shave points in the State-Georgia Tech game Dec. 17, 1960.

Barshak said he too offered a temptation to a University of Seattle player but was turned down.

Rusk, Mikoyan Hold Friendly Conference

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Scretary of State Dean Rusk and Soviet troubleshooter Anastas I. Mikoyan conferred in a "spirit of goodwill" Friday on Cuba and other cold war problems. But a U. S. spokesman said he could not say whether it advanced or retarded East-West relations.

In addition to Cuba, the far-ranging 2 hour, 45-minute meeting covered such cold war issues as Berlin and disarmament.

The deputy Soviet premier said the discussions were carried out in a "spirit of good will" while State Department spokesman Lincoln White said "the spirit of the meeting was good on both sides."

But White said that whether progress has been made will not be known until further talks are held in New York on the Cuban situation and in Geneva on the question of disarmament.

White said he would not characterize the talks as having "advanced anything or retarded anything."

Berlin Wasn't Discussed

Berlin was not discussed by Mikoyan and President Kennedy in a lengthy White House conference Thursday but it was brought up in Friday's meeting with Rusk.

Emerging from the long luncheon at the State Department, Mikoyan told reporters:

"We discussed a wide variety of questions of interest to our countries, not only the Cuban question but the problem of disarmament, the Berlin question and others."

The Soviet first deputy premier also said he "expects some progress" on leftover issues from the Cuban flareup.

He declined, however, to apply the word "progress" to his meeting with Rusk.

$10.3 Million In Gifts Goes To UNC In '62

A total of $10.3 million in gifts, bequests and research and training grants for the year ending 1962 was announced by the University of North Carolina following the annual meeting of the Development Council.

Charles M. Shaffer, director of Development, stated that the amount exceeds that of any previous year and is 10 times the amount reported 10 years ago when the development program was organized in Chapel Hill.

The largest amount derives from contracts and research grants totalling $8,639,569.00. Gifts and bequests for the year 1961-62 (ending June 30) was $1,687,118.46.

Chancellor William B. Aycock thanked members of the foundations and fund organizations whose efforts were recognized in the total of $10,326,687.46 raised in the 12 month's period.

Three new "significant undertakings" were also stressed in the council sessions: (1) A multi-million dollar drive for capital funds to enlarge the over-crowded Medical Center, (2) a restricted campaign among dentists of the state, to get matching funds for a dental research wing, (3) establishment of a state-wide committee for endowed professorships.

Alumni contributions to the University for all purposes totalled $542,029.89, which is a new high. The unrestricted Alumni Annual Giving appeal realized $122,064.87 from 6,739 donnors.

Gifts from corporations amounted to $292,567.77, providing assistance in almost all phases of University life.

Philanthropic foundations granted $700,859.65 to medical, humanities, social and natural sciences—

Faculty Clarifies Position On "Bull Pledge" Activity

By VANCE BARRON JR.

The Faculty Committee on Fraternities and Sororities has clarified its position on the role of "inactive" fraternity members in fraternity life. The Committee stated at a meeting Thursday that deactivation should mean total disassociation from a fraternity until such time as an inactive member gains his "C" average and is eligible for active membership.

Charles Battle and David Underwood were present at the meeting to represent the IFC opinion on the problem of inactive members. Dean William Long explained the Office of Student Affairs' position on the matter before the Committee.

The question before the Committee was whether inactive members or "bull" pledges who did not make the required "C" averages should be allowed to visit their fraternity houses informally or attend "open" fraternity parties. According to Battle, vice-president of the IFC, the IFC position prior to the Faculty Committee's statement was that inactives would be allowed to attend informal, "open" parties at the fraternity houses or to visit friends at the house. The IFC has considered attendance at "open" parties essentially unrestricted since restriction was "unenforceable."

"Most weekends, there are many people who come to these parties who are not members of the fraternity," Battle said. "Therefore," he said, "it is not fair to keep inactives away and deny them even the status of a guest."

When the 80% Rule was revoked last year, the agreement between th IFC and the Faculty Committee was that inactives would not be able to eat or live at the fraternity houses, attend any house or chapter meetings, or attend any "planned" social events. There was no definite pronouncement by either the IFC or the Faculty Committee on the definition of "planned" social activities, before yesterday.

According to Battle, the IFC has tended to allow informal visits at fraternity houses and "open" parties by inactives. Because of this, there has been considerable concern expressed by the Office of Student Affairs over the status of inactives. The IFC will meet this week to try to work out a "compromise" solution to the problem that will "be acceptable to the Faculty Committee and that we will be able to enforce."

Dean Long said yesterday that his office had understood last year that "deactivation" from a fraternity would mean complete disassociation from all fraternity activities. However, he was concerned at the great number of inactives who are spending an appreciable amount of time around the houses and at parties. Several weeks ago, Dean Charles Henderson explained the Student Affairs Office's position and concern over the matter to the IFC. The Faculty Committee has now fully endorsed this position—that disassociation means complete disaffiliation.

Long said yesterday that the Faculty Committee was not "directing" the IFC in their pronouncement. He emphasized that the Faculty Committee is trying to "clarify" the issue, and in effect endorsing the position of the Office of Student Affairs. He said that the IFC is to consult on the definition of deaction in light of the Faculty Committee's position and present their report to the Committee next week.

Long said there would be a problem facing the IFC in enforcing attendance restrictions at "open" parties. However, he said that the responsibility for the problem will lie with the individual house. "The IFC," he said, "is a supra-organization, overarching its components." Because of the nature of the organization and the lack of cooperation by the various houses, IFC has a very difficult time enforcing its rules. Fraternities serve an important function on campus, that of providing a small group for the individual to seek identity."

Recount Shows Republican Winner In Rhode Island

Republican John H. Chaffee was elected governor of Rhode Island over Democratic incumbent John A. Notte Jr. by the slender margin of 398 votes in a cliff-hanging, 24-day vote count, complete official tabulations showed Friday

Final tallies were announced by the Rhode Island Elections Board early Friday less than 24 hours after GOP Gov. Elmer L. Anderson of Minnesota was declared re-elected in the closest governor's race in the state's history.

The election board actions in Rhode Island and Minnesota brought the apparent lineup of governors for the next two years to 33 Democrats and 17 Republicans assuming there are no reversals because of recounts. The previous lineup was 34 Democrats and 16 Republicans.

In the nation's only undecided senatorial race, former Food For Peace Director George McGovern held a slim lead over incumbent Republican Sen. Joseph H. Bettum as a statewide South Dakota recount neared completion.

The Rhode Island Elections Board announced early Friday that a complete, official count gave Chafee 163,952 votes, Notte 163,554. The board released the tabulation after counting 6,123 absentee, shut-ins and servicemen's ballots.

2 Plagiarism Cases Heard By Council

One Student Guilty Of Telephone Fraud

The Men's Honor Council decided two cases Thursday night and dismissed a third. Sentences of definite probation for one semester were given for Honor Code violations involving plagiarism and fraudulent long distance calls, while a third case was dismissed as an academic mistake and not an honor offense.

In the telephone case several long distance calls were placed by a sophomore who did not own the credit card to which they were billed. The defendant testified that he had been introduced to a boy at a fraternity party at a nearby school, and that, while intoxicated, this acquaintance had given him permission to make a long distance call then and others in the future if he wished to do so. After placing three calls in succeeding days, the defendant said he then learned that the credit card was not owned by his friend and in fact the friend could not be located.

In the second case a first semester freshman admitted that he had paraphrased a plot condensation for a book report. He stated that he had read the book but rephrased the outline thinking that it would be permissible since a plot summary called for no creative work.

But the council reasoned that plagiarism was involved since the student had not performed the summary himself; he had relied upon the ability of another author to condense and summarize. In addition, there was evidence that the defendant had also used the critical evaluation of the master-plot editor.

The case which was dismissed also involved a charge of plagiarism. An English I theme was handed in without a footnote reference to material directly paraphrased from an outside source; but the student attempted to hand in the source materials while professing ignorance of the proper manner in which to footnote a pamphlet without a stated author.

Chinese Pull Troops Away From Border

NEW DELHI, Saturday (UPI)—Communist China announced early today its troops had begun withdrawing from disputed border areas. There was no official confirmation in New Delhi where wary ofifcials watched for a possible attack.

Peking announced on Nev. 21 its troops would cease-firing immediately along the 2,500-mile frontier and that on Dec. 1 would withdraw from some areas overrun by the massive Red Offensive. The deadline for withdrawal was midnight Peking time 10:30 p.m. Friday New Delhi time or 11 a.m. Friday EST.

Peking said the withdrawal actually had started but it coupled the announcement with new "provocations" along the frontier, charges that India was staging including flights over Ladakh and a warning to "respond postively" to Chinese initiative and not "undermine the cease-fire."

Indian officials said privately the apparent withdrawal could be a ruse or routine redeployment. They expected it would take a day or two to verify the withdrawal.

Indian sources said Friday there were indications then some of the Red armies actually had begun pulling back in the northeastern frontier regions but they remained ultra-cautious.

Announcement of the withdrawal was made by Peking Radio while Prim Ministr Jawaharlal Nhru and Presdent Mohammed Ayub Khan of Pakistan were explaining to their political opponents the reason for their decision to negotiate on the Kashmir issue.

The Soviet Union also invoked a diplomatic double play and told India it would honor its commitment to supply 21 MIG jet fighters but at a "later date," Indian sources said. The delay might placate China to some extent without actually reneging on its offers to India.

SSL Senate Vetoes Most House Bills

The two houses of the State Student Legislature were unable yesterday to reach agreements over Major legislation.

As of press time, the liberal house had passed the majority of the bills before it, while the more conservative senate had proceeded to reject most of these measures.

The house passed bills requesting the repeal of the Smith Act, the Internal Security Act, and the Communist Control Act. It passed an appeal for the abolition of the death penalty in North Carolina and accepted a measure asking for state controlled abortion.

UNC representative Mike Lawler's bill requesting the support of the NSA was defeated in the senate after its passage in the house. A bill in support of Federal Aid to Education without any qualifications as to the degree of integration or segregation was approved in the house. An amendment requiring that the supported institution be integrated was defeated.

The two houses will meet today in a joint meeting in an attempt to reach agreement on at least some of the bills on the agenda.

Strauss Quits Job To Allow Adenauer To Form Coalition

BONN (UPI)—Controversial Defense Minister Franz-Josef Strauss, 47, bowed out of the cabinet Friday to enable Chancellor Konrad Adenauer to form a new coalition government with the Free Democratic party which had demanded his ouster.

A statement issued through his supporters in Munich, home of Strauss' Bavarian branch of Adenauer's Christian Democratic party, said he could not serve in the new government now being negotiated because of the opposition by the Free Democrats.

The victory for the Free Democrats went far to solve a serious government crisis which was touched off by the Der Spiegel news magazine case: The Free Democrat minister of justice.

The crisis, worst in Adenauer's 13 years as chancellor, began a month ago. All five Free Democratic cabinet ministers resigned. The remaining members, including Strauss, handed in their resignations but Adenauer kept them on as a caretaker government.

The Christian Democrats and Strauss' Bavarian wing, the Christian Social Union, do not command a majority in parliament and need the help of the Free Democrats to pass legislation. It was clear Adenauer had been forced to make the painful decision of giving up a majority or the man who was once touted as his successor.

While Strauss was meeting with his followers in Munich, Adenauer was continuing his coalition talks in Bonn. That he was having trouble was shown Thursday night when Free Democratic leader Erich refused to sit at the dinner table with Strauss to discuss a new government.

The announcement did not specify when the defense chief would leave office, but Adenauer still has all the cabinet resignations before him. The mass resignation was political etiquette but Strauss' announcement was no gesture.

Adenauer now can omit Strauss' name when he forms his new government.

Neutralist Is Approved Unanimously

Russians Hold Fast To Troika Plan

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI)—U. Thant, the quiet Burmese neutralist who mediated the Cuban crisis, Friday was appointed to a full term as secretary general of the United Nations.

The General Assembly approved a recommendation made by the Security Council earlier that Thant serve as the top executive until Nov. 3, 1966.

The secret assembly ballot was unanimous, with one member of the 110-nation body absent for the vote. The announcement of the result was greeted by long applause.

The action sidetracked for the next four years at least the Soviet campaign to replace the secretary general with a troika, or three-bloc, executive.

The Soviet Union voted for the 53-year-old Burmese diplomat, but made clear that it still believes in the "troika" principle. The Russians said they agreed to Thant's appointment because of "existing circumstances" in the world.

Still Backs Troika

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian A. Zorin was reported to have told the secret session of the council that his government still feels that administration of international bodies should be in the hands of three persons representing Communist, Western and neutralist viewpoints.

An agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union virtually assured the appointment of Thant who has been serving in an acting capacity. Thursday, the assembly and council were summoned into session Friday to speed through the appointment. There was no opposition candidate.

U. S.-Soviet negotiations on Cuba scheduled for Friday were put off until Monday. A U. S. spokesman said the postponement was due to the assembly session on Thant, and because more time was needed for "review of the Cuban situation.

Mikoyan Discusses Crisis

Soviet First Deputy Premier Anastas I. Mikoyan has been discussing the Cuban crisis with officials in Washington. He plans to leave for Moscow Saturday. The recommendation of Thant's appointment was proposed to the 11-member Security Council by the six non-permanent members — Chile, Ghana, Ireland, Romania, United Arab Republic and Venezuela. All council delegates made brief st atements supporting the recommendation.

The cheroot-smoking Buddhist diplomat was elevated from relative obscurity a year ago when he was chosen, as a compromise candidate, to serve the remaining term of Dag Hammarskjold, who was killed in a plane crash.

Hammarskjold's term would not have expired until next April. However, Thant's term technically will date to the time of his acting appointment on Nov. 3, 1961, at his own request because of the semi-invalid condition of his wife. Officially the secretary general's term is for five years.

Aftermath Of Cuban Crisis: Must Remain Initiative

In the aftermath of the Cuban confrontation and the United States' apparent "victory" the nation has uttered a great sigh of relief. Americans generally are pleased with the Kennedy administration's decisive action and with the success of this action in forcing Khrushchev to back down and remove the Communist arsenal in Cuba.

There is a false emphasis, however, in the attitude of many who are looking back at the encouraging recent events, rather than looking forward to the difficult future. To think that the Cuban blockade and its results really solved anything seems very narrow, and almost silly.

The Cuban "victory" has given the United States more responsibilities than benefits.

Decisive action must lead to more decisive action and thence to more decisive action. The alternative is to withdraw into the action of reaction, whereby Washington reacts to whatever new crises Moscow has developed, whereby the initiative is forever left in the hands of the Soviets.

* * *

BY HIS action in the Cuban affair the President has assumed a great responsibility in other areas. He now must continue U. S. uni*lateral military and political actions where it is justified* (in South Vietnam, for instance) — must take the economic initiative in foreign aid and trade areas where the Russians have failed or not yet entered — must do everything possible to aid India in its struggle with China — must solidify Latin American support for the U. S. actions toward Cuba and seek to broaden the base of that support by economic aid and political understanding — must continue working within the United Natiins whenever conceivable, while recognizing that body's limitations in big power squabbles. . . . The President's responsibilities are great; he has assumed a terrible burden — the threat of thermonuclear war.

The resultant threat of World-End (or according to some Pentagon strategists, only Half-World-End) is increased in every crisis, just as in every appeasement. And the consequences of such a war (if several days of all-eradicating missilry could be called a "war") are on the President's shoulders alone, no matter how many political pundits dismiss the danger with, "The Russians fear war as much as we do. . . ."

* * *

IN THE WAKE of victory there are two dangers. One is that the United States will assume a supermilitant pose, brandishing its newfound power with arrogance. The other danger follows from the fears of some that the U. S. pushed Khrushchev too far and that the Chinese thus may gain control of Communist foreign policy and make it more militarily aggressive. This view would lead to a United States foreign policy reversion to wait-and-see-what-the-Reds-are-doing-and-react-to-their-actions.

In proceeding to confrontation of the world's major problems, in Berlin, in Africa, in Asia, the United States temporarily has the initiative and support for that initiative which it rarely attains. The Soviets are no longer the supermen incapable of mistake, and the U. S. is no longer the bumbling, well-intentioned fool, afraid to take a stand and work for success. Presidential advisor Henry A. Kissinger said in a recent magazine article that now is the time to "define what we stand for rather than go through a shopping list of Soviet demands in an effort to determine which of them may be tolerable." Now is the time to work for a settlement in Central Europe, for instance, not wait until another Berlin crisis has been thrust upon the West.

For this initiative to remain strong and firm, it must avoid the two dangers — that of backstepping conciliation and the danger of political and military sword-rattling.

* * *

AMERICAN behavior during and after the height of the Cuban crisis showed several disturbing aspects, leaning toward the danger of militaristic swagger and political bluster.

One was the instance of news "management" by the administration in its attempt to make the nation "speak as one voice." By any name or excuse, this is censorship — resulting in a public which reads of news about government, produced, manufactured and predigested by that government.

A second disturbing characteristic of U. S. thought was the seeming lessening of concern over a moral and correct foreign policy. (Perhaps this stemmed from a feeling of guilt that a policy of national self-interest could not at the same time be moral — a disheartening thought at best.) Objections that a naval blockade, such as the U. S. used, was illegal under international law, was overruled with scorn. Concern over the danger of a nuclear war took a new, frightening turn when such persons as Kissinger said, "The Soviet leaders did not dare invoke the threat of nuclear war against our blockade. If we believed the threat, even a nation like ours might feel compelled to strike pre-emptively." How long has it been since the United States calmly thought of launching an aggressive nuclear holocaust upon a foreign nation?

THE INDIAN border dispute, on the other hand, has provided a more encouraging view of future U. S. policy. The Kennedy administration has so far acted with calmness in an uncalm situation. Arms will be given to India — as many as she needs to hold back the Red Chinese — and this is being done without the "I told you so" attitude which the Gold-Walker fringe would have America throw at the luckless Indians.

The Indian problem probably will get much worse — it looms as a crisis of greater consequence than the Cuban affair, because the fate of India is the fate of all Asia and much of the other uncommitted world. The United States must, in India as elsewhere, meet the Communist challenge with confidence yet moderation, willing to take a stand but never fearing to negotiate.

The word "moderation" is important; it should have no taint of cowardliness. In its true meaning, it can be a cornerstone of America's foreign policy, precluding both appeasement and sword-rattling. As Kissinger, again said, "Moderation will appear an act of policy (henceforth), for it is a virtue only in those who are thought to have a choice." And the United States' invigorated initiative gives it such a choice. (J.C.)

Apologies On 'Dook' Parade

To the Editors,

Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity wishes to apologize for the poor taste displayed by several participants in the Beat Dook Float Parade. Neither the themes of floats nor the floats themselves were reviewed by us, and as sponsors we had hoped that the entrants would be responsible to the community without our supervision.

To prevent further debasing of the event, and to re-establish the parade as an enjoyable spectacle and pep rally for the college and town, Pi Kappa Alpha passed the following rule on Wednesday, November 28, 1962.

1. All entrants must submit themes for all public displays in the Beat Dook Float Parade to the Parade Chairman in a manner and by a date to be announced each year.

2. A committee, to consist of the President of Pi Kappa Alpha, the Beat Dook Float Parade Chairman, and a faculty member selected by Pi Kappa Alpha, will review all themes and to prevent repetition and poor taste.

3. The above committee will review all floats immediately before the parade, and reserves the right to deny entrance to any participant for any reason.

Dr. Sam Hill, Chairman of the Department of Religion at U.N.C., has agreed to act as the faculty member on the committee for 1963 Float Parade.

Pi Kappa Alpha appreciates the energy and enthusiasm displayed in the parade, and hopes that this spirit will be manifested in a more responsible way. We also appreciate the concern for the parade shown by its critics, and will welcome further suggestions for effective administration of the traditional event.

Shelters Falling Out Everywhere . . .

To the Editors,

As I climbed the steps, a sign posted high out of reach boasted the building's capacity as 3,160. Following the direction indicated by two other signs I found myself in the book stacks on the seventh level opposite the elevator where another sign stated simply 440. Further investigation yielded 320 for the sixth level, and 570 for the fifth. There was no sign on the tenth level.

This allocation of a specific number of students for each level would be more compatible for everyone concerned, if each student were assigned to that floor of the stacks containing material related to his field of interest, i.e., students of Greek and Latin to the fifth level, Philosophy and Religion to the third, etc. Also, the two elevators, (each of which has a nice fan), have a capacity of eight people apiece, and could accommodate those students specializing in the mechanics of elevators. Regardless of one's major, however, some sort of priority system is necessary, since the people on the lower levels of the stacks will be much safer in the event of an emergency, than those placed higher up. The second level will thus be made to accommodate those students with a B average or better, and so on up, the tenth level being reserved for everyone with a D average or worse and those who would eventually flunk out anyway. Since the ladies Rest Rooms are provided only on the odd numbered levels 3, 5, 7, and 9, these floors will be reserved for women only, while male students will be accommodated on the even numbered levels 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10, each of which is equipped with a Men's Rest Room. Each student presenting his stack permit will be admitted to the seventh level, and then counted by a member of the L. S. C. C. S. E. S. L., the Library Science Committee for the Counting of Students Entering the Seventh Level, so as not to exceed the number of people designated for each floor. The students will then be redistributed to the various levels, those first in line having the advantage of being able to select the carrel of their choice, and sit out the raid in relative comfort.

Each level has a cold water fountain for your convenience, and there will be no lack of reading matter for the student who provides himself with two weeks supply of Library Cards. Although food is strickly prohibited in the stacks, the kitchenette of the Library Employees Lounge will be pressed into service for the duration of the emergency, or at last until everyone runs out of coffee money. Free ice cream and favors for those drinking the least amount of water daily will be made available to all, though the facilities of the L. S. F. D. F. I. C. F., the Library Science Foundation for the Distribution of Free Ice Cream and Favors. The Library Foundation will also make arrangements for friendly integrated touch football games of the Boys of the Eighth Level against the Girls of the Seventh, etc., which, in addition to providing wholesome recreation, will also help to keep everyone physically alert enough to stand the strain and time-consuming process of checking out of the stacks. As a final bit of information, I will pass on to you the fact that the only safe place in the whole library is Room 2-35, which is almost entirely below Ground Level. This room is entered via the second level of the stacks by those who are forunate enough to possess the Pass-Key. This I learned from a member of the L. S. F. C. P. P. K. R. 2-35, the Library Science Foundation for the Continued Possession of the Pass Key to Room 2-35.

(P.S. I understand that a few Girl's Dormitories are also available for Shelter, and I am personally holding Open House for those interested in the Positive Approach to the Cuban Situation.)

Students Listen To WUNC-FM

To The Editors:

A recent letter to the editor stated, as if it were a truism, that no Carolina students listen to WUNC-FM radio. The letter writer is not to be entirely blamed for his erroneous statement, for this thought seems to be held by many. Indeed, many organizations, such as the Tar Heel, have been under the same impression and, quite properly, in that belief, have only rarely even printed the WUNC program schedule. The recent letter-writer and the editors of the Tar Heel (as well as the student body as a whole), will be interested in the following factual information on WUNC-FM listeners.

Last semester, in RTVMP 173 ("Research Projects in the Mass Media," taught by Dr. Hilliard), one of the class projects during the semester was a normative survey. The purpose of the project was to determine the radio listening habits of Carolina students in regard to WUNC-FM. The survey was scientifically structured with the interview sample accurately reflecting the Class, Academic Major, Age, Residence, Geographic Origin, Sex, and Marital Status of the entire student body.

Twenty-eight precent of Carolina students listen to WUNC-FM. Of the seventy-two percent who do not listen only twelve percent (or less than nine percent) do not listen because there are not enough programs on WUNC to interest them. The most popular programs on WUNC are classical, semi-classical and jazz and folk music presentations. Most students listen from Monday through Thursday evenings and the heaviest concentration of listeners occours at the 8-10 p. m. time period (the classical music time.)

WUNC does have a comparatively large student listening audience, larger, in fact, than the audiences for sport events other than football, and basketball, and larger than the "observers" of many other campus activities. Of course, WUNC would like to grow, and as the station manager stated in a recent letter to the Tar Heel, hopes to establish an operative carrier-current system when personnel and funds are available. WUNC, like many prophets in their own land, is not fully known to Carolina students—at least not in terms of its national reputation, through which it is considered one of the finest university radio stations in the country, not only serving the students, but its own and nearby states for a radius of 150 miles, and as the recipient over its ten years of operation of many national awards.

I hope this information may be of value to the afore-mentioned letter-writer, to the students in general, and to the editors of the Tar Heel, who, with this information now available, will, I am sure, wish to cover more fully the programs presented by WUNC-FM, at least through publication of its daily program schedule.

Fascist Principles: Duty & Authority

(Editor's Note: This is the second in a three-part series on "The Quintessence of Facism" by Wade Wellman. The first part, in yesterday's DTH, dealt with the possible emergence of Facism in Europe today; and Mr. Wellman's view that Facism is considerably more democratic than Communism.)

Just as the human problem is twofold (that of mankind on the one hand and each individual on the other), so the Facist solution also is twofold, based on the spiritual theory and the actual concrete state. But this is not to suggest that one level of Facism approaches the problems of man, and the other level the problems of men. For one of the first tenets of this philosophy is that you cannot segregate man from the state; you might as well segregate the brick from the building. The problem of the indivdual can only be met when he is willing to identify his welfare with the welfare of his countrymen, and to realize that his own existence has its real importance in the continuation of the nation-state. He must understand that his actions and struggles have value chiefly as they promote the collective activity of the nation; the functioning of the citizen must be directly bound up with the functioning of the whole human aggregate. This means that the citizen must make an unselfish sacrifice of himself and see that his importance is in large measure his importance to others. And here we come to the first of the three outstanding Facist principles the principle of duty.

Now how is this duty realized? We may define it as responsibility to ourselves and to others, in the knowledge that duty to oneself is the same as duty to others in the nation-state. That is, by practicing duty to others, we serve our own interests alongside those of our countrymen. This duty to our fellow citizens is triple, manifesting inself first in the family, second in the profession one practices, and third in the promotion of the nation as a whole. We must show a dutiful, altruistic service to our family, our vocational corporation, and our welfare depends on that of our compatriots in the nation-state. The organization of the people in a Fascist society is so intimate and so precisely outlined that duty to our fellow citizens and duty to our country soon become almost indistinct. A worker or businessman in the corporate state knows that his day-to-day work is a part of the life of the nation, and is not simply a means of perpetuating his own existence—the common attitude of American workingmen.

Duty within the corporation, the responsibility shown by the workingman and the professional person, is the spiritual basis for the corporate state, and duty to the country as a whole is the foundation for the other two main Fascist tenets—law and authority. So it can be seen at this point that the concept of human responsibility, divided into several compartments, is the Fascist answer to the double plight of man. And the practical Fascist state is built upon this solution, so that the theory of duty, in its broadest sense, is the center of the entire Fascist system.

I am eager to get into the workings of the corporate state, but the two main extensions of responsibility must be discussed before we have a full view of the spirit behind corporatism. The sacrifice of Fascism on the spiritual plane has been mentioned: there remains the question of this sacrifice in its visible form. In actuality, it takes the form of a surrender of some of the liberty and priviledge which run wild in the plutocratic democracies of the west. Certain restrictions on the press and communications media are enforced, and our actions are subject to more control from the government than we usually experience in American democracy. This sacrifice is not a crippling one; indeed, man has no greater satisfaction than the knowledge that he, as an individual, can practice some self-denial for the sake of his friends. To a Fascist thinker one's friends are one's countrymen, and this self-denial consists of submission to the guidance of a strong government.

To the Fascist, government must be able to restrain the actions of a man and to make itself felt when certain groups decide that their welfare is not the welfare of the nation. And so we come to the second main principle of the Fascist system, the principle of authority.

We have seen that the concept of duty begets the concept of authority. Now duty or responsibility must function at every level of the Fascist society; so also must authority. But there is one main distinction. Whereas duty originates from all the interactions of human beings, and is just as much the obligation of the ordinary citizen as it is that of the head of state, authority must originate from above. And authority is manifested by the husband in the household, the employer in the office, and the head of state in the government—almost synonymous with the manifestations of duty. Authority of the government over the people is the binding force in the duty of the man to the country; the authority of the government must see to it that our obligations are fulfilled in the social interactions of citizens, employers. Widespread strikes, the continual plague and the threat of all democratic system, can never occur in the controlled economy of Fascism. To enforce responsibility the nation-state must have authority, and this must be vested in the government; that is, it must come from above, not from below. This is the sorce of the name Fascism, which derives from the fasces—bundles of rods carried before ancient Roman magistrates as a symbol of authority. The prime philosophical defect of democracy is that it turns authority over to the masses, thus cheating it of its intrinsic purpose, which is to enforce proper behavior and restrain misdemeanor.

Incidentally, this principle finds some development in the writings of Dante, who believed in the empire as our guiding authority in temporal affairs, cooperating that Dante's appeal to the Fascist mind has always been profound. He felt, perhaps rightly, that the ideal political setup was the Roman Empire, and Mussolini, whose writings contain some of the most stimulating philosophy written in this century, openly proclaimed Facist Italy and its African acquisitions as a revival of the Roman Empire. If the heads of the rising European Combine have the same feeling, we can hope for a Fascist revival that will reach far greater heights than the system ever attained under Mussolini.

Old Book News

During the Christmas season, we are going to try to keep the feature case in the Old Book Corner filled with the sort of books you might give to a distinguished friend.

Books in unusually handsome bindings, books whose subject matter gives them particular interest to perhaps a dozen people in Chapel Hill, books that will score a bull's eye or a clean miss—these are the books you'll find featured this month.

As this advertisement goes to a small library of French books press, we have just put out in handsome half leather bindings. There is also a nice set of the SPECTATOR in full leather. Other delights are in the offing.

This year give a truly distinguished gift. Nick off something rare and fine in our Old Book Corner.

including Ford, Rockefeller, Avalon, Markle, Nemours, Smith Reynolds, Richardson, and Carnegie foundations and the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship Fund.

Federal Govt. Grants

The largest number of grants came from federal agencies for contract and research and training. The Department of Health, Education and Welfare provided the largest amount in money, chiefly in the area of Health Affairs, including the Schools of Medicine and of Public Health. Next came the Department of Defense and thirdly the National Science Foundation. A total of 15.6 per cent of the number grants came from private agencies.

The Development Council meeting placed emphasis on ten years of operation in aid to the University, as well as to the past fiscal year. It was disclosed that over half a million dollars has actually been expended for "unrestricted" purposes by the University in the last 10 years—from gifts by alumni through the annual giving campaign. Tom Bost, director of the giving program, offered a breakdown of the expenditures as follows:

Faculty research and publication, $132,500; faculty travel to scientific and learned society meetings, $94,500; Distinguished Alumni Professorships $82,000; Graduate Fellowships $64,000; special library projects $41,900; supplements for faculty retirement $30,484; Chancellor's Emergency Fund $21,726.71; student welfare aid cases $4,500, and for other purposes $42,373.75.

Progressive Labor Chairman To Speak

Milt Rosen, chairman of the national Progressive Labor group, will speak on socialism at 8 Monday in Gerrard Hall.

The talk will be sponsored by the New Left Club, and will be open to the public. According to the New Left, Rosen will discuss what socialism is, the "method of achieving it," and "why it is necessary today in the United States."

Seminars Abroad In Sixth Season As Function Of Y

The YMCA's economical "Seminars Abroad" program is in its sixth year at Carolina. Last summer 30 students from UNC visited Europe on a 67-day tour through the program.

Designed for students and by students, the program was begun five years ago because of a feeling that the University should have a stake in the educational opportunity which travel provides. Commercial tours did not seem to meet the needs of students.

The student Chairman for this year is Judy Bryant, who was a member of the 1962 Seminar. The program is planned by a student committee made up of members who have attended past seminars.

The program begins on the campus with a series of seminars. Later the students go to Washington, D. C. for a 3-day conference with the emphasis of major countries to be visited and for a talk with the State Department.

Meetings are pre - arranged in Europe with students, government representatives, and civic leaders.

The trip begins on June 10 and ends August 16.

A full week is given to major cities such as London, Paris, Florence, Rome, and Berlin. Half the time in each locality is unscheduled so that each member can plan for his own special interests. The trip takes in a total of 12 countries.

The leader of the program, Mr. C. C. Shotts, General Secretary of the YMCA, lived in Europe two years as director of Quaker Post-War Relief.

Only students are accepted and the group is limited to 30. About 15 students have already registered for the program. Interested students should contact Mr. Shotts at the Y. Students from other campuses are also welcomed.

CONSTITUTIONAL COUNCIL

The Constitutional Council will meet Monday at 4:30 p.m. in Graham Memorial. The meeting is open to all interested students.

Congressman Raps Censors

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Rep. John E. Moss protested Friday that a "complete blackout" has been imposed since last September on news from the U. S. government about the success or failure of Russian space shots.

"We are not fooling the Russians," he said. "They know where their satellites are. We are only confusing the American people. The American public has no reliable U. S. source of information to match against Russian claims of space achievements."

The California Democrat, who heads the House Subcommittee on Freedom of Information, cited this as another example of what he termed the "growth of secrecy" and "government management of news" under the Kennedy administration.

In a speech prepared for the California Press Association Conference, Moss said:

"This is the kind of news management that causes grave concern because it is such an easy step—if that step is taken in secret—from managing news about our own space achievements."

Moss said the blackout took effect in September when the government stopped listing new Russian satellites in its bi-monthly report on satellites in orbit. This action was taken after the National Space Agency had reported that all six of Russia's attempted probes of Mars and Venus had failed.

Bowlers Meet Deacons, State And Duke

Two UNC bowling teams will meet teams from Duke, State and Wake Forest this afternoon at 2:30 at the All-Star Lanes in Eastgate Shopping Center.

The UNC teams are sponsored by Graham Memorial and five of the bowlers will represent Graham Memorial and UNC at the Regional meet which is to be held in Atlanta, Ga., in February.

Fourteen bowlers were selected in a campus roll-off two weeks ago. Top qualifier was Jim Ridout. Other first team members are Richard McMahon, John Cumming, Katz Kazaoka, Kirby Harris, Howard Goldklang and Eddie Moreau.

Second team bowlers are James Hall, Steve Tyer, Carl Swann, Clark Parker, Ron Zahray, Wendell Walker and Bob Shouse.

Five of the men on each team will bowl five games in today's four-way meet. All the men selected for the team had near-180 averages in the qualifying roll-off.

Sophomores Make Varsity Debut

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's sophomore-studded basketball team kicks off its season at 8 tonight in Woollen Gym against the Bulldogs from the University of Georgia.

For Tar Heel Coach Dean Smith it will be his first contest against a member of the Southeastern Conference. Two years ago, under Frank McGuire, UNC successfully opened its season with an easy victory over Louisiana State. Carolina teams have won four games in a row against Southeastern teams since 1956.

When Yogi Poteet, Larry Brown, Charlie Shaffer and sophomores Billy Cunningham and Ray Respess take the floor tonight it will mark the first time a UNC team has faced Georgia in basketball since 1929. UNC holds a 4-0 lead in the series.

Sophs Fill Vacancies

Cunningham and Respess will fill vacancies left by the graduated Jim Hudock and Jim Donohue. Poteet, a two year letterman who was ineligible last season, starts in the spot held by Donnie Walsh last year. Walsh is now assistant freshman coach.

The success of Cunningham and Respess, along with four soph reserves, could be the key to the Tar Heels season. Cunningham, a 6-4 Brooklyn boy, was the top frosh scorer and rebounder last year. The long-armed, kangaroo-legged center averaged 20.7 during his half-year of eligibility and hit on 50 per cent of his shots.

Forward Respess averaged 15.4 while making 100 of 201 field goal attempts and 46 of 59 free throws. The Tar Heel coaches feel he could become one of the best college players produced by a North Carolina high school in the past few years. Ray hails from Pantego in the eastern part of the state.

But the sophs will have plenty of experience in the lineup with them.

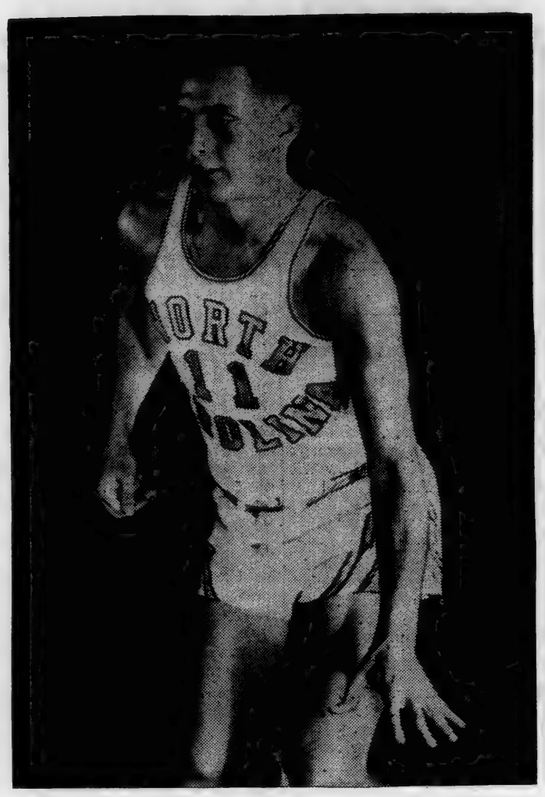
Co-Captains

The co-captains, Poteet and Brown, have started frequently since their sophomore seasons. As a defensive standout two years ago, Poteet was one of the best in the conference. He averaged 3.8 as a part-time starter in the same lineup with all-Americans Doug Moe and York Larese.

Brown led last year's team in scoring with a 16.5 average. His deadly two-hand set shot is one of the most enjoyable to watch in basketball today. Larry is an excellent driver and defensive man also.

Shaffer, no relation to Lee Shaffer who starred for UNC a few years back, joined the team at mid-season last year after recovering from a freshman football injury. In nine games he averaged 10.4, hitting on an amazing 63.6 per cent of his shots. A Morehead Scholar, the Chapel Hill native is also a star on the tennis courts.

Top UNC reserve is Mike Cooke, a junior from Mount Airy who can play either guard or forward. He averaged 5.8 last year as the team's number six man.



Other reserves are sophs Bill Brown and Bill Taylor at guards, front-court soph Bill Galantai, and holdovers Charlie Burns, Peppy Callahan in the backcourt and Bruce Bowers, Art Katz, Dieter Krause and Richard Vinroot at forwards.

Bryan McSweeney, a starter at forward as a soph during the first half of last season, was sidelined with an ankle injury the first day of practice and won't be ready to play for several weeks.

The Georgia crew had an overall 8-16 mark last year. Their hopes for improvement are based on a pair of flashy guards. Billy Rado, a transfer from Manhattan College, and sophomore Jimmy Pitts are called two of the best back-court men at Athens in some time.

Center Harold Morris and forwards Charles Adamek and Carlton Gill round out the starting team for Coach Red Lawson. Morris, at 6-7, will be the biggest man on the court tonight. UNC's tallest starters are Cunningham and Respess—both 6-4.

The Tar Heels will be out to improve immensely on last year's 8-9 record. Coach Smith feels that his squad is ready to give a good account of itself. "I like our shooting ability and I think our defense will be very good," said the UNC coach.

Larry Brown

Yogi Poteet's Father Dies

Guard Yogi Poteet will be a starter for North Carolina tonight against Georgia to fulfill a request of his late father.

"I want you to play, regardless . . ." was the last wish of Yogi's dad, who died Thursday morning at his home in Hendersonville, N. C. He had been ill for more than a year.

Yogi, a co-captain of the Tar Heles along with Larry Brown, said he planned to return for the game. The funeral will be held tomorrow.

"About the only thing Dad had to look forward to was this season," Yogi told Coach Dean Smith of Carolina. "His sickness was incurable."

Georgia Game Is Sold Out

Tickets for today's basketball game with Georgia are sold out. Tickets for Wednesday's game with Clemson, UNC's ACC opener, are still available.

Tar Heel Frosh Meet Wilmington

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Wilmington Junior College supplies the first test for UNC's highly-regarded freshman basketball team here tonight in a preliminary contest to the Carolina-Georgia game. Tip-off is set for 6:00.

Coach Ken Rosemond has come up with what he thinks may be as fine a frosh club, potentially, as has been seen here in quite a while.

Ray Hassel and Johnny Yokley, two lightning-quick guards are scheduled to start in backcourt tonight.

Hassell, 5-11 from Beaufort, was all-state last season and played on three state championship teams while in high school. Yokley was the most valuable player on his Mount Airy club and played in the prep school East-West All-Star game.

Two Forecourt Starters

In forecourt two starters are set. Bob Bennett, Mount Lebanon, Pa., and Mark Mirken, a Brooklyn boy, will handle the rebounding load for the Tar Babies.

Bennett, 6-8, is a deadly left-handed shooter while Mirken counts rebounding as his strongest asset. Big Mark is a hefty 6-6, 210-pounder.

The fifth starter will be either Bill Harrison or Earl Johnson, both of whom can play guard or forward.

Harrison, from Rocky Mount, is 6-3, 180 while Johnson, from Raleigh's Needham Broughton High School, is 6-5 and 205.

Jimmy Moore and Jimmy Smithwick also should see a lot of action in tonight's opener.

The Tar Babies are up against an exceptionally tough foe for their collegiate basketball baptism.

Split Two Games

Wilmington split two games with last year's edition of the UNC frosh team.

The Tar Babies, with Billy Cunningham scoring 26 points, nipped the junior college team 70-68 in an early season overtime game but dropped an 85-75 decision to the Sea Hawks in a return contest at Chapel Hill.

In that second game, Wilmington, rated 1961-62's sixth best junior college team in the country, was led by JC All-American Gene Bogash is back again this year for another crack at the Tar Babies.

Swimmers, Wrestlers Host VMI, Washington & Lee

By JOEL BULKLEY

Carolina's varsity swimmers and wrestlers open their 1962-63 seasons with action at home this afternoon.

Pat Earey's Blue Dolphins host VMI in a four o'clock meet in Bowman Gray Pool while the varsity grapplers entertain Washington and Lee in a late afternoon match in Woollen Gym. Prior to the varsity encounter, the freshman wrestlers will battle the W & L jayvees at 3 p.m.

Last year it was a first place in the final event of the day, the 400-yard freestyle relay, which gave the Tar Heels a narrow 51-43 victory over VMI in their season opener. Carolina went on to post a 7-3 record for the season, including a first place finish in the ACC meet and a second place in the overall league standings.

All-American backstroke specialist Thompson Mann, distance man Harrison Merrill, sprinter Dick Woodrow and medalist Barry King will headline Coach Earey's entry today.

This year's team, captained by Willie Bloom, is strong in depth at every position, but sorely lacks butterfly and breast stroke specialists.

Carolina's varsity wrestling team with only four returning lettermen but a host of anxious sophomores, swings into action today against the Generals of Washington & Lee. Last year the Generals drubbed Carolina 20-6 in the season opener for both clubs.

Veteran Coach Sam Barnes plans to start three seniors, three sophomores and two juniors today as the team prepares to better last year's 4-7-1 mark and a second place finish in the ACC.

Barnes is confident of a good season this year, despite the loss of his two high-scoring aces.

Both the freshman team and its coach, Joe Gratto, will be making their debut today in Chapel Hill. The team which boasts the presence of two high school champions will do battle with the Washington and Lee junior varsity.

Bill Cook, Paul Wellstone and Jack Robinson head the list of frosh hopefuls who promise to make this year's club one of the best ever.

Coach Gratto, former 157-pound national champ and three-time Eastern titlist while at Lehigh, will be handling his first match for Carolina. Gratto is working on his Ph.D. here while on a Woodrow Wilson grant.

Aycock Defends Enrollment

Chancellor William B. Aycock released a report Friday in which he expressed his approval of out-of-state enrollment at UNC. In the report, which was made at the request of President Friday, he said that those who protest against the out-of-state students are "Provincial."

He said that it is fortunate that the Board of Trustees "has taken a broader view and has formulated reasonable policies consistent with the concept of a true university. More than a hundred years ago over 40 per cent of the student body came from beyond the borders of this state. In recent years the percentage of out-fo-state students has varied from a high of 35 per cent in 1940 to as low as 20 per cent in 1955.

"Currently we have astudent body at Chapel Hill of 9,604 students. Of this number 32.5 per cent (including graduate and professional) are classified as out-of-state students for purposes of tuition charges. This percentage is in keeping with the policies of the Board of Trustees governing the admission of out-of-state students."

The Trustees' policy that Aycocks refers to is the following:

The number of entering undergraduate students that may be admitted to any campus of the University from outside the state in any semester is limited to 15 per cent of the undergraduate students admitted to that campus during the semester. Certain out-of-state applicants are expressly exempt from this limitation with the proviso that they be required to pay the regular out-o-state tuition, namely:

(a) Applicants whose place of birth was North Carolina; (b) Sons and daughters of persons born in North Carolina; (c) Sons and daughters of alumni of the University; (d) Graduate students; (e) Students from outside the United States; (f) Students admitted to schools which have been designated by the Board of Trustees to be serving a regional purpose, as follows: The Graduate School and The School of Public Health at Chapel Hill.

Aycock reported that U.N.C. admitted "412 out-of-state undergraduates this year who are subject to the quota limitation. These students constitute 15.6 per cent of the entering undergraduates.

We were pleased to read in the "New York Times" (July 1, 1962) that the University of North Carolina has "moved up to a top first-choice position" for graduates of outstanding Eastern preparatory schools." The fact that the freshman class at Chapel Hill has the highest average college boards in all the public institutions of higher learning in the state is due largely to the admission of top quality out-of-state students."

"Also, we admitted 331 non-quota out-of-state students this year. Obviously, the large alumni group of the University together with a substantial number of native North Carolinians who have moved to other states provide an increasing potential for non-quota applicants. At the same time, no qualified North Carolina resident has been denied admission to our undergraduate student body."

"The Graduate School is exempt from the quota limitation. This is as it should be. Although 43.9 per cent of our graduate students come to us from states other than North Carolina, no resident of this state who was qualified has been rejected for graduate study."

"Last year the School of Public Health had a total enrollment of 149 students. Of this number, 105 were non-North Carolinians. This School has been appropriately designated by the Board of Trustees as serving a regional purpose and exempt from any quota. I might also point out that approximately 80 per cent of the support of the School of Public Health comes from non-state sources."

"I think we should be proud of the fact that we can accommodate a substantial number of outstanding students from other states and foreign countries. Without their presence we would become an institution of lesser stature overnight. Also, it is well to remember that the University from its inception to the present owes a deep debt of gratitude to other universities who have trained not only North Carolina students but also have provided this University with a great majority of its faculty members.

"Currently there are 650 faculty members who hold the rank of Assistant Professor or higher. Of these 650, 156 grew up in North Carolina. The remaining 494 come from forty states and fifteen foreign countries. Of the 650 faculty members, 117 received their highest degree (Ph.D., M.D., LL.B.) from the University at Chapel Hill. Except for sixteen faculty members who received their highest degree at Duke University, the remainder, who constitute more than three-fourths of the current faculty, were educated in institutions of higher learning outside the State of North Carolina.

"North Carolina needs to attract competent students from beyond its borders in a variety of programs if the needs for teachers and other professional personnel are to be met in the foreseeable future.

"The present policy of the Trustees not only provides for taking care of our own but also permits a cosmopolitan student body essential to a university. To limit further out-of-state students would thwart our aspirations to become a better institution measured by national standards."

Spearman Elected Vice-President; Lawler Honored

By HARRY DELUNG
Special to the DTH

RALEIGH—State Student Legislature (SSL) yesterday resolved that abortion should be legalized and passed UNC's proposed endorsement of federal aid to education.

The mock legislative body urged the abolition of the national House Committee on Un-American Activities and capital punishment within the state.

In other action, UNC's Bob Spearman was elected vice-president of the body. UNC Vice-President Mike Lawler was voted the best speaker of the session. SSL's new president is Bill Constagny from Wake Forest.

Carolina's resolution advocating the affiliation of Southern schools with the National Student Association (NSA) passed in the House but failed in the SSL's Senate. Senators late changed their minds on the NSA bill, but an attempt for reconsideration was killed on constitutional grounds.

The SSL is an annual meeting of students from all the state's colleges and universities. UNC has 12 voting delegates.

The abortion bill, introduced by Meredith College, made the act legal if:

(1) A doctor is "convinced" that the baby will be deformed; (2) The pregnancy is the result of rape or incest; (3) The woman is of unsound mind; or (4) The pregnancy endangers the life of the woman.

The greatest controversy on UNC's aid to education resolution was an amendment denying the aid to segregated school systems. The UNC delegation unanimously opposed the amendment, which failed.

Resolutions calling for the abolishment of the Internal Security Act of 1950 and the Alien Registration Act of 1940 passed the House, but failed in the Senate. These bills were introduced by East Carolina and Duke respectively.

Nehru Rejects China Terms

NEW DELHI (UPI)—Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru Saturday rejected the Chinese Communist terms for a truce in the border war and accused Peking of trying to grab Indian territory "under cover of preliminary cease-fire arrangements."

Nehru made the accusation in a letter to Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai. Nehru was replying to Chou's note of Nov. 28 warning that if Indian troops did not withdraw as demanded by Peking the border fighting could flare again. Saturday's move raised the possibility of renewed warfare.

Communist China has insisted it was withdrawing its troops from the battle lines in compliance with its self-proclaimed truce. But Indian troops along the northeastern frontier said there was no sign of a pullback anywhere along the front.

A UPI dispatch from Texpur, Assam, said military leaders there believed Peking's announcement of a cease-fire and a withdrawal might be some sort of a hoax for political and military reasons. It said these leaders were not surprised at lack of evidence of a withdrawal.

Nehru's letter to Chou sharply questioned the Chinese truce terms which called for each side to withdraw 12½ miles behind the "line of actual control" that was in effect Nov. 7, 1959. India insists the Chinese withdraw behind the control points of Sept. 8, 1962, when the Chinese launched their current attacks.

Nehru listed five principles on which he said both India and Red China had agreed and said "withdrawal arrangements, however, that you propose behind what you refer as 'the line of actual control as of Nov. 7, 1959' are inconsistent" with these principles.

Nehru said the Chinese version of the line of actual control was really a cover for grabbing Indian territory.

"This is a definite attempt to retain under cover of preliminary cease-fire arrangements, physical possession over an area which China claims and to secure which a massive attack since 20 October 1962 was mounted by your forces."

He said the Nov. 27 Chinese cease-fire proposals were clearly aimed "at securing physical control of areas which were never under Chinese administrative control either on 7 November 1959 or at any time prior to 8 September 1962."

CHINA FILM

"The Technical and Overall Development of China Under Communism" is the film presented by the Public Affairs committee tomorrow night at 7:30 in Carroll Hall.

Following the 30-minute documentary, Dr. Yu of the Political Science department and Dr. Wang of the History department will conduct a question and answer period with the audience.

The showing is open to the public.

TO SPEAK MONDAY

Milt Rosen, chairman of the national Progressive Labor group, will speak on socialism at 8 Monday in Gerrard Hall.

The talk will be sponsored by the New Left Club, and will be open to the public. According to the New Left, Rosen will discuss what socialism is, the "method of achieving it," and "why it is necessary today in the United States."

Reviewer Applauds Shaw, Shakespeare

By DONA FAGG

A roar, a low, moaning, anguished roar, from a shaggy-maned lion rose. The usual pipe-smoking, magazine-reading, card-playing cosmopolitan crowd in Graham Memorial's main lounge was preempted Friday night for an appreciative audience at GM'c Petite Dramatique presentation of a "Smattering of Shaw and Shakespeare."

The dramatized reading of George Bernard Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion" was greeted with guffaws, titters and laughs in all the right places. The story of how a meek tailor's good turn of pulling a thorn from the paw of a lion later saved him and his fellow Christians from slaughter in the Roman arena is liberally doctored with Shaw's theological commentary. The actors in conventional street dress except for the lion's mask read their parts with understanding of both the seriousness and the humor of the subject.

Slight, blond Garth Ferguson was a believable Androcles, the meek hero. Androcles' wife Magaera was shewishly played by Judy Foster. The captain played by George Gray was properly guff and authoritative. Myles Eric Ludwig growled his way through the part of surly Spintho, whose only hope to squeeze through heaven's gates was by martyrdom.

Parts of the obnoxious hecklers Lentulus and Metellus were well handled by William McKennan and Graham Pollock. Playing both the parts of Caesar and the narrator was the director of the production Larry Warner. Fred Lubs had a double role as the centurion and the editor. Rae Smith read the part of a Christian woman.

Ferrovious, the rather dull-witted Christian who makes conversions by use of his physical strength, was aptly handled by Gordon Clark. With booming resonant voice and his large build, he was well cast. Lavinia, the intellectual patrician Christian, was read with dignity by Anita Phillips.

And the Lion? Yes, the Lion with assorted emotional growls and roars was grrr-ed by Betty Oliver.

The mood changed. The audience sank deeper into the easy chairs and divans placed in a semi-circle around two risers. Clarence Felder strode to the platform. He moved agilely from the part of King Lear to Hamlet and then to Richard II. Then removing the script, he threw himself into the part of Macbeth and the well-known "Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow" soliquy.

Felder is currently in rehearsal for the part of Macbeth as a guest artist at the Goldsboro Neighborhood Playhouse. No longer was he just a portly figure in a mismatched, rumpled suit. With his hair falling in his eyes, he became the tormented Macbeth seeing Birnam Wood march up Dunsinane.

Finding an enthusiastic audience, Felder shared a favorite William Saroyan story, "Fable Number Nine" and was greeted by appreciative laughter and applause.

Felder ended his performance with a scene from the "Tempest."

Council To Hear UP Election Argument

The Constitutional Council will meet Monday at 4:30 p.m. in Graham Memorial to hear an appeal from the University Party on the ruling of the Elections Board that upheld the election of Jack Harrell as Freshman class president.

The Constitutional Council has sole jurisdiction over matters involving the legality of the Student Constitution. The Elections Board decided earlier that the Election Law governs only those elections provided for in the law itself, thereby deciding that election procedures in the law did not cover the Freshman class re-election. The University Party then decided to exercise its Constitutional privilege and appeal the decision.

The chairman of the Men's Council, Walter Dellinger, is the chairman of the Constitutional Council. Three members from each of the Men's and Women's Councils comprise the remainder of the Council. Bev Haynes, Bev Griffin and Carolyn Pinion are the members representing the Women's Council. Whitney Durand, Bryan Simpson, and Grant Wheeler are those from the Men's Council. These members were selected in a special joint session of the two Councils last Thursday night.

The meeting will be open to all students.

College Editors Under Fire At Ole Miss, UCLA, Alabama

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (CBS)—The impending admission of a Negro, under federal court order, to the University of Alabama has precipitated an unprecedented campaign in this state to avoid the violence surounding a similar incident at the University of Mississippi earlier this year.

Many prominent civic leaders of Alabama have joined in demanding that the state prevent any reoccurance of the outbreak of violence that acompanied the university's short-lived desegregation in 1956.

As in the case at the University of Mississippi, the Governor-elect of Alabama, George C. Wallace, has pledged that he will defy federal authority in any attempt to integrate the university. Recently, however, he has made statements to the effect that he will not "encourage" violence, and this is interpreted as a reflection of the effectiveness of the anti-violence campaign.

The emotion surrounding the Mississippi affair has, however, already led to an incident at the University of Alabama.

Melvin Meyer, editor of the Alabama student newspaper, the Crimson and White, published an editorial condemning the actions of Mississippi governor Ross Barnett, saying there was no moral or legal justification for Barnett's actions. He wrote "the basis of the democratic system is equality before the law, and the system is but a mockery if the laws are to extend only to a portion of the citizenry."

Meyer has received anonymous telephone calls threatening his life. One warned him that if he hid not leave town in 24 hours, he would "leave in a pine box." Two nights later, a cross was burned in front of the 20-year old editor's fraternity house, Zet Beta Tau.

The 131-year old school has had no Negroes in its student body since Arthurine Lucy, its first, was expelled in 1956 after attending three days of classes. She was expelled by the Board of Trustees for making "outrageous, false, and baseless accusations against the university. Her enrollment was surrounded by outbursts of violence.

In the years since, a few Negroes have applied to the school, but none have been accepted, on grounds that their applications were incomplete. A further Negro application, which the university apparently expects to be complete, was filed this year.

The university Board of Trustees has passed a resolution expressing "determination" that law and order will prevail at Alabama in such an event. Significantly, the resolution was proposed by an arch-segregationist on the board.

The real question mark in Alabama today is the tack that the Governor-elect will take. Due to take office in January, Wallace has vowed to maintain segregation at the university, in much the same fashion as Gov. Barnett of Mississippi. He has said that he will "stand in the classroom door" if necessary to preserve the system.

Ole Miss

OXFORD, MISS. (Special To The DTH) — The Campus Senate of the University of Mississippi will vote Monday on a resolution to both reprimand and commend the actions of Miss Sidna Browder, Editor of the Mississippian, student newspaper at Ole Miss.

The resolution, introduced a week ago by a campus senator and menber of the Patriotic American Youth group, criticizes Miss Browder for allegedly not carrying the full story of the September 31st riots and commends her for opposing the use of violence in the ensuing days.

In her comment on the riots, she stated that they were the fault of the students, not the Federal marshals.

The bill referred to a committee which changed the original wording of the bill and then approved it before returning it to the senate where it will be acted upon tomorrow.

FIRING DEFEATED

LOS ANGELES (CPS) — A motion to fire the editor of the UCLA Daily Bruin was defeated last week by the UCLA Student Legislative Council.

The motion said, in part, that the council was "disgusted with the quality of the paper and its editor's failure to improve the paper."

The motion also accused Daily Bruin editor Al Rothstein of "numerous serious mistakes" in the paper, decline in quality of the paper, and decline in the number of new staff members, "without whose support the future of the Daily Bruin is in serious jeopardy."

Rothstein charged that the accusations were "completely false" and interpreted the defeat of the motion as a vote of confidence in the paper and his editorship. The UCLA student government, unlike most schools where intermediary boards are in charge of student publications, is in direct control of the student newspaper.

No Time Like Present For Evil And Sin

For those who think our student generation is hopelessly immoral and lost to all things good and true; for those who think there are not even a few young people who are upright and right-thinking, the following incident should be of some interest.

Last Sunday night, returning to Chapel Hill after the Thanksgiving holidays, we were listening to the radio about 10 p.m. In changing from station to station we stuck on the voice of a bellowing young man who sounded struck with the fear of God and so we listened. He was talking about how the earth had been cleansed of all evil several times before (the Flood, etc.) and how there was no time like the present for such goings-on, and all that.

Then he got down to specifics. He said youth was immoral; we went along with that peaceably enough. He said there was no hope; and that sounded reasonable. But then—a sparkle of joy came into his voice.

"Down in Asheville, N. C. a group of young students at Lee Edwards High School are proving that not all of their generation is interested in wordly pleasures," he said. A local theater had constantly showed "lewd and degenerate films. And this group of students organized to protest against these films. The youth spoke where their parents were too timid."

And another case—in Greensboro the board of education banned all high school social clubs. "At several of the parties and wild affairs sponsored by these social clubs," the radio man said, "there had been drinking and several boys were seen drunk. In the girls' clubs it is known that sexual immorality was encouraged."

The inspiring lesson went on for several more minutes and then ended, in a panicked crescendo, "Our generation must be saved from the destruction and judgment that is surely coming to us soon." (An exact quote.)

No one who heard the radio program has been able to sleep soundly since, knowing of the perverse evils which are encompassing our generation. We know it's true—because the radio speaker was Billy Graham, on his nationwide "Hour of Decision." And Billy is never wrong. (JC)

Dear Barry . . .

Barry Goldwater
U.S. Senate
Washington, D. C.
(Home of Deficit Spending)
Dear Honorable Senator:

We, meek souls that we are, always have thought you to be a major political personage, above the more petty snipings of American politics.

Alas. Recent events have proven us mistaken.

Not too long ago a writer for the Colorado Daily, a most humble college newspaper, saw fit to call you a number of fairly silly names, such as "murderer." When we first heard of this, we thought to ourselves, "Surely Sen. Goldwater will ignore this silly attack."

Instead, you wrote a letter to the Univ. of Colorado president demanding he fire the editor—and in subsequent weeks, you parlayed the silly little article into a major national news story. The fired was subsequently fired—thank goodness—and your name is safe from the danger of being internationally disgraced by the Colorado Daily.

We were sad over your being concerned over such matters, but we figured, "Sen. Goldwater is a prominent man, he must be very careful about what people say about him—particularly what the politically influential Colorado Daily says about him." But then something else happened.

A writer for the Daily Illini at the Univ. of Illinois wrote an article questioning your claim to be the most American of Americans. With just wrath you immediately wrote a letter demanding the Illinois editor be fired—unfortunately Illinois has not acted promptly on your demand, but we are sure they will come around to reason.

Now, we hope, you will turn your mighty attentions to other college publications — perhaps demanding the dismissal of every college editor who criticizes your most honorable policies and personage. For the good of the Nation, these influential collegiates must not be left on the loose—they must be removed from the public sector where they have obstructed the path of the mighty Arizona Senator.

Perhaps, when you are done with the college sector, you might investigate some of these incendiary high school newspapers. There are some pretty radical thoughts coming out of these teenagers these days . . . .

Sincerely,
Your friendly

Ignorance

It had momentarily appeared that things were under control in Mississippi. That is to say, the students weren't rioting, Barnett wasn't on campus, and matters were being placed in the hands of respected judicial officials. Mississippi seemed to be functioning in a manner not too removed from accepted standards.

But then a grand jury, in a swell county called Lafayette, chose to uphold the "ole miss" tradition, and under the leadership of a W. M. O'Barr demonstrated to the world that a great deal of ignorance still holds forth in that amazing state. (CW)

Indian Conditions: Very Bad

(Eds. Note: Mr. Range is a former UNC student, now studying abroad. This is the second in a series of articles to be sent from India.)

DHARWAR, INDIA — A little girl steps into the train car. About ten years old, dressed in filthy rags, her hair hanging in caked, dirty strands around her neck, the child is emaciated and thin, her face lifeless and hard. She drags her little sister of half as many years with her to the middle of the commuter train first-class coach and begins singing in a mournful, harsh, high voice. Every now and then she pushes the tiny sister down onto her knees and face in a salaam to the onlookers. Through three train stops she sings, gazing about in the air, her expression never changing its dull and dying nature. Occasionally the younger child picks up the chant in her tiny, not-yet-harsh voice, rending the heart of the unconditioned watcher of this spectacle. Then the two go slowly to each passenger, extending a hungry hand, then tapping the forehead quickly in the traditional beggar's plea, mumering "baba" and "haye paise" in the appeal for alms. At most every fifth passenger drops one to ten naye paise into their hands (equivalent to less than 2c).

A few minutes later a woman bearing the same lifeless eyes and hardened features plys through the car begging, her naked baby on her hip, her small son salaaming on the dirty floor at the passengers' feet. And in the course of the thirty-minute train ride from suburban Bombay into the city's center a passing parade of half-naked, scrawny, bearded beggars beseeches the more fortunate for a few naye paise.

In the commercial center of Bombay a shabbily-dressed man is lying on the sidewalk, rolling about a little, moaning as though in pain — suddenly he begins pulling his long hair and his limbs jerk, as though in convulsions. Nothing is strange about the sight, the passers-by take no more notice than to avoid stepping on the fellow. In this case, one could see that he was probably faking the whole act—alms-begging can be a good business, hence the false show. Had the beggar actually died, however, no one would have done anything. Only when a policeman had finally arrived, would the corpse have been removed.

The trains through the country stop very frequently. At every station many small, cheerless children windows, their doleful eyes pitifully pleading for a few pennies. A blind man or an amputee fumbles his way into the coach and squats on the floor at your feet. He opens a gaily-patterned wooden box, revealing a stringed instrument with a small, piano-like keyboard. For fifteen minutes he deftly picks out the high, mysterious rhythms of Indian music, attracting those in the third-class carriage. His meager hand receives more than that of the beggar who simply asks for unearned alms. Despite railroad rules forbidding the practice, beggars board all trains, ride a few stations with one, take another one back, going back and forth several times per day without purchasing a ticket. Only occasionally can an official bring himself to throwing them out.

Passing out of the train station a beturbaned and bearded old fellow tugs at your sleeve, asking: "You want a fortune-teller, sir?" Without awaiting an answer he proceeds to discourse on some family trouble you have been having or a supposed trip you are to be taking shortly; if not stopped or deserted right away these phonies feel they have every right to exact a fee from the listener.

Even in the small town, such as Dharwar, where we are the only foreigners among 75,000 Indians, beggary runs rampant. Along almost every other street some gaunt, ghost of a body lies in the dust with his beggar's bowl before him. Haggard women, almost invariably carrying small babies, hover around the stopped buses, pleading for help in their misery. Bent old men go from shop to shop, holding out their bowls to owners and customers alike. Some more energetic beggars sit in the market place, performing antics and chants in praise of the gods and of mankind.

Among most Indians, especially those of the very low and middle classes, there is a good deal of sympathy for beggars, and they try to give them a few pennies now and again. Thus the beggars, who are generally outcastes, unwed mothers, or physicially disabled persons, can usually make from $.25 to $.75 per day, or the same of an Indian construction worker.

This continued sympathy and alms-giving simply frustrates the government's intention to eradicate beggary. The amount of money indescriminantly handed out by the public each year could be much better used if channeled through a single government agency to provide for the undertrodden of the society. The beggars, however, like begging better and refuse to enter those quarters which the government has provided for them in some cities.

And it marches on. The most pitiful sight is that of the readfully deformed man, whose bent legs come across his back to touch the ground by his shoulders, lying in the dirt outside his little mud hut on the edge of town. Even out here in the University quarters, beggars arrive. Two holy men, decorously decked with cheap, heavy jewelry and colorful turbans, stand chanting at the door until dismissed with a coin. An ageless, gray, gossamer-like man sits down on the porch with a low, round basket before him. He removes the top and, really and truly, a "charmed" cobra raises its swollen head straight into the air as if out of an ancient fairytale, gazing sleepily at his awed audience.

India's problems are many and great. Indeed the direst ones lie not on the North East Frontier, but deep within India's own, undisputed boundaries.

Wade Wellman

Class Equality Caused Democracy's Failure

(Editor's Note: This is the third and final part of Mr. Wellman's series on "The Quintessence of Fascism.")

Having dealt with authority as the offspring of duty, we may come to the offspring of authority, which constitutes the third main principle of Fascism: that of law.

Law may be basically defined as the protection of private rights from group molestation, or of community rights from the menace of an irresponsible individual or minority; and its need develops from the hostility of a man's social environment and his own reciprocal hostility to the community. Authority must enforce duty, and law is the means of enforcement. And law must originate from the governing body and not from the general population — for the mass of people, if trusted to direct the making of their own laws, simply bog down in a welter of conflicting aims, the plutocrats seeking to hold all their amassed privileges, the poor seeking to become plutocrats. Lawmaking should be entrusted to a body of legislators who know in full the needs of the people they represent, and can decide exactly what is necessary for the welfare of their constituents. And this brings us to the main practical failure of democratic government — the fallacy of district representation.

Of all the errors of modern democracy, none is so regrettable or so tragically wasteful as this practice of choosing legislators to represent geographical localities. In American democracy a Congressman numbers among his constituents farmers, plumbers, carpenters, factory employees, business tycoons, bankers, and even college professors. How can he possibly be expected to keep all their varied needs before him? His task becomes a hopeless job of simply doing anything and everything to be re-elected. Since the interests of his district are not clearly defined, the best that he can do is look to his own interests, and at once the distinction between his interests and the welfare of his district becomes apparent. He relies on opinion polls, conflicting mail from voters, and sometimes on pure guesswork, and often votes against his conscience to please a powerful interest. Thus, instead of statesmen thinking of the needs of the group, we have politicians thinking of their own needs in the absence of a sharply delineated group. And, since our system of district representation makes it impossible for members of any professional group to send a representative of their occupation to Congress, we have, instead, lobbyists, who attempt to advance the different blocs by bribery and other means. This is the worst of all the faults of working democracy, and it has created the painful situation in which the public mind invariably connects politics with unscrupulous dealing and takes "politician" to be a synonym for "dirty crook."

The Fascist state remedies this by means of a parliament in which the members represent, not geographical areas, but trades and professions. In this system the representative knows exactly what unit he is responsible for and does not waste his energy in conciliating a heterogenous mass of workers and aristocrats who have nothing in common except the latitude and longitude of the map. Furthermore, instead of a President who can be pushed around and overruled, thwarted and harassed by a Congressional majority of two-thirds, the Fascist state appoints a strong and authoritative leader whose will is not subject to the whims of another branch of government. Thus the Fascist state removes another headache so common to democracy — the depressing spectacle of a government crippled by conflicting views in Congress and the White House. If disagreements arise within the Fascist government, the ruler can assert his authority and effect his own wishes. In our system disagreements have been known to tie up the Congressional machinery in filibusters, an impossibility under Fascism.

Briefly put, democracy has failed because it insists that society should be organized on a basis of equality, without visible classes. Fascism realizes that classes are a necessary consequence of the differing abilities and interests of men; that men have evil impulses and must be restrained; and that realism must come before sentimentalism. During World War II the western plutocrats allied themselves with Communism to defeat the aspirations of Mussolini (which Hitler distorted and exaggerated for his purposes). But the new Europe now taking form may perhaps revive these ideals, which still retain a firm hold on the rationalism of western man.

DTH Discussion 'Deep, Revealing'

To the Editors,

Recent letters to the editor give me the impression that the editorial column is under attack. I would thus like to offer some defense.

This year I have been very much impressed with the fact that controversial, timely, and even heated discussions have been appearing both in the editorial column and in the Letters to the Editors. For a long time I have been concerned with the apathy of college students, including my own. The very revealing and deep discussions on current issues which take place between editors and students, and between students, via the DTH, makes me very proud of this university society.

In regard to extreme statements that are sometimes made (if indeed they are extreme), there seems to be no shortage of ready retorts and criticisms. The DTH thus seems to be valid proving ground for any such extreme idea in true Hegelian fashion.

Also the recent topic of Academic Freedom has some relevance in this present issue.

Edits Provide Humor, Satire

To the Editors,

Concerning the N. C Magazine—who needs this supplement when we at Carolina are fed the "real thing" daily in your editorials? Honestly, fellows, you under-estimate yourselves. The loss of the "high quality humor and satire" you bemoan drips stickily from the hasty pens of "—The Editors" with nearly every editorial effort. Pray sirs, do not dilute such masterworks of "humor and satire" as the "Minute for Meredith" howl. Especially droll was the series (three, or was it four columns?) devoted to explaining — with a dictionary, no less — how we at U.N.C. flagrantly misdefine the political terms "liberal" and "conservative." So, actually, men like Barry G. are liberal, or is it J.F.K. who's conservative? What an amusing riddle!

Of course, the best laugh yet was your Dirty Dick Nixon rib-tickler. That gem is hanging from my wall to this day. I still chuckle over the way you set us up for that one — stating straight faced, and with great innocence, that you always intend to eidtorialize only issues "vital" to U.N.C., and then (clever you!) hitting us with that "Pray for Brown" punch line. I'll never forget that one. Never.

I'll quiver for a long while yet over your latest, the follow-up to that eye moistening obituary for the N. C. Magazine. Did you really intend to "feel out" student opinion with an obituary? Truely amusing! Keep up the "good work."

Christmas Celebration

As the Christmas season rolls around again and I compile my Christmas list, I am reminded of what I wrote a year ago about celebrating Christmas — "Don't ever stop celebrating Christmas, or the Christmas spirit is the spirit of love and Giving."

Some time after that article came out in the paper, I met a retired couple who seemed to be very close (stingy). She was always saying she wasn't going to pay the price for this and that. She said she had the money, but she wasn't going to pay for things she thought were too high priced. I said to him one day, "Your wife must be a Scotswoman." He said she was the first generation of her family from Scotland born in this country.

The time was a few days before Christmas Day. The madame remarked that she thought giving presents to grown people was silly, that Christmas was for children.

I could imagine them, waking up Christmas morning, no Christmas tree, no decorations, no Santa Claus, and nothing to do, while everyone else was celebrating the joyous season, but to look at each other, and wonder why Christmas was ever invented. I have a suspicion that she didn't want to spend any money on Christmas "foolery."

Catching the Christmas spirit is like what an old widower said once (no, he wasn't making love to me) — "That you might get too old to be loved, but you never get too old to love." And I might add, you never get too old to want to be loved and remembered, especially at Christmas time.

Bill Snider, not withstanding, Christmas is for everybody!

COLLEGE ROUNDUP:

'Underground' Discovered At University Of Nebraska

LINCOLN, Neb. (CPS) — Four students at the University of Nebraska have been suspended from school for an "indefinite" period of time, charged with participating in "sub-rosa" or secret factional organizations on the campus. Dean of Student Affairs, G. Robert Ross, ordered the suspensions following an "extensive investigation" of the activities of the secret groups.

The groups, named as Pi Xi, Theta Nu Epsilon, and Rho Delta, were accused of breaking state laws and the university code. Among those cited were: creation of suspicion among faculty and students, division of groups within student government, dishonesty and vandalism, unlawful consumption of alcoholic beverages, and failure to assume responsibility for acts or statements.

Ross said the groups, composed primarily but not totally of Greeks, had banned together in an attempt to infiltrate campus groups and offices, using deceitful means to gain positions of power on the campus. The power thus gained was used to personal advantage, often to the detriment of the student group so subverted, the Dean said. The groups are secret, and members will not admit to membership.

Ross, commenting on the action, said "The opposition of the University to such groups is based on their violation of the fundamental concept of American democracy, their incompatibility with the methods the University employs in its search for truth and knowledge and in its efforts to support the maximum development of personal integrity."

OHIO VOTES SPEAKER BAN DOWN

COLUMBUS, O. (CPS) — Following hours of heated argument resulting in two delegate walkouts and a fight, the Ohio State University Student Senate last week voted to request the school's administration to remove a ban imposed on speakers with "undesireable affiliations or associations."

The proposal was passed by the student group 20-5, with two abstentions. The opposition to the motion was led by the Young Republicans Club.

DRIVE FOR VOLUNTEERS

NEW YORK (CPS) — A "private Peace Corps" formed last year by Young Americans to aid Latin America has opened a recruitment drive for volunteers from U. S. campuses.

The group, called Accion (Action), has isued a call for 40 volunteers to go to Venezuela in February. Forty Venezuelans are being recruited to work with the Americans in community development projects. ACCION has opened a New York office at 39 E. 51th St. to facilitate its volunteer drive in the East as well as the West, where the organization began.

Volunteers of the ACCION program must be "mature, independent, and self-reliant," able to work with little supervision in backward areas. A knowledge of Spanish is desireable for volunteers, but not necessary. Volunteers are paid enough to cover living expenses and transportation. The usual stint in Venezuela is about 18 months.

Accion currently has a number of volunteers working in Venezuela, to be augmented by the new force now being recruited. Twelve community centers have already been built by the volunteers, and a number of projects undertaken.

Accion is a private, volunteer agency without government financial support. It began in California, financed by businessmen, and to date has drawn most of its volunteers from California and New Mexico schools.

Polish War Film Slated At Sunday Cinema Tonight

The G.M. Sunday Cinema tonight will be "Kanal," or "Sewers." Showings will be at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

"Kanal" is the first film of Poland's Wajda to be shown in the U.S. Though it won the Grand Prix at Cannes in 1956, it was considered too uncommercial for American audiences. John Compton, chairman of the Graham Memorial Films Committee expalined that there has probably never been a more vivid and grisly movie portrayal of the "War Is Hell" theme.

The film depicts the fate of a group of Poles who participated, futilely but bravely, in the Warsaw uprising against the German army in 1944. A good portion of the film deals with the group's attempt to escape the pursuing Nazis by traveling through the sordid sewers of Warsaw, and the ultimate, unhappy, fate of each.

Bills that failed included a tobaco tax proposed by Duke women, and a bill which would have denied racial segregation in any institution which received a license from the state.

N. C. State College introduced a successful bill which would allow periodic visits in state prisons by the prisoners' wives. The bill stated that "the sexual void caused by prison life . . . helps breed homosexuality behind bars . . ." This bill also allowed for more liberal visting rules for prisoners.

Tar Heels Win Opener Over Bulldogs, 89-65

Poteet And Shaffer Lead UNC Scorers

By HARRY W. LLOYD

North Carolina turned to its most experienced hands here last night in its long awaited basketball opener to crush the Georgia Bulldogs by 89-65.

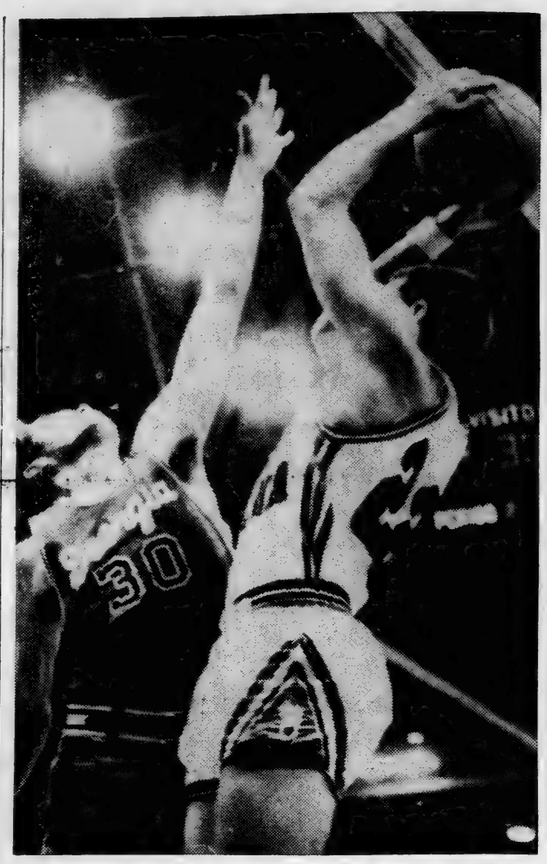
It was the returning corps of veterans, and not the highly rated sophomores, that supplied the power for coach Smith's Tar Heels.

Senior guard Yogi Poteet, returning after a year's absence, started the season off with a boom by scoring 21 points. Charlie Shaffer stuffed in 20 and Larry Brown tallied 17.

After a near runaway in the first half by the Tar Heels, the game turned into a more wide open affair in the second period, with North Carolina unable to increase its lead by any substance and the Georgians unable to hack any of it away.

The 4,800 persons who packed into Woollen Gym saw the Tar Heels turn to a running game in rolling up an early margin against the Bulldogs. They pressed hard in the man-to-man defense, often made away with valuable steals, and paried them into easy layups.

The fast breaking Tar Heels rolled in six points before the Bulldogs were able to get off a shot, and were never in trouble as they built a 50-36 first half lead. Larry Brown hit first with a pair of free shots after 19 seconds, Billy Cunningham scored from close in, and Yogi Poteet threaded the needle with a long jumper before the visitors were able to get their bearings.



Billy Rado, a transistor-sized package at guard, was all that kept the Bulldogs in the game during the opening period. Rado, a sophomore from Connecticut, hit from both outside and inside with consistency in scoring 13 during the half.

Billy Cunningham, the highly rated spohomore for Carolina, was the victim of tight guarding, excessive fouling, and the usual first game jitters. Cunningham was jerked from the game in the first half after getting three fouls, and only scored six points for the night. But the Brooklyn boy proved his worth in another way by pulling down 15 rebounds, high for the game.

Ccoring:

UNC (89)—Brown 17, Respess 8, Cunningham 6, Poteet 21, Shaffer, 20, Krause 1, Cooke 12, Galanti 2, Taylor 2, Callahan, Katz, Brown, Burns, Bowers, Vinroot.

Georgia (65)—Rado 24, Bagby 4, Adamek 11, Gill 10, Morris 3, Pitts 2, Matthews 5, Crenshaw 6, Stith, Cheek, Ackerman.

Cook Goes Up For Score

Frosh Get Win By 74-52

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Coach Ken Rosemond took the wraps off his fine freshman basketball team last night and the Tar Babies responded with a convincing 74-52 rout of Wilmington College.

Bob Bennett and Mark Mirken, the two big boys in Rosemond's lineup, were the chief cogs in North Carolina's offensive attack.

Mirken, a 6-6 210-pounder from Brooklyn, N. Y., led the frosh scoring with 18 points and, with the 6-8 Bennett, completely dominated both backboards. Mark got 17 rebounds. Bennett also scored well, adding 14 to the Carolina total. He contributed eight rebounds.

Both Mirken and Bennett scored heavily on tap-ins and short jumpers against the surprisingly-weak Sea Hawks from Wilmington.

Wilmington, completely outclassed from the beginning, was down 35-24 at the half and was all but run off the court at the outset of the second period.

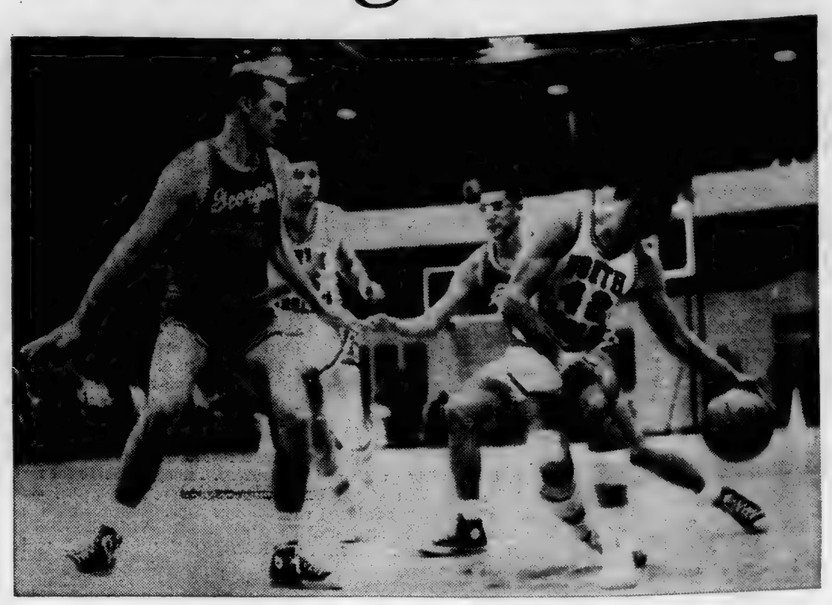
At that time, the Tar Babies ran off 16 points interrupted only by two hook shots from Wilmington's Gene Bogash.

Bennett contributed two tap-ins and a lay-up and Mirken added two close-in jumpers to the UNC streak.

With Carolina up by 51-28, Martoshall Hamilton and Bogash put in back-to-back jumpers but Mirken came right back with four straight points, two free throws sandwiched around a spectacular twisting lay-up.

This made the margin 23 points and Wilmington never recovered.

First Half Close



The first half was fairly close up until the 9:40 mark when again Mirken got UNC rolling.

With the Tar Babies leading it, 23-19, the Big Bear hit a 15-foot jumper, Earl Johnson put in another one-hander, and Bennett rebounded a Ray Hassell shot. This finished the Sea Hawks for good.

Swift guard Johnny Yokley just missed double figures for the frosh, hitting four field goals and one free throw for nine points.

Mirken was eight for 16 from the field and Bennett, six for nine.

Wilmington's Bogash was the game's high man with 19. He also corralled 13 rebounds.

UNC's Shaffer Moves Into Position

Staubach Is Star Back As Navy Wallops Army For Fourth Straight Year, 34-14

PHILADELPHIA (UPI)—Navy's Roger (Starback) Staubach took the play away from PT boat skipper John F. Kennedy when he scored two touchdowns and passed for two more to torpedo Army, 34-14.

Dominating the service classic completely in the bright sunshine which flooded sprawling, ampacked Philadelphia Stadium, the sensational sophomore almost singlehandedly sank the outclassed cadets in a game which had been rated a tossup.

There were plenty of Annapolis honors to go around before a crowd of 102,000 awed fans—98,453 of them paid — who included President Kennedy, General Maxwell D. Taylor, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and a happy admiral, Chief of Naval Operations George W. Anderson.

For the white-hatted naval brigade roared lusty praise of Staubach's two pin-pointed receivers, Neil Henderson and Nick Markoff, as well as a Ron Klemichto-Jim Campbell touchdown combo; Vern Von Sydow's extra point-placements; the outstanding defensive work of Pat Donnelly—and the out-of-the end zone center snap by Army which gave Navy their first two points for a safety.

There was little for the corps of crushed cadets to whoop about as Navy's Wayne Hardin became the first Middie coach to defeat the Army four straight years and it was a victory which may have saved his job as well after being in hot water all season because of loquacity.

Cammy Lewis was Army's chief consolation as his passing set up one touchdown, which was buffeted over from the one by Don Parcells, and acounted for the second with a two-yard heave to John Seymour.

Tankers Top VMI By 70-25

By JOEL BULKLEY

Carolina's Blue Dolphins set two school freestyle marks yesterday as they recorded nine first places in a 70-25 win over VMI in the Bowman Gray Pool.

Sophomore whiz Harrison Merrill smashed the 220-yard freestyle record with a time of 1:52.7. The old record for both UNC and the ACC of 1:53.6 was set by Harry Bloom in February of 1961.

Dick Woodrow knocked one-tenth of a second off the school record for the 50-yard freestyle event with a time of 22.7 seconds. Bill Roth held the old one, which was set in 1957.

The Tar Heel swimmers wheeled off firsts in the day's first six events before finishing second in the 100-yard freestyle. They then won the 200-yard backstroke, 500 freestyle and 400 freestyle relay.

Carolina wheeled off firsts in the day's first six events. The team of Thompson Mann, Tate Kemper, Harry Schiffman and Thad Adams copped the 400-yard medley relay. Merrill took the 200-yard freestyle and Woodrow the 50-yard event, with Howard Cone of UNC finishing third. Barry King and Jack Anker were first and second in the 200-yard individual medley while Ernie Oare and Bob Birkenstock were one-two in the diving competition. Captain Willie Bloom won the butterfly event while Dave Roberts finished second.

VMI's Bill Rimm and Bernie Vincent took the visitors' only first places with wins in the 100-yard freestyle and 200-yard breaststroke.

Russell Redding and Jim Huffman were first and second in the backstroke contest, while Frank Lea and Mike Bissell finished the same way in the 20-lap (500-yard) freestyle race.

The 400-yard freestyle relay team, whose win in last year's meet gave Carolina a narrow victory over VMI, won the last event of the afternoon. Team members were Scott Smiley, Joseph Mummaw, Woodrow and Aevlia.

Coach Earey's 21-man squad leaves Monday afternoon for a 6:30 p.m. meet in Greenville with East Carolina. They return home for ACC meets Friday and Saturday with Clemson and South Carolina, respectively.

Cavaliers Blank Rutgers By 41-0

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J. (UPI)—Virgina unleashed a devastating ground attack Saturday to bury Rutgers 41-0 and snap the Scarlet's consecutive-game scoring streak at 53 games.

A crowd of 16,500, sitting in warm sunshine at the late-morning game in Rutgers Stadium, saw the home team absorb its worst loss since a 48-6 defeat at the hands of Colgate in 1956. It was Rutgers' first shutout defeat since the Scarlet bowed, 7-0, to Princeton in the first game of the 1957 season.

Virginia, on the other hand, scored its first shutout since an 18-0 victory over VMI in the 1956 opener and tallied its most points since a 49-8 rout of Richmond in 1952.

Russia Begins Shipping Jets Out Of Cuba

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Russia has shipped out of Cuba the first three of "more than 30" obsolescent IL28 jet bombers whose presence on the island helped to create the Cuban crisis, it was announced Monday.

The withdrawal, disclosed by the Defense Department, begins to fulfill a promise President Kennedy extracted from Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev in mid-November after Russia's far more lethal arsenal of balistic missiles was removed from Cuba.

Detection of the missiles and the 525-mile an hour bombers by U. S. reconnaissance planes caused the world crisis in mid-October and led to the full-scale mobilization of American military power. Kennedy said in an Oct. 22 speech to the nation that the "offensive" weapons be removed from the island.

Agreed to Missile Removal

Confronted by the display of American power and a quarantine of Cuba, Khrushchev quickly agreed to remove his missiles and last month the U. S. government satisfied itself that the 42 rockets were on the high seas aboard Soviet ships.

There was haggling over the bombers, which are an obsolescent type designed about 15 years ago, but on Nov. 20 Kennedy told a news conference Khrushchev finally had agreed to pull them out within 30 days.

Assistant Defense Secretary Arthur Sylvester said Monday that the bombers "are in the process of being withdrawn."

He made public a photograph made by U. S. aircraft showing the fuselages of three planes identified as IL28s lashed on the deck of the Soviet ship Okhotsk. The vessell was said to be proceeding along the northern coast of Cuba when the picture was made Dec. 1.

Reports Plane Dismantling

At the same time, Sylvester reported, the government has gathered information showing that IL28s are being dismantled at the San Julian air field on the western tip of Cuba. The information presumabliy was gathered by aerial reconnnaissance.

When the presence of the light jet bombers first was announced, the Defense Department said there were more than 20 on the island—at least some still in crates. Monday the Pentagon said there were "more than)0."

The IL28 ha sa range of about 750 miles and presumably could carry a nuclear bomb since it has a bombload capacity estimated at more than three tons.

But the bomber would be no match for the high-performance supersonic interceptors and anti-aircraft missiles that the United States moved into the southeast United States nad into the waters around Cuba.

Salinger Raps Magazine For Cuba Story

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House took angry issues Monday with a published report that Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson preferred "political negotiation" over a quarantine in dealing with the Soviet missile build-up in Cuba.

"I can state flatly," said Press Secretary Pierre Salinger, ". . . that Ambassador Stevenson strongly supported the decision taken by the President on the quarantine and brilliantly developed the United States position at the United Nations during the days which followed."

The statement, cleared by the President and prepared under his advice, was in reply to an article in the Saturday Evening Post written by Washington Editor Stewart Alsop and reporter-columnist Charles Barlett—the latter an intimate friend of the President.

Stevenson said on leaving the White House this morning that he had not read the article carefully, "but I've read it enough to find five inaccuracies in rapid succession."

Attended Session

As U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Stevenson attended a White House session of the National Security Council Executive Committee Monday. He told reporters that Kennedy brought up the subject of the Post article and said a statement would be issued.

The Alsop-Bartlett report said Stevenson had favored a trade in which U.S. missile bases would be withdrawn from Turkey, Italy and Britain in exchange for withdrawal of Russian bases in Cuba. It said the ambassador disagreed with the consensus of the Security Council Executive Committee that the best solution was a quarantine.

Both the article and Kennedy's relations with Bartlett came in for frequently emotional discussion at Salinger's office. The press secretary opened with this statement:

"Proceedings of the National Security Council have been secret since its founding in 1947 and will continue to be. The various positions of members of the NSC taken during deliberations must also remain secret in order to permit access by the President to the frankest expression of views.

Played Key Role

"I can state flatly, however, that Ambassador Stevenson strongly supported the decision taken by the President on the quarantine and brilliantly developed the United States position at the United Nations during the days which followed. He also played the key role in the negotiations at the U.N. on the Cuban matter."

Asked if Stevenson would continue as ambassador to the world body, Salinger said, "there is absolutely no question about it." Queried as to whether Kennedy is "happy" with Stevenson, he said: "If he was not happy with him, do you think he would keep him there."

Khrushchev Criticizes As 'Absurd' Jazz Music And Abstract Paintings

MOSCOW (UPI) — Hundreds of Muscovites jammed into an art exhibit Monday to see the abstract paintings denounced as "absurd" by Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev.

The painting remained in the Central Exhibition Hall and there was no indication they would be removed.

Khrushchev's critcisms appeared to have stimulated interest in the exhibition. An overflow crowd crammed into the hall to view the abstracts and to argue heatedly whether they were a form of art or just "horrors." Reaction was mixed.

More than 500 persons crowded around the entrance of the hall where a special detail of police let them in a few at a time.

Among the paintings which had caused the greatest stir was "The Nude" by R. F. Falk, which was painted in 1922, and "The Geologists" painted by R. F. Nikonov in 1961.

The Soviet press backed up Khrushchev's ridicule of modern abstract art and turned it into an appeal for a return to realism that would serve the cause of Communism.

Izvestia, the official government newspaper warned that abstract art does not conform to Communist "realism." The official Communist party newspaper Pravda echoed the art criticism and also assailed the "Jazz mania" and criticized composers and musicians who copy "cheap western music."

Pravda printed a cartoon showing a donkey switching paint on a canvas with its tail. Khrushchev, when he visited the art exhibit Saturday, told painters and sculptors that their works were so obscure they looked as if they were "daubed with the tail of an ass."

The criticism of the jazz craze were made by Pravda music critic N. Alexandrov. He said young composers are suffering "regretful setbacks . . . by substituting genuine creativeness for backwork . . . by thoughtless imitation of the West."

H said numerous jazz bands in the Soviet Union "have set for their aim the imitation of foreign artists and exclusively cheap western music."

Alexsandrov said popular music which should be rooted in the native musical culture of bygone year, "should now be given more attention than at any previous time by both public and critics." He refered to the "squeals and bangs" frequently heard in local youth clubs and cafes and complained that young Russians copy American jazz standards "like slaves."

Most clubs opened in recent years feature small combos, often made up of young musicians who play without pay.

Western observers speculated that Pravda's attack may signal tightening of party control on art and music—despite the apparent new swing to greater literary freedom.

Norstead Says NATO Is Still Lacking

PARIS (UPI) — Allied supreme commander Gen. Lauris Norstead warned anew Monday there are shortages and deficiencies in the forces under his command and a "critical defense gap" in Western Europe.

There has been substantial if not dramatic progress in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) buildup in Europe since the Berlin crisis a year ago, he said, to qualify his charge.

"Our force looked at in the political and military context, is a significant one to be reckoned with on the land, on the sea and in the air," he told legislators from seven Western European countries.

Norstad, who is scheduled to retire at the beginning of 1963, delivered this sizeup in what he said would be his last address to the Assembly of Western European Union (WEU), a seven-nation alliance inside NATO comprising Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, The Netherlands and Luxembourg.

The picture Norstad presented of the Western defense posture in Europe generally was optimistic, but he stressed the "deficiencies," as he did in an address to NATO parliamentarians here a month ago.

He said until recently these deficiencies had prevented his taking steps to initiate the "forward strategy" he has promised in Europe.

"I can state this fact—Europe can be defended. But until our goals are fully met and unless and until we are able to maintain our forces on the most up-to-date basis with the most modern weapons, we subject ourselves to unnecessary risks," he said.

"In many respects the gap is critical and closing it must be made our first objective."

One shortage stressed by Norstad was transport planes for the mobile NATO "fire brigade" force he is organizing to be ready to fly on a moment's notice to any threatened area in his command."

Kozlov Hits Militarism Of Chinese

ROME (UPI) — With a Chinese Communist delegation listening, Soviet Communist Party Secretary Frol Kozlov publicly criticized the Peking regime Monday for its "adventuristic position" in the Sino-Indian border conflict and called for a peaceful solution.

Thunderous applause greeted Kozlov's attack on China's militaristic policy and his defense of Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's doctrine of peaceful co-existence at the 10th Italian Communist party congress.

"Peace-loving men are looking with keen concern" on the Sino-Indian conflict which "is seriously harming the interests of both the brotherly Chinese people and the friendly Indian people," said Kozlov.

"We all want the controversial border dispute between these two great powers of Asia to be solved through peaceful means," Kozlov said.

Without mentioning China by name, he charged that those who rejected peaceful co-existence adopted "an adventurist position which has nothing to do with Marxism.

At a time when even a so-called local conflict can easily grow into thermonuclear war, he said, "such a position, even though camoflaged with pseudo-revolutionary phrases becomes particularly harmful and dangerous . . ."

He said, "There is a Russian saying that in peacetime the young bury the old and in wartime the old bury the young. "But if thermonuclear war broke out, in many countries there would be no young or old left."

A three-man Chinese delegation listened impassively to Kozlov's criticism of their views and of the Sino-Indian fighting. With typical Oriental inscrutibility they even applauded sparingly at some points of his speech.

Harriman Gives Kennedy Report On Indian Trip

WASHINGTON (UPI)—W. Averell Harriman told President Kennedy Monday that India's struggle with Red China is likely to be a long one, perhaps requiring long-term military aid to India from the United States and other Western countries.

Harriman, assistant secretary of state for Asian afafirs, reported to Kennedy on his two-week mission to India. Informed sources said these general conclusions emerged from the Harriman trip:

—Virtually all Indian officials with whom Harriman and his aides talked regard the China dispute as much more than a border affair, involving instead a long-term Chinese assault on India's way of life. Therefore Indian government officials feel long-term strengthening of India's armed forces may be necessary.

—Officials said no U.S. "decision" has been formally reached whether to contribute to such military building, but it is being considered.

—State and Defense Department officials in the Harriman mission concluded that it would be extremely difficult for the United States to give long-term military aid to India or Pakistan, until these countries settle their differences over Kashmir. But a Kashmir agreement was not made a flat condition for any aid, U.S. officials said.

Great Britain and members of the Commonwealth have indicated they would be willing to help India in long-term military strengthening.

Officials said the United States, meanwhile, is going ahead with emergency military equipment aid to meet the present China border situation.

Harriman spent 80 minutes at the White House discussing his trip with Kennedy.

After listening to the long fill-in from Harriman on both of these matters, the President held a brief discussion with his top advisers on the Cuban situation, particularly the status of U.S.-Soviet talks at the United Nations.

Sitting in on both talks was the Executive Committee of the National Security Council.

Harriman, assistant secretary of state for Far Eastern affairs, was sent to India by Kennedy to carry out two main assignments. These were to determine the amount of help India needs to beat back the Chinese Communist aggression, and to make certain that India use no American military equipment against Pakistan.

Harriman was reported to have brought back a long list of additional U.S. military items India would like to have.

String Recital Is Planned Saturday

A banjoist and a guitarist both of the Great Smokies region, will give a recital entitled "Songs of the French Broad River," in Graham Memorial Lounge Saturday, at 8 p.m.

Obray Ramsey is the banjoist and Tommy Hunter, the guitarist. They are both from Madison County. Ramsey will sing the songs and will be accompanied by Hunter. Their appearance will be sponsored by Graham Memorial, the North Carolina Folklore Society, and the University Folklore Council.

Ramsey has made an album for Vanguard records. In the opinion of Manly Wade Wellman of Chapel Hill, who has heard him in his native mountains, and of Norman Cordon, of Chapel Hill, and UNC Kenan Professor of English A. P. Hudson who have heard the record album, Ramsey is one of the finest banjo players in the Appalachians. Besides being a banjoist and singer of note, Ramsey is a hunter and rifle shot of the first rank, according to Professor Hudson.

Ramsey and Hunter are also on the program of the North Carolina Folklore Society meeting in the Sir Walter Hotel, Raleigh, on Friday, December 7, at 2 p.m.

Peace Union For Students Formed Here

The organization of a new student group which calls itself the "Students For Peace" was announced yesterday by the group's spokesman, Pat Cusick.

The SFP, said Cusick, has adopted the Statement of Purpose of the National Peace Union and plans to be an affiliate member of the national organization, but does not expect to be an official chapter at the present time.

The Statement of Purpose adopted by the new group says that the organization does not feel that war or the threat of war is any longer a solution to the problems of the present-day world. The statement goes on to say that the group is organized to study and offer new alternatives which may lead to a prevention of war and the elimination of "brinkmanship".

According to Cusick, the Students For Peace as well as the SPU, do not restrict their criticism to either side of the arms race, because both the East and West are participants in it.

Cusick said that the way in which the SFP plans to carry out its purpose is through a two-fold program aimed at both the students on the campus and those already members of the group. "The group will show films and sponsor visiting speakers to discuss why the present policies followed by the major powers of the world are not in the interests of the people and what alternatives are available," said the groups spokesman. "We will also hold frequent seminars to discuss the issues among ourselves and other interested students, because we feel that our own education on these matters is very important."

Infirmary

Those in the infirmary yesterday were Annie Jay, Gladis Overby, Saraylinn Hogs, Cecile Mayrand, Lockhart Moore, Nancy Privitt, Richard Kraymer, Worth Helms, Gary Wright, Edward Boythe, Joseph Lea, William Eskridge, Peter Swift, Calvin Deans, Roger Grimson, Oscar Powers, William Ethridge, Lewis Smith, Michael Foster, Richard Strout, John Ward, and David Prather.

Council Says UP's Protest Not In Order

The Constitutional Council ruled late yesterday afternoon to dismiss the case of the University Party against the Elections Board as being an invalid appeal, and thereby upheld the Elections Board decision that the Elections Law does not necessarily govern special elections.

The elections Board decision stemmed from a hotly contested issue of whether or not a candidate in a re-election had to turn in an expense account.

As a result of the action taken by the Constitutional Council, Jackie Harrell, SP candidate for President of the Freshman Class, will immediately assume that position.

Dwight Wheless, a friend of the court speaking for the defense, asked that the council throw out the appeal on the basis that it had not been made in the proper manner.

Wheless defined the proper manner as it is described in Article 9, Section 12 of the General Election Law, which states that the candidate must make his appeal in writing to the council. The appeal was made, said Wheless, not by the candidate as prescribed, but by the Uniersity Party, which did not have the authority to make an appeal in a case involving a candidate and the Elections Board.

The Council ruled that Wheless's point was valid and that it would dismiss the appeal. Walter Dellinger, chairman of the council, went on to explain that this action by the council would automatically make the decision of the Elections Board final.

The Council hearing, which took nearly two hours, was centered mainly on the question of whether the Elections Board had the authority to set aside the Election Law when it held an election. The University Party position was that the board was bound by the law which was written for it by Student Legislature and that the board itself did not have the authority to disregard the law.

However, the Elections Board held that the election was a special one and did not come under the jurisdiction of the Elections Law.

150,000 Said Preparing To Escape Cuba

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A Senate subcommittee was told Monday that 150,000 Cubans are ready to flee the Communist-ruled island for the United States if airline service is renewed between the two countries.

Mayor Robert K. High of Miami, Fla., a city which has served as a haven for many thousands of Cuban refugees, said the 150,000 who want to leave Premier Fidel Castro's regime already have their visa waivers.

They have been unable to escape Cuba because commercial air transportation has been at a standstill since the U.S. blockade on Communist arms shipments.

The mayor said he had "no recommendation" to make concerning the restoration of air travel. But he said he had been flooded with communications from people protesting that "the door of freedom has been closed."

His testimony was given before the Senate refugee subcommittee which also heard a State Department official explain that there is no legal restriction against resumption of commercial flights between the United States and Cuba.

John H. Crimmins, director of the State Department's office of Caribbean affairs, said the Cuban government has removed all restrictions on such flights. The United States also lifted an earlier ban but cautioned commercial airlines they would be making such flights "on their own responsibility," he said.

Pan American Airways said in Miami Monday that it has no plans to resume flights to Cuba.

Sen. Ellender Criticized By Uganda Gov't

KAMPALA, Uganda (UPI)—The Uganda government called Sen. Allen J. Ellender, D-La., a "prejudiced segregationist" and declared him a "prohibited immigrant" Monday night barring him from the months-old African nation.

The action followed statements by Ellender that he had not seen any African nation where the average African was capable of leadership without white assistance.

"Ellender could see one part of Africa where the African is ready for self-government but we don't want this prejudiced segregationist type in Uganda," the government spokesman said when he announced the ban on the Southern Democrat.

It is not known whether Ellender had intended to visit Uganda. Earlier Monday in Lusaka, Northern Rhodesia, national African leaders accused Ellender of fanning racial hatred and upsetting African-U.S. relations during his tour of the continent.

The attacks united for the present the rival African parties here, after Ellender told a news conference in Southern Rhodesia last week he supported the present Rhodesian federation and praised the strict racial segregation of south Africa.

Ellender said his views were private, not official.

John Banda, an African Congress party leader, said Ellender was "anning the embers of racial hatred" between whites, Asians and Arricans in the federation.

Reuben Kamaga, United National Independence party (UNIP) vice president, said, "we take a serious view of Ellender's utterances which are completely nonsensical. If American aid means oppression then we shall have none of it."

Ellender, a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, had told the new African states there would be no more "free handouts" of aid to them if he had his way in Washington.

He also told Rhodesians he would oppose direct U.S. aid to Nyasaland and Northern Rhodesia if they broke away from Southern Rhodesia and the federation.

Yack Wants Dorms To Be In Section

Louis Legum, Editor of the YACK, said yesterday that all dormitories that wish to have a page in this years Yack must send a representative to the Yack Office today or tomorrow.

Legum said that he would like to establish a continuing dormitory section in the Yack. "A dorm section in the Yack would be unprecedented for there is not such a section to be found in any yearbook across the nation."

He said that the Yack would attempt to get 10 dorms in this issue as a start, and then increase the number in the future.

The cost of a single page is $70. "This is a nominal fee", said Legum. "We will be losing money on the dormitory section and will have to make it up from other sources. Our allotted budget has no money for this project".

India Says China Has Thinned Lines

NEW DELHI (UPI) — Prime Minister Jawaharal Nehru said Monday the Chinese Communists appeared to be withdrawing some troops from rear areas of the northeast frontier region although they merely had thinned out their front line troops.

There was no word of an Chinese withdrawal in the Ladakh area of Kashmir 1,000 miles to the West.

Nehru spoke before parliament while U. S. Ambassador John Kenneth Galbraith went to Tezpur in the northeastern area for a look at Indian fighting forces and conferences with military leaders there on their arms needs.

Rough Editorial Road: Sanity And Responsibility

The lot of college editors is not an easy one. And in the South their problems are greater than anywhere else — particularly when they buck the staunch segregationist feelings of their neighbors and friends.

At the University of Alabama the editor of the "Crimson and White" has received the usual Southern dose of cross-burnings and anonymous telephone calls after he editorially opposed Mississippi Gov. Barnett's actions in the Ole Miss situation.

Miss Sidna Brower, editor of the "Mississippian" at Ole Miss, is in a hotter spot—if only because Mississippi is perpetually hotter than Alabama.

The Campus Senate of the University voted last night on a resolution to both reprimand and commend the actions of Miss Brower. Students accuse her of not printing the complete story of the Sept. 30 rioting but commend her for constantly opposing violence through the medium of the newspaper.

Her role in urging a peaceful return to university business after the riots, has been praised by many. One Mississippian wrote us that Miss Brower, "has shown a calm head and a desire for peace and order under the most adverse conditions. She has been severely criticized here as being a moderate—some say an integrationist.

"Daily editorials call for common sense actions, urge law and order, return to studies, and to get back to the function of a university. She has been a big help to those of us who have sought for sanity when the whole state is insane."

Attempts to have Miss Brower impeached have been unsuccessful —a censure probably will be the best her opponents can throw at her.

Miss Brower's problems are similar to those of most Southern college editors. She has dual responsibilities—to her student body, to her state and her people; but also to her conscience, which cannot breach violence and disregard of law and life. Miss Brower probably is not an integrationist, as has been true of other college editors caught in her position before.

But, segregationist or integrationist, her responsibility was clear: to urge her fellow students to act sanely, calmly and without violence. By her actions she has brought respect to her state and university. From one Southern college editor to another, we commend Miss Brower—and Alabama editor Melvin Meyer as well—for their honorable and courageous actions. (JC)

Within the next two weeks the UNC campus will see more of the political spectrum than it has been faced with in a long time. It is encouraging to see the campus come out of the doldums of recent years when there have been very few interesting and engaging political speakers here.

Last night the New Left Club sponsored a talk on socialism by the chairman of the national Progressive Labor group.

A folk singer with a purpose, the controversial Pete Seeger, will appear Wednesday night at 8 in Memorial Hall, under the sponsorship of the New Left. Tickets are $1 at Kemp's and GM, to hear the man Time magazine calls the "current patriarch of folk singing."

There have been reports that certain groups will picket Seeger's appearance in protest of the singer's alleged Communist affiliations. (Seeger was cited for contempt of Congress by the House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC) some years ago. He was convicted in 1961, but in May, 1962 the U.S. Court of Appeals reversed the decision.)

* * *

Thursday night will bring a spokesman for Tass, the Russian news agency, to speak in Carroll Hall on dissemination of news within the Soviet Union. He will appear under the Carolina Forum's sponsorship.

After a weekend's rest, the Young Right will take over. William F. Buckley Jr., the nation's most articulate conservative spokesman, will talk on "Freedom and the Welfare State" in Memorial Hall Monday night. The Forum is the sponsor.

There are tentative plans for Fulton Lewis III, famous for his debates in favor of HUAC's "Operation Abolition" film, to speak to the Young Americans for Freedom that week.

In all, it looks like a lively week —free of any Tweedledee and Tweedledum political "me-tooism." (JC)

Information you need to know:

"Thomasville, Ga. (UPI) — Architect E. Telesca of Miami has won $4,000 as regional winner in the national fallout shelter design contest recently concluded by the American Institute of Architects for the Office of Civil Defense.

"The national award of $15,000 went to Ellery C. Green of Tucson, Ariz., for his design for an elementary school best incorporating a fallout shelter."

We would be interested in seeing these award-winning architectural designs. Wonder if the shelters should be ranch-style, or Georgian, or split-level—or, better yet, what kind of shelter are the Jonses building? (JC)

Letters To The Editors

Toronto, New Left And Bad Checks

Thanks Sent From Toronto

To the Editors,

A sad group of people piled back into our bus to head back to Canada from the exchange weekend. We were sad because we hated to leave after the incredible courtesy and warmth shown us in our visit among you. Wherever we went we were cheerfully greeted as "some one all the way from Canada to see us."

Our co-Tarheels were at our disposal in every possible way, entertained, fed and housed us in a manner sadly caricatured in our country by commercials selling chicken pot pie "like Colonel Forster used to eat."

The discussion on existentialism led by Dr. Hill of the Religion Dept. was an excellent introduction to the subject. For some of your students and he carried on a seminar that left us Canadians stupefied at the intellectual prowess.

But perhaps the most valuable of all was the desegregation discussion. A stately and beautiful girl with a flawless complexion and magnificent carriage best described the situation. "I was addressed form the age of three as Miss Jane by our servants and treated with deference due an adult. I lived in a small town and never saw an educated Negro until I was fifteen."

She's seen them now and knows intellectually that they can be educated. But we came to understand the difficulty of wiping out this powerful emotional association.

May you of the South preserve something of the high spirits and easy charm of a great tradition in the stupendous transition that lies before you.

Many many thanks for your hospitality.

Who Profits From Seeger?

To the Editors,

After a brassy fanfare, the heralds of Pete Seeger's second coming have muted their trumpets and rolled up their banners. Surely this usually vocal vanguard would not have potential ticket buyers left in the twilight, if not the darkness, about New Left sponsorship of the coming concert, and New Left collection of the proceeds. Yet the absence of stated sponsorship on those posters displayed about the campus is perhaps their chief distinction . . . or curiosity. We must understand the deletion as either an oversight or a printer's error.

So let us be enlightened: the New Left IS sponsoring and will profit directly from Pete Seeger's performance. With no poetic distinction, we ourselves, along with Carl Sandburg, think Mr. Seeger is beyond doubt a distinguished artist. But we will be listening from the window.

Manners Make The Man–Otelia

To the Editors,

One of the professors said to me in Lenoir Hall towards the latter part of last Spring semester: "Mrs. Connor, I wish you would teach these students some manners."

I said, "Well, I have done my darndest. Somebody in authority will have to take over."

It is about time to bring us up-to-date on the manners situation on the campus.

Last spring, the manners in Lenoir were the worst I have ever seen there. There was much improvement during the summer sessions, and still better this fall, the empty tray habit has improved, for one thing.

Here are some of the situations I have run into recently:

A white student reached over and put his coat on a chair at my table. When I finished eating I stopped at his table and told him that he shouldn't park anything at another's table, to hang his coat on his own chair. He asked why? I told him it was not polite. He wasn't convinced, so I said, "You don't want to be impolite, do you?" He calmed down and said, "No ma'am." The same thing happened with a Negro student.

One day I was going out of a double door at Lenoir and had pushed the right door out, when a swarm of students came marching through. I said, "Look here, Don't you see a lady trying to get out. Are you going to keep butting through?" The rest of them halted dead in their tracks, and laughed as I went by.

Another day I was talking to a student while I was waiting to get in a class room. He kept saying Huh, and Un-huh. I said, "Where are you from?" He said, "Raleigh." I said, "People in Raleigh don't say uh and un-huh." He apologized and said yes, ma'am.

Today I had a few minutes to wait to go into the class room. Every seat in the hall was occupied by a male student. I stood and waited. When the bell rang, I said, "Keep your seats, gentlemen." One boy hopped up and said, "Have a seat." I didn't want a seat. I wanted a little display of manners.

Some students fail to hold a door when you are right behind them, some don't step back when you meet them in a narrow passage, many will come up beside you on the sidewalk and cut right in front of you instead of dropping behind you to cross over, you almost trip over them.

Once a woman called me over the telephone to tell me that when she got on a crowded bus my young daughter got up and gave the woman her seat. She was much impressed by the courtesy. We had never told the child she should give an older person her seat on a bus. It was innate in her.

These people who do careless, or thoughtless things like the above, and like monopolizing the telephone when other people share the telephone, have no innate manners. They either have no home training, or they reserve their good manners for occasions when they think they can get something out of being polite. The blame must be placed squarely on the parents, for by the time young people get to college, good manners should be the rule and not the exception in their conduct.

One the whole, the students here are a fine bunch of youngsters. They invariably take my corrections in their stride and with good humor. Some day, I venture to say, they will even appreciate me and thank me.

By the way, last week I spent several nights at McIver dormitory while the house mother was away. The girls were lovely, and the maids were kind and helpful as could be. I take this occasion to express my appreciation to each and every one of them.

Student 'Buried' By Bad Film

To the Editors,

Bravo! The United States, the Free World, and Democracy, et al, score again. What was probably the worst offering ever presented to Chapel Hill appeared at the Carolina theater recently in the form of WE'LL BURY YOU.

The film, a supposed combination life history, documentary, and expose of communism, ran the complete gamut from total nothingness to absolute absurdity. It portrayed communism as having done nothing for the peoples under its rule; it portrayed communism as a handy tool religiously used by a handful of select sadists out to make life miserable for the overwhelming number of peasants supposedly starving today in the USSR; it portrayed Nikita Krushchev as a ruthless demagoge who probably ate Stalin's body after he had it removed from Lenin's tomb.

It would be interesting to know the definition which the producers attributed to communism as it was totally lacking form the itself. The producers chose, rather, to rely on the standard cliches associated with the institution of communism today, such as hard core . . . peaceful coexistance . . . two steps forward, one step backward, etc.

Seemingly, the movie took twenty-four steps backward, one step forward, with the lone step forward coming as viewers moved toward the exits at the end of the film. One was left with the age old feeling expressed by many visitors to New York City after gaining no insight into its complexities . . . that of, "It's a great place to visit, but I wouldn't want to live there."

Many Tacticians, Few Students Here

Now's the time of year when despair about one's academic work begins to set in, because the probability of how good a semester this will be is beginning to take shape. The despair comes from the realization that if you want to do well, the day will have to be well-planned, so that all five courses can receive their proportionate attention. This means figuring out where you will fit that book report in, so that it will not be too close on the heels of the quiz in the other course, which you decided you couldn't study for until that other term paper is disposed of. The permutations and combinations are infinite, but the result is the same. But there is no reason to get overly anxious about the state of affairs. We've been through it before, and got by all right, and we will again.

But one might justifiably ask, "Is that the point?" Is the purpose of our studies just to do well, gradewise, by good planning? Hopefully not, because this places all the stress on what has been admitted to be an imprecise, and sometimes grossly mistaken indication of the the knowledge the student has acquired. The purpose of our education is to mature our minds, to make us capable of dealing with the problems which will later confront us, and also to ignite in us an intellectual aliveness which should characterize any educated man.

But it seems ponderous that Carolina with the system as it now stands is being very successful in these endeavors. The emphasis is wrong, and its misplacement pervades the entire atmosphere here. At this time when almost a third of the academic year is passed, our role should not be one of the planner, or manoeuverer, but one of a serious student who is deeply interested in what he is studying.

But it is quite clear why the Carolina student is involved in tactics. rather than engaged in the material itself: There simply is not time to get too interested in a subject, because there are four others that would suffer, if he did. That would mean that the grades on the record would be unbalanced, and therefore unpleasing to the eye of the local business man. A student taking a course in English literature for example, might race through fifteen or twenty authors in one semester. But what happens if he should get interested in, say, Yeats, and want to go a little deeper than the minimum requirement, necessary for cocktail expertise. Nothing would happen, because it is simply impossible to devote time to it. The theory is that if he is interested enough, he will return to Yeats at some later date, perhaps in the summer or between semesters, but we can pretty well generalize that the time never comes about. Other interests or obligations inevitably interfere.

One could be a little more optimistic about the situation if it weren't for the lack of focus and direction about the course work that is taken at Carolina.

The advisers offer no coordinated plan to the student which shows him how to build systematically a comprehensive knowledge of a certain field, either wide or narrow. The student is left to dabble as he chooses with his electives from Russian literature to Greek drama to geography. In fact, in the general college he is forced to take unrelated, diverse courses. No doubt there is merit in a certain amount of this, but when the diversity is so widely practiced that the student never penetrates under the surface of anything he intellectually attacks, so much freedom to dabble might well be questioned.

The student under this set up can not possibly have a real sense of intellectual accomplishment. There is not the satisfaction that one gets from feeling he has really gone deeply into a subject, and learned something worthwhile which he will retain forever. Nor is enough time ever spent on any one subject for the students to take a real pride in the quality of his work, as an expression of the techniques or skills that he has acquired.

In short, the Carolina student is forced to spread his efforts too thinly over too wide a range in too short a time. The result is that the purpose of education is largely lost. The student comes away from Chapel Hill after four years of dabbling here and there with less than a dilletantish knowledge of many motley subjects (a knowledge which is soon forgotten) and a passing, uncoordinated knowledge of one subject, his major. But what is more frightening, due to the discombobulation of his course work, it is mere chance if he emerges with a clear mature mind.

No one could deny that it is extremely pleasant to be able to hop tremely intellectual lily-pad to intellectual lily-pad, but the point is "Is it the best way to prepare oneself for a world which cries for clearness and depth in knowledge from the entanglements of fuzziness and superficiality?"

A View From The Hill

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

Now that Teddy ("He Can Do More for Massachusetts") Kennedy has made his debut in Washington, the inevitable question arises: What "image" have the White House ad men concocted for this latest addition to the fold?

The Junior Senator from Massachusetts cannot be the cool-headed, omnipotent, 1200 words-a-minute, war hero type; Big Brother has dibs on that. He cannot roll up his sleeves, or sulk, or cuss out news men, or be righteously indignant, or even throw guests into his swimming pool; These are privileges reserved expressly for the Attorney-General.

He certainly cannot sustain the "image" of the repentant, self-accusing school-boy for the full tenure of his office, and he's too old to get kicked out of Harvard again.

Salinger's squad must be frantic.

At any rate, Father Joe is happy. Washington and the world has witnessed the realization of the Kennedy Triumvirate. Or should we say . . . troika?

Speaking before a recent Nebraska AFL-CIO convention,Mrs. Margaret Thornburg, direction of women's activities for the labor group, had a good deal to say about individual voting rights.

She expressed contempt for union members who vote for candidates not endorsed by labor organizations. She said, "There are still rugged individualists who want to determine the course of the entire labor movement in these matters. . . . It is time for union members to grow up and realize that the majority rules. We have the right to disagree but not the right to disobey the mandate of union people."

What Mrs. Tornburg is saying is that once a union leader has endorsed a particular candidate, the individual members are obligated to tag along i.e. "grow up."

But with all due respect to the lady (which is mighty little), we submit that it takes a twisted mind to find some thing objectionable in a person's right to votes as he pleases.

We'd like to hear how the Progressive Labor Club stands on this issue.

By the way, is there still a Progressive Labor Club?

Karate: Lethal Use Of Open Hand

REG SMITH, Purple Belt holder and sopohomore from Plymouth, N. C., demonstrates his skill by breaking three one-inch board with his fist.

By JOE McDONALD

The literal meaning of the two Japapese characters which make up the word "Karate" is "empty hands"

It refers to the deadliest method of unarmed combat known to man.

Karate (Pronounced KAH-RAH-TEE) is a means of self defense which makes use of every possible part of the body for the purpose of blocking or attacking by precision movements, and a knowledge of the vital points of the human body.

The history of karate can be traced back hundreds of years. Ancient methods of unarmed combat are believed to have been brought to China from a Buddist monk. From China they were brought to Okinawa where karate as we know it today was developed. It was in Japan, however, that karate achieved its greatest popularity and it was from Japan that karate was made known to the western world.

Althought karate developed originally as a mean of self defense, today self defense represents only one of three classifications under which karate must be regarded. As a physical art, karate is almost without equal. It provides excellent physical excerise and necessitates perfect balance, muscular control, use of body dynamics, and shifting of body weight. In recent years, contest rules have been drawn up and karate is now regarded as an exciting competitive sport.

A question often asked is how it is possible to hold karate matches. In free-style sparrnig all blows and kicks are thrown two inches short of the target. Any blow landing within two inches of the body which is not blocked is worth a number of points depending upon the part of the body attacked. The full set of rules is much too detailed to be discussed in this article.

Most of the karate practice in Chapel Hill can be traced to the teachings of a former U.N.C. student, John Johnston, of Charlotte. Johnston, who holds a Black Belt degree, is one of the founders of the Bush-kai, a karate school presently headed by Brown Belt Bob Leoper, a student at N. C. State. Both Leoper and Brown Belt Bill McDonald, a student at East Carolina Coolege, are presently active in the teaching of karate. To the best knowledge, the only belt degree holders in Chapel Hill are Joe McDonald, Brown Belt, and Reg Smith, Purple Bltt. Smith is presently in the process of obtaining the Brown Belt degree. The Brown Belt is followed in rank by the Black Belt.

There are several misconceptions about karate which should be cleared up. One concerns the vulnerability of anyone who claims to know karate. Many people have mentioned stories of people who claimed to know karate but who were badly beaten in actual fights. The statement, "I know karate", is perfectly meaningless without some indication of degree karate is "known". A person who learns the scale on the piano can be said to "know the piano", but he would be badly defeated if he attempted to Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto.

It takes years of practice to perfect karate, and there are few experts in the United States. These people, by the way, are not to be found in bars, openly broadcasting their knowledge of karate. It is surprising to learn how many people think that karate is nothing more than striking with the edge of the hand instead of the fist.

It should also be pointed out that conditioning the hands, making it possible to break boards or bricks is not essential to the practice of karate. These facts do illustrate, however, the remarkable effectiveness of karate techniques.

Karate is often criticized as a brutal practice which should be outlawed. As Hidetaka Nishiyama, head instructor of the Japan Karate Association, has pointed out, if karate is practiced only for self defense, why not go to a store and buy a weapon, saving many hours of strenuous practice. And Ed Parker, one of the top karate men in the United States has said: "As a student progressed and his knowledge of karate increases so does his respect for the rights of others."

In this light, one realizes that any criticism of karate should be directed at the misuse of it, which is unfortunately not without occurence, and not at the practice of it.

Pharmacy School Sets Open House On Dec. 8 & 10

North Carolina high school and college students will have an opportunity to view the educational and research facilities of the School of Pharmacy when the school holds a special Open House December 8, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

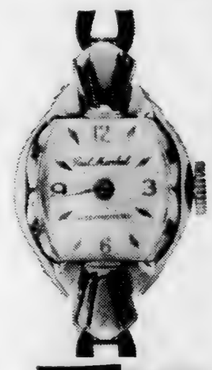
It will be more than simply a day in the life of a pharmacy student for the visitors, who are expected from throughout the state. They will view every facet of the Pharmacy School's activities, from a cancer research project to the correct procedure for filling ointment tubes, from the extraction of volatile oils from plant materials to the demonstration of spectrophotometric assay of drugs.

The one-day program—the first of its kind in the school—has a dual aim: to interest good students in careers in pharmacy and to acquaint the general public with present-day resources and activities in the profession.

As visitors—either students or the interested public—arrive, they will be greeted by members of the pharmacy student body. After brief messages of welcome from school officials and a few remarks about education programs and careers in pharmacy, the visitors will be taken on tours of the Beard Hall, the pharmacy building, by their UNC student hosts.

They will visit classes and see a number of specially-prepared exhibits, experiments and demonstrations designed to explain the purpose of each of the school's laboratories.

Following the tour, refreshments will be served in the pharmacy student center, and each visitor will be given a memento of his visit. Activities are expected to be continuous throughout the day.



PHILOLOGICAL CLUB

The Philological Club will meet on Tuesday, December 4, 7:45 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge of Morehead Planetarium. Werner P. Friederich of the department of Germanic languages will present a paper, "Four Major Authors of the Seventeenth Century." All faculty members, graduates and members of their families are invited.

GLEE CLUB OPENINGS

Men students who would like to join the Men's Glee Club for the rest of the semester or for the spring semester should contact Dr. Joel Carter in 207 Hill Hall immediately.

The club is now preparing music for its spring repertoire as well as rehearsing its fall numbers.

McNeill Smith To Address Human Relations Council

McNeill Smith, a UNC graduate and a resident of Greensboro, will give the principal address at the Annual Meeting of the North Carolina Council on Human Relations on December 13. The meeting will be held at the Carolina Inn, beginning with a dinner at 7:00 p.m.

Smith's topic will be: Equal Protection of the Laws in North Carolina.

For the past three years Smith has served as Chairman of the North Carolina Advisory Committee to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights. His committee has made studies and published reports on equal rights and equal opportunities in the fields of voting, education, housing, health and employment.

Smith is a native of Rowland, North Carolina. He received his formal education in the public schools of Rowland, UNC (A. B. Degree) and Columbia Law School (LLB Degree, 1941).

He practiced law in New York prior to serving three years in the Navy, 1942-45. Since 1945 he has practiced law in Greensboro. He is a member of the Greensboro, North Carolina, American and International Bar Associations.

At UNC Smith was editor of the Daily Tar Heel, member of Phi Beta Kappa, Golden Fleece, and Order of the Grail. At Columbia Law School he was President of the Student Council and Editor of the Year Book.

The North Carolina Council on Human Relations was formerly the North Carolina Commission of Interracial Cooperation. It is a non-partisan, non-denominational interracial organization with the goal of equal rights and equal opportunity for all the people of the State.

The Rev. Henry G. Ruark of Rocky Mount, chairman of the Council, will preside at the annual meeting.

All interested persons as well as members are invited to the dinner-meeting. Advance reservations, which are necessary, may be made with Dr. Wayne Bowers, the Rev. Thomas Thrasher, or Dr. T. Franklin Williams.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: BILL BELFORD

Bill Belford (B.A., 1960) got off to a fast start with the C&P Telephone Company in Washington. After a brief training period, he was put in charge of six salesmen handling the needs of 8000 business customers. Under Bill's leadership, his group added nearly $50,000 in additional revenues per month. Later, Bill was promoted to Assistant Sales Manager and assigned the job of organizing a special sales group. Again, success.

He was then loaned to the Executive Department to do a special study on wages and working conditions in the community. The thoroughness of this survey influenced his promotion to Personnel Supervisor, his latest step up!

Bill Belford and other young men like him in Bell Telephone Companies throughout the country help bring the finest communications service in the world to the homes and businesses of a growing America.

Cuba Trip Planning Tonight

Larry Phelps announced yesterday that there will be a meeting tonight at 8 o'clock in Rowland Parker 11 for all students interested in going to Cuba for two weeks during the Christmas holidays.

This meeting will discuss details of the trip—passports, travel expenses etc.—and possible complications involved. The Cuban government is providing air transportation for the students while the Cuban Newspaper Federation is financing their stay.

Phelps, a senior from Burlington, N. C., has already announced his intention of making the trip. Some 50 other students, representing groups at Barnard, NYU and Columbia Universities in New York City, are also definitely going.

Phelps said that his reason for going on such a trip was "to see what the revolution there is doing for the Cuban people."

JUNIOR JUBILEE PLANNED FOR NEXT WEEK

Santa Claus, a "Junior Christmas Jubilee" and a J.-Sr. Combo Party will highlight next week's social calendar.

Tuesday, December 11, is the annual sale by Town and Campus sponsored by the Junior class. The "Christmas Jubilee" will feature Santa Claus, Lee Ferrell and the Trojans.

The Hot Nuts will be at the American Legion Hut from 8-12 p.m. on Friday, December 14. This will be a combined project of the Junior and Senior classes.

Spearman, Students On TV

ABC television news will fly six University of North Carolina students of journalism and their Professor Walter Spearman to New York City, Thursday, December 6, to treat them to a Broadway play and tape their critical comments on the play for future television broadcast on the nationwide series "Meet the Professor."

The students will be seeing either C. P. Snow's "The Affair" or Robert Bolt's "A Man for All Seasons" on Thursday night. They will stay at the Manhattan Hotel. The following morning,

The students, members of Professor Spearman's reviewing class, "Journalism 6," are Bob Alridge of Gastonia; Terry Bond, Batavia, Ill.; John Dunne, Brecksville, Ohio; Clark Cox, Crumpler; John Medlin, Rome, Ga.; and Miss Linda Griffith, Columbia, Miss. The class reviews plays, books and movies.

The program, "Meet the Professor," shows the college teacher and the work he does in teaching, research and public service. Objectives of the program are to develop interest in college teaching as a career by showing the opportunities and satisfactions of the profession and to show the professor as a vital and contemporary person in the context of his work on the campus, the community, the nation, and the world.

"Meet the Professor" is broadcast on Sunday afternoons from 1:30 to 2 p.m., (EST) over approximately 100 ABC-TV stations across the country. Each TV show is especially adapted for radio and is heard on 125 radio network stations with Milton Cross as narrator.

McKnight Follows Peace Corps South

William A. McKnight, professor of Spanish here joins 34 peace Corps trainees in Puerto Rico next week, to continue their course of training in speaking the Spanish language.

Dr. McKnight will represent UNC in a followup program now beginning for the Peace Corps group in Arecebo, Puerto Rico.

The 34 students completed last week more than two month's of study in Chapel Hill in preperation for a two year's Peace Corps program in Venezuela.

Field training in a camp in Puerto Rico will precede the longer period of service in Venezeula.

The 34 trained in Chapel Hill since early September will be key staff of a newly-established "University of the East" in Venezuela. After several weeks in Puerto Rico, they will proceed to VVenezeula, arriving in early January, 1963. Prof. Federico Gil, chairman of the Institute of Latin American Studies at Chapel Hill, was in charge of the Peace Corps program in the University here. Professor McKnight was among the Romance Languages faculty members who taught Spanish to the

Dr. McKnight will be with the Peace Corps group at The Arecibo Camp for several days, helping them to brush up on their knowledge of Spanish. He will then return toNew York City, where he will report on the status of the VVenezuelaan project to Peace Corps officials in New York.

Dr. McKnight, a native of Shelby, has been a member of the faculty of the University of North Carolina since 1936. He is an authority on the Spanish language and literature and has served as chairman of the Contemporary Spanish literature of the Modern Languages Association of America.

Folklore Festival Set In Raleigh Next Week

The 51st meeting of the North Carolina Folklore Society will be held in the Virginia Dare Ballroom of the Sir Walter Hotel in Raleigh, Friday, December 7, at 2 p.m. and will be highlighted with a program of folk music, folk dancers, and folk historians. The meeting, which is open to the public, is one of several events occurring during Raleigh's "culture week."

A. P. Hudson, Kenan professor of English at UNC and secretary-treasurer of the society, will speak on the songs and dances of the Carolina Charter Colonists. He is the author of a book recently published by the Carolina Tercenenary Commission entitled "Songs of the Carolina Charter Colonists, 1663-1763."

Two UNC students, Miss Guerry Matthews of Rock Hill, S. C., and Dan Brock of Lexington, Ky., will sing Jacobite and love songs. Charles Horton of Zebulon a UNC graduate student in musicology, will perform some 17th century dances with a team of student dancers.

A noted banjoist and folksinger from Madison County, Obray Ramsey, will present "Songs of the French Broad River," including several pieces of his own composition. He will be accompanied by a guitarist friend, Tommy Hunter.

Duke Psychologist Plays Lead In Playmaker Show

By GORDON CLARK

A Durham psychologist whose "annual disease" is a burning desire to act will play the indominable Jeeter Lester in "Tobacco Road" here next week.

Lloyd Borstelmann, a Duke University psychology professor and chief psychologist at the Durham Child Guidance Clinic, will play the famous role—the 45th of his career—the Playmakers production of the controversial tragic-comedy at the Playmakers Theatre tomorrow through Sunday. But Borstelmann's profession hasn't been much help to him as an actor.

"People seem to think there's a natural liason between psychology and acting," he said, "but there isn't. Psychology breaks down behavior while acting requires a fusion of behavior to form a whole."

Borstelmann, who has lived in Durham for 8 years (he taught at UNC in Chapel Hill for 3 years before that) has been acting character roles since childhood, and suspects that most people with acting instincts have, in one way or another.

"Most actors have led very active fantasy lives from childhood, often in solitude. The discovery of acting is like opening a door that this needn't be just private."

But Borstelmann isn't sure this is why he likes acting. "It's been a part of me for so long, I've forgotten the reasons."

His major roles include Drummond in "Inherit the Wind" and Stephano in "The Tempest," both with the Playmakers. The Pennsylvania native received the Playmakers' Mask Award for his outstanding portrayal of Drummond. His other performances with the Durham Theatre Guild and theatre groups in California and Iowa include roles in "The Country Girl," "Witness for the Prosecution" and "Arsenic and Old Lace."

Why did he never seriously consider going into professional theater? "An actor must be prepared to like acting more than eating. Then, I guess my middle class values have given me a non-Bohemian nature," he laughed.

Curtain time for "Tobacco Road" is 8:30 each evening, tomorrow through Sunday, with an additional performance Sunday afternoon at 2:30. Tickets for the Wed., Thurs., and Sun. performances are still available at 214 Abernethy Hall (Ph. 968-4468 and at Ledbetter-Pickard, both in Chapel Hill. All seats are reserved at $2 each.

Di-Phi To Debate 'Myth' Of UNC Coed

By HUBERT HAWKINS

Orators of the Di-Phi will clash tonight over a resolution condemning the "Myth of the Carolina Coed."

Arthur Hayes, President of the Dialectic-Philanthropic Society, has invited any and all interested members of the student body to come and speak on the bill. Curiosity-seekers are also welcome.

"We expect a lively discussion on this campus topic," Hayes said, "which should be of interest to all sound males.

"As usual we'll have a few especially good speeches, and there are always some very unique ideas floating around at these debates."

The resolution, introduced by Miss Brooks Garnett, reads as follows:

Whereas UNC has a ratio of undergraduates of approximately four males to each female, and

Whereas the social situation on campus involves many barriers including sorority-fraternity-dormitory conflicts, and

Whereas a myth about the "Carolina Coed" has evolved which is a misrepresentation of the majority of girls on campus (e.g. "non-individuals," "repugnant hypocrites," "dated-up snobs," etc.),

Now Therefore Be It Resolved By The Dialectic And Philanhtropic Literary Society That:

Article I: The Di-Phi condemns the "Myth of the Carolina Coed" as being non-representative of the majority of Carolina girls.

Article II: The Di-Phi condemns the current (superficial) attitude on campus that it is impolite to speak to people one does not know personally.

Article III: The Di-Phi endorses the current efforts on the part of the Carolina Women's Council and the Intra-dormitory Council to coordinate activities between men and women students.

Article IV: The Di-Phi requests that its president organize definite plans to encourage more women students in active participation in the Di-Phi Society.

The debate will be in the Di-Phi Hall, 3rd floor of New West, tonight at 7:30 p.m.

Christmas Can Be Merry At Moderate Cost

Books On This List Are Priced at

$2.50 OR LESS!

CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR TINY PEOPLE

PEGGY CLOTH BOOKS—Sturdy cloth resists little teeth, and the colorful illustrations, printed in non-toxic ink, are just right for little tots. Best of all, these books will stand boiling and washing. Several titles, of which our favorite is "Good Night". $1.00

KATE GREENAWAY MOTHER GOOSE—Although we stock several Mother Goose books, our pet is this little old-fashioned English edition, with its quaint and dainty colored illustrations. $1.50

THE WILD AND WOOLLY ANIMAL BOOK, by Nita Jones, with drawings by Dale Maxey. Our favorite dollar flat. The color is gay, but not obtrusive, the pictures modern but cuddly, and the "story" just enough for a very small person. $1.00

THE LITTLE ENGINE THAT COULD, by Watty Piper. An old favorite in lively new dress, and your child will love it just as much as you used to. $1.50

A TALE OF TAILS, by Elizabeth MacPherson. Another big book with big colored pictures that will delight the small reader. We think Mama will like it, too. $1.99

GIFTS FOR THE EIGHT-TO-TWELVE GROUP

THE CHILDREN'S CHRISTMAS CAROL, by Johanna Spyri. The author of Heidi in a sparkling tale for the six-to-ten age group. Handsome Alpine illustrations in full color $1.39

THE PHOENIX AND THE CARPET, by E. Nesbit. What happens when the children discover that a second-hand carpet, bought for the nursery, is a flying one. A classic among fairy tales. $1.95

THE COMIC LOOKING GLASS, edited by Hart Day Leavitt. A generous collection of comic writing, suitable for the young, by Thurber, Aesop, Benchley, O. Henry, and others. $1.95

THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES, by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. A wonderful introduction to the world of "grownup books," that will keep the young reader on his toes. $1.95

STARTING A ROCK AND MINERAL COLLECTION by Miriam Gilberi. A nice little flat book for the youngster who is old enough to collect. We recommend it for that eight-year-old-boy on your list. $1.00

GIVE LAUGHTER FOR CHRISTMAS

THE WILLOWDALE HANDCAR, by Edward Gorey. This little paper-back, like the author's earlier "The Hapless Child" is way-out-yonder Victorian humor, with Gothic overtones, and will wow the sophisticated. $1.50

DER WIZARD IN OZZENLAND—Dave Morrah, of Heinrich Schnibble fame, raises hob with another classic as he renders it into Carolina Moravian. Especially good as a gift for the student of German. Hardbound and delightful. $1.95

MEDICATED FABLES, by Joseph D. Wassersug. A wry Aesop for the medical profession. Full of chuckles and low-minded Morals, this is the ideal gift for your favorite M. D. $2.50

NOTHING BUT MAX—by Giovanetti. Animal cartoons form Punch that are a joy forever. Published at $3.50. Our Special $1.29

FRENCH LOVERS ARE LOVELY, a collection of cartoons in which French realism does battle with French senitment, selected by Edmund Swinglehurst. If your brain has ever sneered at your heart, we think you'll really enjoy this one. $1.39

And Gift-Wrapping is on the House!

At the Intimate we're glad to make any book you buy the prettiest thing under the tree.

Five Cent Christmas Cards, too!

While you're in the shop check our lively cards. You can't send more wishes at any price.

EVERYBODY LIKES CHRISTMAS STORIES

HER CHRISTMAS AT THE HERMITAGE, by Helen Topping Miller. A charming, heartwarming tale of Christmas in Andrew Jackson's day. A touch of romance, a touch of genuine sentiment, and the warm glow of the Yule log make this the perfect gift. $1.00

A CHRISTMAS CAROL, by Charles Dickens. A very handsome little volume, in the Peter Pauper gift book series. Let the miracle of Scrooge and Tiny Tim warm your Christmas celebration this year. $1.00

HOLIDAY GOODIES—another Peter Pauper Gift Edition. Lovely typography and gay colored decorations add to the charm of this collection of cookies and cakes for Christmas making. $1.00

THE OTHER WISE MAN, by Henry Van Dyke. Through the years more and ever more people find rich satisfaction in this beautifully written parable of the true Christmas spirit. $1.50

CHRISTMAS WITH ROBERT E. LEE, by Helen Topping Miller. The story of Marse Robert's first Christmas after his surrender at Appomattox. $1.00

FOR YOU WITH LOVE—Love is always fashionable, and this tender little poem by Louis Untermeyer, illustrated by Joan Walsh Anglund looks just right in a new Christmas jacket! $1.00

GIVE LOVELY ENGAGEMENT CALENDARS

NORTH CAROLINA DATE BOOK—Illustrated with photographs of North Carolina places and people. A wonderful gift for that friend who is temporarily stranded far from the Old North State. $1.50

BIRD WATCHER'S DATE BOOK—Each month features a rare bird, together with description, habitat and drawing or photograph. Space is provided for notes on birds seen that month, giving the book more than annual value. $1.50

OUR AMERICAN ENGAGEMENT CALENDAR—54 glorious photographs of America in natural color. A very handsome calender, and a nice gift for friends aboard. $1.50

THE FLOWER ARRANGEMENT CALENDAR FOR 1963—Always a favorite hereabouts, this calendar seems unusually nice this year. Comes in a cardboard box, ready for mailing. $1.50

MUSEUM MASTERPIECES ENGAGEMENT CALENDAR FOR 1963—A full-color reproduction of a modern painting for every month of the year, and each is suitable for framing later. Comes with a mailing envelope. $1.00

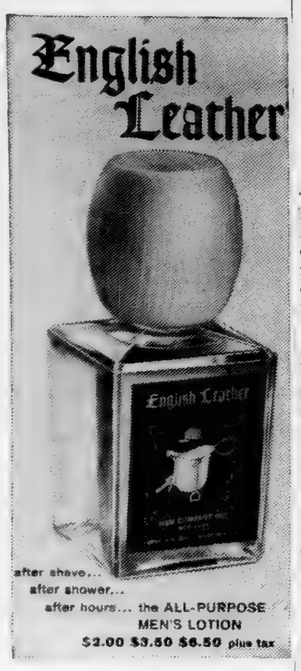
FLOWERS AND BIRDS FROM CHINA—A wall calendar, NOT an engagement one, but the reproductions, in lovely color, of Chinese prints make this a memorable gift. $2.00

NON FICTION FOR CHRISTMAS PLEASURE

ALWAYS SAY MAYBE, by Sandra Gould. A sophisticated guide for the young huntress. The jacket, by Robert Taylor, is slightly bawdy, and the approach hard-boiled, but don't be thrown off. Here's a chance to pass out some darn good advice, and get a name as a worldly soul, all at one time. $1.39

DINERS' CLUB COOK BOOK, by Myra Waldo. How to prepare the specialties of famous restaurants and influence people. $2.49

THE VIKING ROCKET STORY, by Milton W. Rosen. Follows a famous rocket from the drawing board to the stratosphere. Wonderful gift for a man or a mechanically inclined high schooler. $1.49



BEEFSTEAK RAID, by Edward Boykin. One of the last raids of General Wade Hampton was not for glory, but for food for starving Richmond. Here is the story, and it belongs on every Civil War shelf. $2.49

THE NEW PROFESSORS, Edited by Robert O. Bowen. An inside view of the teaching profession, presented through the observations, experiences, and candid opinions of nine able young professors. A welcome gift for your academic friends. $1.29

UNC Bowlers Win Behind Swann, Walker

UNC's number two bowling team walked off with top honors in the Big Four meet held Saturday at All-Star Lanes. The Tar Heel second team had 5,205 total pinfall for the afternoon's six games. Second place went to N. C. State's number one team.

Carol Swann and Wendell Walker paced the winners with 180 averages. Swann coupled sets of 536 and 548 for 1,084 six game series, while Walker rolled a 550-531—1,081. Other six game scores were Ron Zahray's 1,023; Steve Taylor's 1,019; and Clark Parker's 998.

Walker had the only 200-plus games for the winners, a 209 in the first set and 208 in the last. Swann finished up the day with an even 200.

Eddie Moreau, bowling with the number one Carolina team, had the high game and high average for the two UNC teams. He rolled a 222 game and averaged 181 for four games with his 726 total pinfall. His 557 in the second set was tops for the UNC bowlers.

Richard McMahon's 552-504—1,059 six-game set was the best for the first team. McMahon was the only other Tar Heel bowler to break 20, hitting a 203.

The next Big Four bowling tournament will be held at Sportland in Durham on December 15.

Ranson's Record

Carolina's venerable track coach Dale Ranson is in his 38th year of coaching. Officially, he has been head track and cross country coach since 1952, when he succeeded Robert A. (Coach Bob) Fetzer. All told, in Ranson's 38 years, Carolina teams have won 51 titles. The Hall of Famer's honor roll: 14 Southern Conference and five ACC cross country titles, 12 Southern Conference Indoor Games titles, four Southern Invitational Indoor Games titles, 14 Southern Conference outdoor championships, and one indoor and outdoor ACC championships.

Frosh Grapplers Triumph

Tar Heels Bow In Wrestling Opener

Jerry Cabe and Jack Jones were UNC's only wrestlers to salvage victory Saturday against Washington and Lee. The Generals opened UNC's season on a sad note, topping Sam Barnes' men, 19-8.

Jones, wrestling in the 157-pound division won his match after the Virginians had taken a 14-0 lead in four matches. Cabe devisioned W & L's Block in the heavyweight division for three more points. 177-pounder Gene Record fought the Generals' Smith to a draw for the final two points.

Joel Fishman, a 123-pound sophomore, was decisioned by West in the first match. Then, Ken Furr, another soph, lost his 130-pound match to Montgomery. W & L's Reeves racked up the third straight decision for the victors by decisioning sophomore Russ Simmons in the 137-pound contest.

Acting captain Willis Johnson was pinned with 1:12 left in the third period by W & L's 147-pound Stover in the only pin of the afternoon.

Jones narrowed the lead to 14-3 with his 3-2 decision over Albert, but sophomore Elliott Dworin was decisioned by Winfield to make it 17-3.

Cabe, only off the football field for one week, gained a point with an escape in the third period, then added two points with a take down to decision Block, 5-2.

The UNC frosh defeated the Generals' junior varsity, 19-11, in the varsity preliminary.

The Baby grapplers were down, 11-9, going into the final two matches, but 177-pound Jack Robinson pinned W & L's Ware and heavyweight Nick Sears did the same to give new freshman coach Joe Gratto a victory in his first coaching effort.

Paul Wellstone, Bill Cook and Jeff Adams recorded three-point decisions before the heavier frosh came through with their pins.

Kenan Coeds Win Tourney

Kenan Dorm captured first place in the Women's Athletic Association volleyball tournament completed last week. Alpha Gamma Delta's number two team finished second in the coed intramural tourney.

Tennis Club meetings will be discontinued until next spring, but the Badminton Club will start its meetings this afternoon at 3:30, replacing the Tennis Club on the week's agenda. Mr. Hogan will be the coed badminton instructor.

The Basketball Club held its first meeting yesterday afternoon and will meet each Monday at 3:30 p.m. with Anne Lister.

Also starting this week is the Volleyball Club which will hold its first meeting Thursday at 4:30 with Miss Kellam.

All club members are asked to meet at their assigned times on the floor of Women's Gym.

Coach's Posters Get Results

You might think Carolina English professor and wrestling Coach Sam Barnes was a Madison Avenue outcast still employing old advertising tricks of the trade to lure wrestlers to his team. For the fourth year in a row he has posted snappy and illustrated posters around the Carolina campus with come-hither messages.

This year's: "Bored with Barbells? Cramped by Isometric Contraction? Lonely from Building Muscles in the Privacy of Your Room? We need 24 clean-living American boys in assorted sizes for the varsity wrestling squad and 24 more for the freshman. Ninety minutes daily of good clean fun."

The response overwhelmed Hidden Persuader Barnes: 75 candidates.

Pall Mall Presents~ GIRL WATCHER'S GUIDE

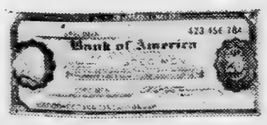
SWEET-TOOTHED CUPCAKE

CAMPUS TYPE V

The natural habitat of the Cupcake is the Home Economics kitchen. She believes, as her mother did, that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. While this viewpoint might be considered unsophisticated by many of today's more enlightened male students, none of them has ever been known to turn down a tin of her Fudge-Frosted Nut-Filled Brownies. She really has a way with a dish and, as you can see, she's quite a dish herself.

Just as the Cupcake has found the perfect recipe for Frosted Brownies, the makers of Pall Mall have found the perfect recipe for a delicious smoke. Taste Pall Mall's natural mildness and see what we mean.

Pall Mall's natural mildness is so good to your taste!



So smooth, so satisfying, so downright smokeable!

Socialism On Way Claims PL Leader

By ART PEARCE

In a meeting of the New Left Club Monday night, Milt Rosen, National Chairman of the Progressive Labor Movement, opened his speech by presenting the basis for a socialist movement in the United States today.

According to Rosen, a socialist movement in the U. S. will come in response to the evils and injustices of a capitalistic society and the internal policies employed by the "ruling class."

He began by describing in detail the internal problems in the U. S. that lay the basis for a "true socialistic movement." These problems, Rosen said, evolve about the following problems:

1) The United States economy has become stagnent, because the "ever - present contradictions of capitalism have resulted in overproduction;" 2) Economic competition has become heated and extreme, not only between capitalistic nations and their socialistic competitors; 3) Discontent of minorities has become marked, because "racism holds sway in this country, unchecked and more vigorous than ever before"; 4) Personal competition and exploitation has resulted in "moral destruction" and disregard for humanism.

Rosen said that a massive socialist movement in the U. S. would be the natural reaction to the present situation. He said, however, that the "ruling class" in the U. S. defends itself from the socialist movement by repression of factions and by "smashing and stifling all opposition at home. The ruling class has inacted such laws as the Smith Act and the McCarran Act, not only to stifle the opposition, but to jail them." The ruling class, said Rosen, has created such suppressive groups as the House Committee on Un-American Activities, groups that will "eventually be consigned to the ash can of history." Rosen said that "these are the tactics employed by the ruling class of a desperate, dying system."

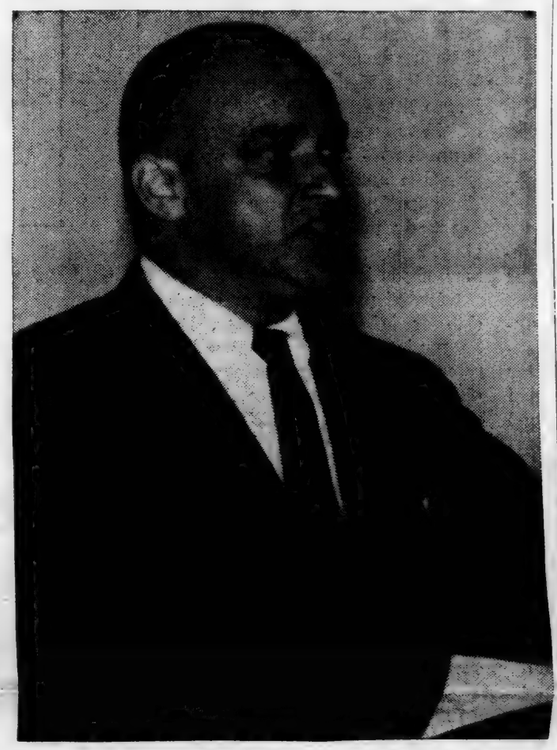
"We American Communists are few in number and the stakes are high," said Rosen, but if we are to take advantage of the state of discontent and the injustices in the U. S., we must press the socialistic movement at all costs. We must maintain the outlook of smashing the ruling party."

Shifting his approach, Rosen then turned to the international scene to "expose" United States foreign policy for what it is. U. S. policy abroad, according to Rosen, is basically one of intervention in the affairs of other nations in the hope of protecting U. S. imperialism by thwarting socialistic desires.

He described the following five specific areas to show his point:

1) In Africa, the U. S. has intervened in order to prevent a shift in the balance of power towards socialism. He pointed to the open murder of Lumumba and forceful control by the U. N.

2) In Southeast Asia, "10,000 U. S. troops are upholding the unwanted regime of the South Vietnamese," a regime that is depised by the people of Vietnam who desire socialism.



3) In Latin America, "the U. S. moved in when the success of socialism in Cuba presented a threat to U. S. imperialistic investments in all of Latin America."

4) In India, the U. S. has aided Nehru in the hope of controlling the "Chinese revolution" by keeping the Chinese in a state of war.

5) In Germany, the United States has attempted to control socialism by the "reserrection of the same barbarian Nazis who participated in the Hitler regime."

Rosen stated that "the United States allies itself with the most reactionary, fascist elements in a foreign country." He pointed to Spain and Batista's Cuba as prime examples. Rosen said that "in spite of the facade of disagreement, the Kennedy administration and the ultra right and racist groups in this country are in agreement."

In concluding his presentation, Rosen said that "American radicals (the socialists) do not have a violent outlook. History has shown that it is the ruling class that resorts to violence. The workers, however, must be prepared for violence out of self defense."

He added that since socialism is suppressed by the ruling class in the United Sttaes, "the fight for socialism is the fight for freedom and dignity: it is the noblest fight of them all."

After the close of his speech, Rosen entertained questions from the floor. One of the questions that came from the audience was "what are the difference, both ideologically and tactically, between the American Communist Party and the Progressive Labor Movement?" Rosen said that the American Communist Party felt that the American ruling class could be educated to ways of socialism, while the Progressive Labor movement maintained that the ruling class could not be re-oriented into socialism.

In terms of tactics, this means that while the Communist party advocates "a revisionistic approach," the Progressive Laborites think in terms of the working class . . . "showing the working class that the solution to its problems is impossible under the present system, and organizing them for making the change."

Negroes Surprised At Action

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (UPI) —A decision by the University of Alabama to close its doors to new applicants means the school will remain segregated until at least the fall semester of 1963 unless a court intervenes.

The decision apparently took Negro leaders by surprise.

A spokesman for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference SCLC in Atlanta said Tuesday that up until the time of the announcement at least two Negro students felt they had a good chance of being admitted.

"Two of them had sent in $20 deposits for dormitory rooms," said Rev. Andrew J. Young, SCLC's director for voter registration.

"They also had made arrangements for their medical records and transcripts of their grades to be forwarded to the school," said Young. "As nearly as we knew, they were all set."

High Enrollment Blamed

University President Frank A. Rose announced Monday he had ordered processing halted on all pending applications, including three from Negroes. He said he was taking the step because of the "pressure on enrollments."

Rose's action marked the fourth consecutive semester admission have been closed without and advance public notice being given.

University officials disputed the SCLC stand that the Negro applicants had all their forms in order. A school spokesman said supporting credentials were lacking.

Rose said applicants were being held for processing at a subsequent semester specified by the prospective student.

Negroes Not Identified

The three Negroes were not identified by the university. However, one girl, Vivian Malone of Mobile, a student at Alabama A&M in Huntsville, said she was among those who, applied.

She said she had not been notified about processing being stopped and declined to comment on the move although she said she felt her application was complete when submitted.

She said she would not know what course to follow until officially notified by the university.

Both Gov. John Patterson and Gov.-elect George Wallace, strong segregationist, were notified of the move last week. Wallace, who takes office next month, had pledged during the gubernatorial campaign to go to jail rather than permit integration.

Alabama and South Carolina are the only remaining states with complete segregation in publicly supported schools.

Second In Series Of Latin America Films Set Tonight

Tonight at 7 p.m. in Carroll Hall, Graham Memorial, in cooperation with the Political Science Department will present the second of a series of three movies on Latin American life. The movie tonight will be "Les Olvidados," or "The Young and the Damned," a story of juvenile delinquency in Mexico.

The film, which was made in Mexico, will be introduced by Mr. Harvey Wolin, a young poet who lived for two years in Mexico. Mr. Wolin, a graduate of the City College of New York, is one of the founders and former editor of "El Corno Emplumado," or "The Plumed Horn," a bi-lingual arts review of the two hemispheres published in Mexico City.

Before the movie tonight, Dr. Herbert Cockburn will make a brief talk about last week's movie, "Dark River."

Roper, Van Oates To Pick Chairmen For Campus Chest

By MARY REGAN

The 1963 Campus Chest drive headed by Van Oatts and Al Roper gets under way this week with the selection of co-chairmen to head the three major areas — carnival auction, and solicitations.

Interviews are being held today, tomorrow, and next week in the Campus Chest office on the 2nd floor of the YMCA building. A boy and a girl will be chosen to head each area. Committee members will also be selected.

"Things are shaping up fine," Oatts said. "Now all we need are people to work. Then the funds will come."

Al Roper said that heads of campus organizations are being contacted and asked for their support in the drive.

The Campus Chest drive will be set near the time of Greek Week in the spring semester. "But even though it seems to be a long way off, there is a lot of planning and preparation to be done now," Miss Oatts said.

This drive is the only authorized fund-raising drive on the Carolina campus. The goal for this year is set at over $5,000.

Last year the Campus Chest netted $4,300. Of this $1200 went to the World University Service, $1,000 for child psychiatric care at Butner, $500 to the American Friends Service, $800 to N .C. Heart Association, and $753 to the Tours Exchange Program.

The specific charities to be supported this year will be selected by a board made up of administration and student leaders.

Students interested in working with the Campus Chest should go to the Y for interviews from 4-6 and 7-9 p.m. today tomorrow, or Mon.-Thur. next week. Or they may contact Al Roper at 968-9027 or Van Oatts at 968-9189.

If Dems Buck Reapportionment

Editorialist Predicts GOP Growth

By DONA FAGG

The more the Democrats fight reapportionment the bigger the switch is going to be to the Republican party, stated William Snider, associate editor of the Greensboro Daily News in a talk to the Press Club Monday night in Howell Hall lounge.

"People will rise up and oppose the party in power if they feel that something is not right. The furor in Guilford County—'the Second Battle of Guilford County Courthouse on Nov. 6—'was an example of the switch," Snider commented.

Looking ahead to the gubernatorial race, Snider predicted that Charles Jonas will beat Beverly Lake—another example of the party switch.

"I may be wrong but I think that Jonas as a more skillful campaigner will win. Both men are conservative but I think the people will choose the more conventional conservative. Jonas favors the establishment and I think he stands a better chance although Lake may have learned from the last campaign."

He predicted that the Democrats might draft Richardson L. Preyer, judge of the Middle District Federal Court, as opposition to Lake.

Snider, a 1941 graduate of UNC with a major in journalism, has been a member of the Greensboro Daily News editorial staff since 1951.

Aside from his political commentary, Snider offered suggestions on editorial writing to the journalism students.

Snider explained that the News held to a policy of not manipulating public opinion, but offering the "best opinion that could be mustered." The purposes will be accomplished, he said, "if the editorial page has something to say and says it with grace and conviction."

"We are the critics of society and in many cases the only written word that some people see in their lifetimes. There is tremendous power in the press—more than some people realize."

Snider stated that the News editorial staff felt that they could be more effective if they did not identify themselves with political personalities. However, he stated that the News did make itself clear on campaign issues.

"The old newspaper of party label is dying out. Generally, the press ought to be careful of being strictly partisan," he warned.

Snider stated that the news viewed the editorial page as a "forum for all shades of political opinion." He cited the dialogue between the writer and the reader in letters to the editor as an example of the exchange.

"The News gives over one-fourth of the editorial page to letters. A great many of these letters are not from crackpots although we do have our share. They respect our right to disagree and we in turn respect theirs. The page is open to even the most diverse opinions," Snider said.

He stated that none of the letters were withheld unless there was a technical difficulty such as "a letter containing a libelous statement or one that is unsigned."

David Henderson To Address YDC

Representative David Henderson, Congressman from North Carolina's 3rd District, will address the monthly meeting of the UNC-YDC Monday, Dec. 10 at 7:30 p.m. in the Law School Courtroom.

Henderson, a native of Wallace, N. C., is a graduate of Davidson College and of the U.N.C. Law School. He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the U. S. Air Corps as a reserve graduate of Davidson in 1942; served overseas in India, China, and Okinawa; and was discharged as a major in 1946.

Henderson held numerous local offices in Duplin County prior to his election to the 87th Congress in 1960. He was renominated in May, 1962, with 84% of the vote and was reelected November 6, 1962, without opposition.

George Kornegay, president of the U.N.C. Young Democrats Club, yesterday urged all interested Democrats to attend the meeting. "Having heard Rep. Henderson on previous occasions," he said, "I am willing to guarantee that his speech will be of interest to all Democrats."

STAR OF BETHLEHEM

Continuing through January 7th, the Morehead Planetarium will present its traditional Christmas program, "Star of Bethlehem" at 11 a.m., 3, 4, and 8:30 p.m. on Saturdays, at 2, 3, 4, and 8:30 p.m. Sundays, and at 8:30 p.m. each weekday.

LEWIS TO SPEAK

Fulton Lewis III, former staff member of the House Un-American Activities Committee, will speak Tuesday, Dec. 11, in the Manning Hall Courtroom.

The Young Americans for Freedom will sponsor the talk, which is open to the public.

Lewis, son of radio commentator Fulton Lewis Jr., was narrator of the controversial film "Operation Abolition."

The 'Hammer Of Justice': Seeger And His Critics

It was last spring when Joan Baez stood before a full Memorial Hall audience. The striking young girl with the long black hair and the rich, pure voice, spoke very softly as she dedicated a song to "a man who stands by what he believes—and that's a very rare thing these days."

The man was Pete Seeger.

* * *

To some people Seeger is a great towering figure, the "grand patriarch" of present-day folk singers—author, originator and adapter of many of the most popular songs today (such as "If I Had A Hammer" and "Where Have All The Flowers Gone").

To other people he is a low, un-American figure, a leading Communist. Included in this latter group is the House Un-American Activities Committee, which had him indicted for contempt of Congress in the 1950s. (His conviction for contempt was reversed by the U. S. Court of Appeals.)

* * *

Within the state there has been some opposition to Seeger's appearance on the campus. Some persons apparently take offense at the New Left's sponsorship of Seeger, although the Left does not profit from the show. Others criticize the proceeds going to a direct-action desegregationist group — but primary opposition obviously results from Seeger's political background.

Now the queston is, What are we talking about — politics or folk-singing? What relation does Seeger's politics have to his performance tonight?

Will such songs as "Not Going To Study War No More" make the audience rush out to disarm all the nation's Nike and Polaris missiles? —Or might it, imbue the students with a small understanding of the basic irrationality of nuclear war? Will "If I Had A Hammer" make Negro listeners beat in the brains of their white oppressors with hammers — Or might it possibly give the audience an insight into the impatient desire for removing the truly un-American racial barriers, here and now, "with the hammer of justice."

Of what party or cell or country club or lodge or whatever, Pete Seeger is a member will have little relevance to his performance tonight. As students, more than any other section of the citizenry, we should not be confused by false arguments and spurious logic. What you will hear is the folk songs of the nation's leading folk writer and composer — there will be no cell meeting, no band of conspirators taking oaths in sheep's blood.

The overwhelmingly logical path is not to be frightened away from the Seeger concert by the muddled words of those who are afraid of men who sing songs praising peace and scorning war . . . not be frightened by the words of those who shudder at the thought of a "hammer of justice." The logical path leads to Memorial Hall to see and hear the controversial Mr. Seeger, and decide for yourself. (JC)

Technically Speaking

Student government in recent years has managed to involve itself in several very confusing and embarassing situations. One of the most confused has been this year's freshman class presidential election.

UP candidate Johnson led SP candidate Harrell in the original election, oh so long ago, Nov. 6—but the Student Party protested because a person who was not running for the office, somehow got his name on the ballot. The votes cast for him could have swung the election.

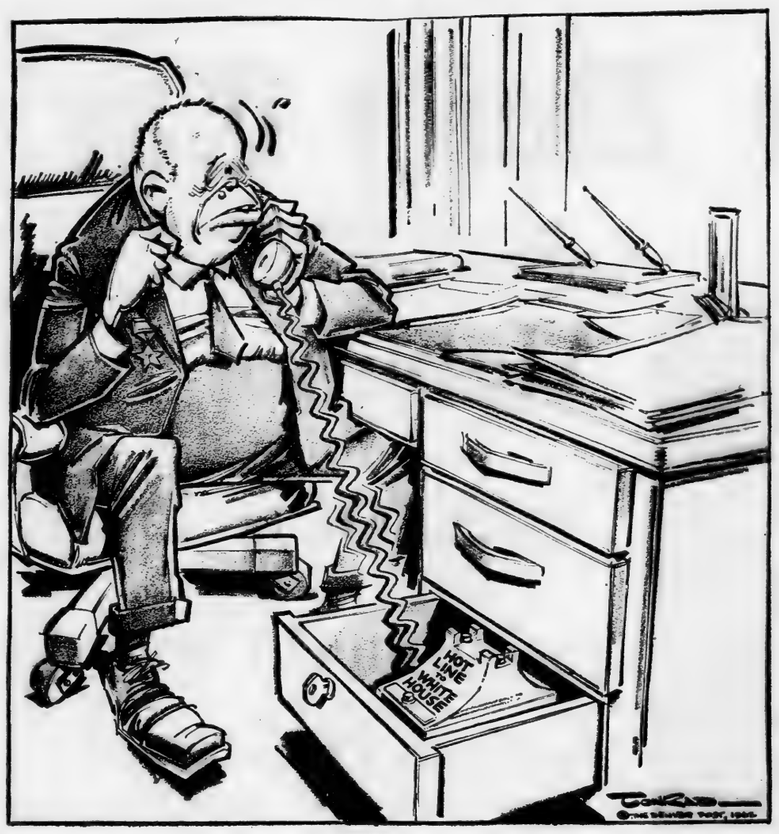
A new election was set—it was called a "re-election." This time Harrell won. But the battle had just begun—the SP and Harrell had failed to turn in an expense statement, which is an election law requirement. The University Party protested — the Elections Board then ruled Harrell was the winner—and the UP appealed to the Constitutional Council — and then there was another appeal saying UP chairman Mike Chanin had signed the appeal instead of the candidate Johnson, and his appeal thus should be thrown out.

The Council accepted this final appeal and discarded Chanin's appeal on the technicality — thus avoiding taking any stand on the case itself.

The Constitutional Council, it seems, should have thrown out the appeal that Chanin's appeal was improperly presented. In the maze of improper, half-hearted obeyance of the laws throughout this election squabble, it ill becomes the Council to make its decision on a minute, even insignificant, point. The Council should have heard the case and decided if such things as expense statements are technicalities—or if, rather, they are integral protections of candidates and studentry.

This Council decision on expense statements would have to be made within the broader context of "Do the election laws cover special elections as well as regular elections" —which it seems they would have to, otherwise there would be no laws governing the election whatstudents were taking part in somesoever. As things wound up, the thing of a mock election.

Another disturbing point brought up by the Council decision was the law which prevents anyone except the candidate from appealing an election. It would seem more just and more practical to allow any interested student to appeal an election. Often it is bad politics for a candidate or a party to appeal a vote, as if they were "crying over spilt milk."



The Council's decisions, the elections and re-elections, appeals and more appeals have little importance in terms of the office being sought. But in reaching the end of elections for a relatively unimportant office, student government has made a couple of important, and somewhat disturbing, decisions. (JC)

Films

The three films comprising the trilogy on Latin American life currently being shown at Carroll Hall each Wednesday night are not only unique stylistically as works of film provide us with some valuable insights into Latin American culture.

At a time when relations with the other peoples of the Americas are being jeopardized by U. S. ignorance we can only welcome the opportunity to see films which attempt to provide us with a true to life portrayal unlike the Hollywood fantasies that make up most of our film diet.

Hamlet Revisited

Joe To K.—'Thou Art A Fink'

By BILL BAGGS
In The Miami News

Conversations overheard by our candid microphones in a Kremlin garden:

KHRUSHCHEV:
"To be, or not to be: that is the question:
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
The missiles and bombers of outrageous fortune,
Or . . ."

A GHOST NAMED JOE: "Or what?"

KHRUSHCHEV: "Or to take arms against a sea of Chinamen,
And by opposing end them?
To Die: To sleep."

A GHOST NAMED JOE: "Are you some kind of nut or something?"

KHRUSHCHEV: "O, woe is me.
To have seen what I have seen, see what I see!"

A GHOST NAMED JOE: "You see me. Old Joe. You remember Joe?"

KHRUSHCHEV: "Me thought you had shuffled off this mortal coil?"

A GHOST NAMED JOE: "Me too. But I was rattled by your frivolous ways. What, perchance, Nikita, do you think you are doing?"

KHRUSHCHEV: "I am but mad north-northwest; when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a handsaw."

A GHOST NAMED JOE: "The wind has been out of the north-northwest a long time. Why do you dissolve my empire? You left Fidel up the creek without a paddle and you have alienated Mao Tse-tung. And now you say we must learn from the Capitalists. Nikita, I ask you, is there any method in your madness?"

KHRUSHCHEV: "The time is out of joint; O cursed spite,
That ever I was born to set it right."

A GHOST NAMED JOE: "You are not setting anything right. You are throwing Marx and Lenin out the window. Me, too. If I had known how stained your brain, you'd be in the same fix as Trotsky right now."

KHRUSHCHEV: "While memory holds a seat
In this distracted globe. Remember thee!
Yea, from the table of my memory I'll wipe away all trivial fond records."

A GHOST NAMED JOE: "Wipe away all trivial records? You nut. You have rearranged the truth to make me look like a latter-day Rasputing. And profits? You talk of profits as if you were Henry Ford. How do you get profits into Leninism?"

KHRUSHCHEV: "I wear a contenance more in sorrow than anger."

A GHOST NAMED JOE: "If I were alive and not a gossamer body, you wouldn't have any contenance at all, because you would not have any head."

KHRUSHCHEV: "In the proches of mine ears, Joe, I hear you. But it is not reason. Just words, words, words. Away from me, Skidoo!"

A GHOST NAMED JOE: "Gladly, and back to the grave, perchance to drink. I wish I had a jug of vodka. Within the book and volume of my brain, I do believe that you, Nikita, are a fink."

U. S. Blamed For Trouble

Neutrals: U.N. Should Admit China

By Stephanie Gervis
In the Village VOICE

UNITED NATIONS: To the average American the ways of the neutrals may be forever inscrutable.

For years the United States Government and the American people have been reciting a litany against the admission of the Communist Chinese to the United Nations. The Government has declared that the Peiping regime is belligerent and unruly and that its admission to the U. N. would make a mockery of that organization's fundamental dedication to peace. The majority of the American people have consistently said amen to that. And now Communist China, as if to provide us with a case in point, has very obligingly invaded India, the biggest neutral of them all.

But before we could say "I told you so," India's fellow neutrals in the U. N. were pointing to the undeclared war between the two Asian giants as the best proof yet that the Communist Chinese should be in the U. N. India herself continued to champion Red China's cause in the world body. Less than two weeks after the fighting broke out, the Chinese Communists failed to gain admission by only 14 votes. The tally was 42 in favor of admission, 56 against, and 12 abstentions. Half of the favorable votes were cast by Afro-Asian neutrals. One of them was India.

Embarrassment

But although the neutrals continue to hold their line on Communist China's admission to the U. N., the Sino-Indian conflict is an inescapable political embarrassment to the Afro-Asian bloc. Probably this more than anything else is why they have been so quiet about the issue in the U. N. They have avoided labeling the Chinese as aggressors by pointing out that the disputed territory is far-off and inaccessible and that they know too little about it to pass on the legitimacy of China's claim. However, speculation that the conflict will weaken the position of the neutrals qua neutrals by forcing them to take sides is still premature. Unless the Chinese push their offensive, taking land that is undisputedly Indian, the non-aligned countries will probably continue in their reluctance to take any official stand on the side of either antagonist. And if an expanded Chinese offensive should force them to officially declare themselves for India, they could still defend their neutral label with the same line some of them now use to explain their admitted but still unofficial "sympathy" for India. In the great power struggle between East and West, they say, India is neutral and China is aligned with the Communist bloc. How is it prejudicial to their neutralism to side with another neutral, they ask.

One African delegate explained: "India is an uncommitted country. If a member of your club is engaged in a dispute, you side with the member of your club. Out of sheer solidarity we have this sympathy." Another noted, however, that some of the small unaligned countries are afraid of China.

Why then did they vote to admit the Red Chinese to the U. N.? precisely because the Peiping government is belligerent and unruly.

National Pride

An African delegate referred to an argument presented earlier by an Asian: if they are beligerent and unruly, they should be brought within the discipline of the United Nations. The African went on to attribute China's continued obstreperousness to the very fact that she is excluded from the U. N. It is a matter, he said, of national pride.

"The Chinese," he maintained, "have to make their presence felt because they are deprived of this in the U. N. It is impossible that the Chinese will accept being barred from the U. N. as a matter of fact. They will continue causing trouble until they make their presence in the U. N. absolutely necessary."

If Red China were a member of the U. N., he added, it might be possible to settle the problem there rather than on the battlefield.

According to a Yugoslav, the Russians are quietly opting for mediation by U. Thant. Red China's exclusion from the world organization, however, leaves her open to refuse the good offices of its chief executive.

None of the neutrals blames India for accepting military aid from the West. "No country is neutral when it comes to its own security," one said. Nor is anyone laughing because Krishma Menon, Communist China's stanch advocate in the U. N. lost his job as India's Defense Minister as a result of the invasion. Menon, the neutrals point out, was consistent. He did not suddenly close his eyes to the fact that the Peiping regime is at least the de facto government of over 600 million people. Although Menon's own country was being beseiged by the Chinese Communists, he did not reverse this stand on their right to membership in the world body. The neutrals' reaction to his plight was more one of admiration than of amusement.

Outlaw by Necessity

Many neutrals, however, are more impatient than ever with this country for keeping Communist China out of the U. N. By doing so, they feel, we are forcing her into the role of an outlaw who threatens the peace. There is an underlying fear that if a country as big as India is no match for China, and if the Chinese continue to be excluded not only from U. N membership but from U. N. sanctions as well, the only possible check on any future expansionist moves by Peiping is the military might of the United States. Intervention by the U. S. would lead to intervention by the Soviets, and the result would be World War III. Even now the neutrals fear that if the fighting is prolonged the Russians, though reluctant to alienate India, would have to live up to their commitments to China and counteract U. S. and British aid to India. To the neutrals, China's invasion of India proves not how right but how wrong we are.

Right now, according to one African, the search for a compromise to end the fighting is "a boiling issue in all of the embassies outside the United Nations." But he and his colleagues believe that these negotiations should be kept going on inside the United Nations. The blame for keeping them out is being laid at our doorstep.

Letters To The Editors

Seeger And Girls' Curfew

Folk Singer Has Red Background

To the Editors,

Hallelujah! The Communist Party's favorite folk singer is coming to town. Those of you who are anxious to see a fellow traveller up close should be sure to plunk down your dollar (which will no doubt help send another "freedom rider" through Alabama, or better, help pay Pete Seeger's lawyers.) Particularly if you are interested in two hours of such "folk" songs as "Study the War No More," "Let's Have Peace," "It's a Bourgeois Town (Wash., D. C.)," "Talking Union," etc., you should attend.

And if someone tries to tell you that ole Pete is merely "liberal" in his views, then let him read the 1961 Annual Report of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, which says:

"Pete Seeger, who has been identified as a member of the Communist Party, was convicted of contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions about party membership and activities asked him by this committee in August 1955. Seeger has marched in Communist Party May Day parades, has performed for various units of the Communist Party, for its cultural division and, in 1949, in behalf of the 12 Communist Party leaders then being tried under the Smith Act. In his contempt trial, the Government informed the court that in the years 1942 to 1945 alone Seeger had appeared at 24 separate events sponsored by Communist-front organizations. He is without question, the best known of all the Communist Party's entertainers."

'Beating Curfew Often Dangerous

To the Editors,

How bad is this? A girl calls up saying that she will be returning to Chapel Hill from Washington, D. C. late because of some reason not disclosed in the article; and comes in 1 hour and 5 minutes late.

Last year alone at least two students were KILLED trying to "beat the curfew" and needless to say many many chances were taken and several accidents resulted because of the attempt. Often for one reason or another, it is difficult to arrive at the bewitching hour especially when a person travels from a distant place and has to consider the automobile mechanisms, road conditions; weather, or other possibilities that could cause a delay.

Recently I learned that girls must be in by 12 midnight on returns from Thanksgiving, Christmas and the like. A girl may however, call in and as I understand it is given a whole hour to make it back. Suppose that she is 50 miles away and has a delay for some reason but averaging 58.74 mph over crooked North Carolina roads which she usually can at best average 51.25 mph she would be able to get back in time. Is she or the driver to endanger the lives of the persons in the car or the lives of others on the road in order not to be late? Come on bosses and use your heads!

Bad Checks Honor Offense

To the Editors,

According to the article in the November 27th issue of the DTH, the legislature wants to make the passing of a bad check an honor violation.

I would like to know why the passing of a bad check is NOT an honor violation to begin with. To my mind it amounts to lying, saying you have money in the bank to back your check, when in fact you know you don't.

Even if passing a bad check somehow is not an honor violation, how can our legislature make it an honor violation? If our "honorable students" have to be led by the hand, told what is right and wrong, and have their honor legislated to them, then I think our honor system is not worth the trouble.

Lacrosse Players Need Equipment

To the Editor,

Lacrosse players have worked hard in the three years I have played at UNC, and have slowly expanded their schedule, their supply of equipment, and the number of participants. Although the lack of a professional coach may again keep Lacrosse from reaching Varsity status, the prospects for games and players this spring are good.

Every year there are more Lacrosse players in the Freshman class, but if in any one season the team fails to fight for the right to play, the club will be disbanded and extremely hard to re-establish.

I urge all former players and those who would play in the future to attend the meeting held by Coach Rabb in 304 Woollen Gym, at 7:00 p.m. Wednesday, Dec. 5.

—Bill Bevis

REFLECTIONS

Belated congratulations go to the Varsity Theater for having reached the height of capitalistic exploitation.

Two weeks ago the theater advertised a film called "The Story of Eleanor Roosevelt" — the showing was timed only a week after her death. All right — well and good.

But we looked closer: the advertisements read "Greer Garson starring as Eleanor Roosevelt . . ." Then in small type, it said "Sunrise at Campobello."

Bong — struck a bell. "Sunrise at Campobello", by Rore Shary, is a story centering around Franklin D. Roosevelt, with Ralph Bellamy in the lead role — and Greer Garson as his wife.

So, suddenly a story about FDR becomes "The Story of Eleanor Roosevelt". Very cool, Varsity Theater, very cool . . . but just a LITTLE BIT misrepresentative. . . .

Tass Head To Speak

Nikolai D. Turkatenko, Acting Chief of Russia's Tass News Bureau for the the U. S. and the U.N., will speak at 8 p.m. Thursday in Carroll Hall.

Sponsored by the Carolina Forum, Turkatenko will discuss the "Dissemination of News Within the Soviet Union." The customary a question and answer period will follow the lecture.

Tass is the official Telegraph News Agency of the USSR. Little information is available about Mr. Turkatenko, but his position is obviously an important one to the Communist Party.

Last summer, Turkatenko spoke to college students acting as interns at the United Nations in New York. This will be Turkatenko's second visit to a town outside New York. The first was a speaking visit to Princeton, N. J.

Students To Ask For Improvements

The Student Affairs Committee is launching a program to present student needs to the 1963 N. C. General Assembly.

The committee will concentrate on capital improvements for a new student union combined with an undergradaute library and an addition to Woollen Gymnasium.

Bill Hoyle of Greensboro is chairman of the State Affairs Committee and will be in charge of student efforts to make the opinions of students known to the state legislators.

Students have taken the initiative in offering their services in approaching the Legislature, and have asked for a meeting with Chancellor William B. Aycock to discuss the facets of the University's capital improvements budget affecting a library-union building and the gym expansion.

Chancellor Aycock will meet with the student committee headed by Hoyle Dec. 11.

The student union combined with an undergraduate library was a primary item on the University's requests defeated in the 1962 bond election. The project has now been placed among the major items requested by the University in the next session of the Legislature.

Seeger Concert Set Tonight At 8 p. m.

"I would place him in the first rank of American folk singers," Seeger, who will sing tonight at Carl Sanburg has said of Pete 8 in Memorial Hall.

To the accompaniment of the 5-string banjo or rumbling 12-string guitar, his songs range around the world, from Georgia in our own Deep South to Wales, to Africa, to Spain.

From the very start of his career 15 year ago Seeger's concerts have always featured audience participation. "He has the ability to set a crowd on fire," Alan Lomax, the noted folklorist, once said. Seeger himself notes that "scattered through my program are a lot of songs which require the crowd to join in or they don't sound properly."

A group which Seeger helped found in 1950, The Weavers, is often credited with starting the current folksong revival in the U. S. In addition to giving concerts here, in England and in Canada, Seeger has made upwards of 50 LP albums, edited song books and magazines, made folk music films, authored or co-authored dozens of songs, including "Kisses Sweeter Than Wine," "Where Have All the Flowers Gone?" and "If I Had a Hammer."

Morrison Publishes Work

"Josephus Daniels Says . . ." a new book by Joseph L. Morrison, will be published this week by the University of North Carolina Press.

Dr. Morrison is an associate professor of Journalism at UNC. Though he has written widely for many periodicals, this is his first book.

Josephus Daniels Says . . . concerns the editorial opinions, policies, and political leanings of the "Tar Heel Editor," who was longtime editor of the Raleigh News and Observer.

When Josephus Daniels left school at the age of 18 to become local editor of the Wilson Advance, he was on his way to earning a reputation throughout the state.

In 1885 he combined two moneylosing papers in Raleigh into the moderately successful State Chronicle. By the 1890's his statewide reputation was secured.

When he took over the editorship of the News and Observer in 1894, he was already deeply involved in North Carolina politics. He never felt "at home" out of the Tar Heel State, and his heart yearned for North Carolina even during his term as President Wilson's Secretary of the Navy.

"What Daniels called privilege remained the lifelong target of his reform impulse . . . He was always prepared to put human rights ahead of property rights," says Dr. Morrison, "and his enthusiasm did not falter when he became a rich man. He fought for legislative support of the University of North Carolina, for public education for both the Negro and the White, and he became an outspoken sympathizer of organized labor."

Daniels supported free silver and opposed trusts, but these issues bound him to political allies whose views he did not always share. "He looked upon free silver essentially as an opening wedge in the fight for comprehensive reform measures," states Dr. Morrison.

When Theodore Roosevelt came into office, Daniels found himself in a peculiar position. He applauded many of T. R.'s triumphs, such as arranging the Treaty of Portsmouth which ended the Russo-Japanese War, and he stated editorially, "Mr. Williams Jennings Bryan is right in saying "Roosevelt is Democratic — in spots.'" Whenever he said something good about Roosevelt, Daniels managed to say something better about Bryan.

Dr. Morrison points out that although Daniels was often inconsistent in his political views, this could be explained by Daniel's background and his belief in the importance of a strong, unified Democratic party in North Carolina.

By 1904, the News and Observer had the largest circulation of any newspaper published in North Carolina. Daniels managed to remain all the stock he had previously sold to his friends, and this ownership of the paper in the hands of his family.

the fourth dimension: TIME

...still a mysterious concept to science. Time is only an idea, an abstraction...an area of shadow, speculation—and surprise.

SEPT. 5, 1752, NEVER HAPPENED!...Nor did any date from Sept. 3 to 13, at least in England and the American Colonies. Why? The King decreed that these days would be skipped to correct a discrepancy between the Old English calendar and the newly adopted Gregorian calendar. This left puzzled Englishmen and colonists with one 19-day month and a 355-day year.

THE HAMSTER'S BUILT-IN "CONTINUOUS CLOCK"...enables him to maintain his daily activities of eating and sleeping without the usual stimuli of light and darkness. He lives on exactly the same schedule even in total darkness.

HAPPY TALK

As we all know, conversation is terribly important on a date. When lulls in the conversation run longer than an hour or two, one's partner is inclined to grow logy—even sullen. But occasionally one finds it difficult to keep the talk going, especially when one is having a first date with one. What, then, does one do? If one is wise, one follows the brilliant example of Harlow Thurlow.

Harlow Thurlow prepares. That is his simple secret. When Harlow is going to take out a new girl, he makes sure in advance that the conversation will not languish. Before the date, he goes to the library and reads all 24 volumes of the encyclopedia and transcribes their contents on his cuffs. Thus he makes sure that no matter what his date's interests are, he will have ample material to keep the conversation alive.

Take, for example, Harlow's first date with Priscilla de Gasser, a fine, strapping, blue-eyed broth of a girl, lavishly constructed and rosy as the dawn.

Harlow was, as always, prepared when he called for Priscilla, and, as always, he did not start to converse immediately. First he took her to dinner because, as everyone knows, it is useless to try to make conversation with an empty coed. Her attention span is negligible. Also, her stomach rumbles so loud it is difficult to make yourself heard.

"Wash your cuffs and be my love!"

So he took her to a fine steak house where he stoked her with gobbets of Black Angus and mounds of French fries and thickets of escarole and battalions of petit fours. Then, at last, dinner was over and the waiter brought two finger bowls.

"I hope you enjoyed your dinner, my dear," said Harlow, dipping into his finger bowl.

"Oh, it was grandy-dandy!" said Priscilla. "Now let's go someplace for ribs."

"Later, perhaps," said Harlow. "But right now, I thought we might have a conversation."

"Oh, goody, goody, two-shoes!" cried Priscilla. "I been looking everywhere for a boy who can carry on a intelligent conversation."

"Your search is ended, madam," said Harlow, and pulled back his sleeves and looked at his cuffs to pick a likely topic to start the conversation.

Oh, woe! Oh, lackaday! Those cuffs on which Harlow had painstakingly transcribed so many facts—those cuffs on which he had noted such diverse and fascinating information—those cuffs, I say, were nothing now but a big, blue blur! For Harlow—poor Harlow!—splashing around in the finger bowl, had gotten his cuffs wet and the ink had run and not one word was legible! And Harlow—poor Harlow!—looked upon his cuffs and broke out in a night sweat and fell dumb.

"I must say," said Priscilla after several silent hours, "that you are a very dull fellow. I'm leaving."

With that she flounced away and poor Harlow was too crushed to protest. Sadly he sat and sadly lit a cigarette.

All of a sudden Priscilla came rushing back. "Was that," she asked, "a Marlboro you just lit?"

"Yes," said Harlow.

"Then you are not a dull fellow," she cried, and sprang into his lap. "You are bright! Anybody is bright to smoke such a perfect joy of a cigarette as Marlboro which is just chock full of yummy flavor, which has a Selectrate filter which comes in a soft pack that is really soft, and a Flip-Top Box that really flips, and which can be bought wherever cigarettes are sold in all fifty states and Duluth . . . Harlow, tiger, wash your cuffs and be my love."

"Okay," said Harlow, and did, and was. © 1962 Max Shulman

UNC Gets First ACC Test Against Clemson's Tigers

Heels Seek Second Win Of Season

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's Tar Heels get their first big test of the basketball season tonight against a young, but highly regarded Clemson team.

Dean Smith's men had an easy time winning over Georgia, 89-64, in the season opener, but today's contest should give an indication of things to come against taller teams.

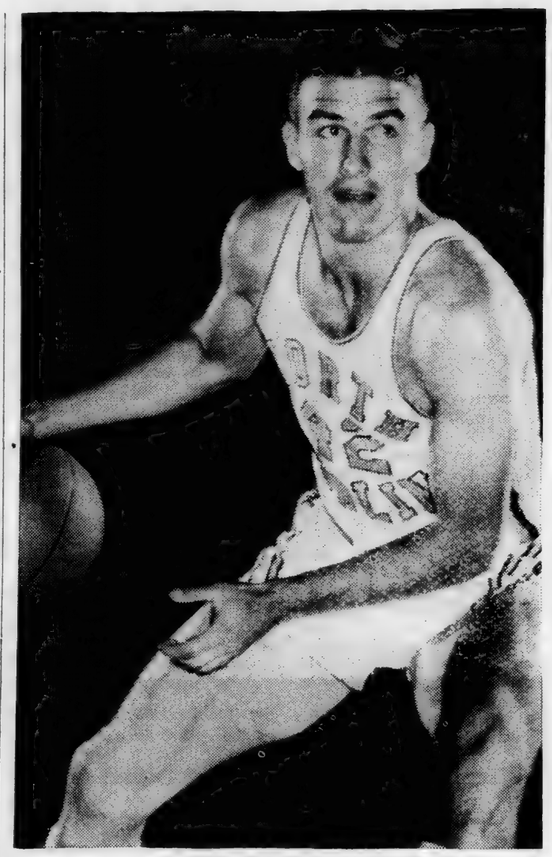
Carolina's tallest starters are Billy Cunningham and Ray Respess, 6-4½ sophomores. The Tigers boast a lot more beef in 6-8 Donnie Mahaffey, 6-8 Manning Privette, 6-7 Woody Morgan and 6-5 Gary Burnisky.

But the Tigers, who budded into brilliance in the ACC tournament last spring, had their high hopes of a winning season for the first time since 1952 jolted a little with a 56-55 loss to N. C. State at Clemson Monday night.

In that close contest Mahaffey led the Tiger scoring with 11 points. Privette followed with 10.

Four men hit double figures in UNC's opener. Yogi Poteet tallied 21, Charlie Shaffer 20, Larry Brown 17 and Mike Cooke 12. Respess, who scored eight points, and Cunningham, who had six, join Poteet, Shaffer and Brown in tonight's starting lineup.

Choppy Patterson, who sat out last year because of an automobile wreck injury, is the only senior starter for new Clemson Coach Bobby Roberts. Four of last year's soph sensations will join Choppy in the starting lineup. That will be Mahaffey, Morgan, Mike Bohonak and Jim Brennan.



Both teams have valuable sixth men in Cooke and Nick Milasnovich. Milasnovich averaged 14.8 as a soph last year and is not expected to warm the bench at great lengths this year.

UNC leads the inter-school series by a whopping margin, 38 games to two. A Clemson team hasn't beaten UNC since 1952.

But the boys from South Carolina have given Tar Heel teams some anxious moments in recent seasons. Last season UNC squeezed out a 54-52 early season win and won a later contest, 69-59.

LATIN AMERICAN FILM

Wednesday night at 7:45 p.m. in Carroll Hall, the picture "Les Olvidados" (The Young and the Damned) will be shown. The film, which was made in Mexico, will be introduced by Mr. Harvey Wolin, a young poet who lived for two years in Mexico. Mr. Wolin, a graduate of The City College of New York, is one of the founders and former editor of "El Corno Emplumado" (The Plumed Horn), a bi-lingual arts review of the two hemispheres published in Mexico City.

CHARLIE SHAFFER, starting Tar Heel forward, picked up where he left off last year against Georgia Saturday. He hit 8 of 12 field goal tries for 20 points. Last year, in nine games, Shaffer had a .633 percentage from the floor.

Tourney Field Is Narrowed To 60 Teams

By STUART BALL

With the first round of the Grail Mural Basketball Festival complete, the 60 remaining teams now get down to the business at hand of eliminating 59 of themselves.

In Monday's contests the scores ranged from the 17-6 win of the Stacy Stars to the near shutout victories of Pi Lamb's Pot Shots with PiKA as they took 20-1 and 28-5 wins over the Beta Rinkydinks and Theta Chi, respectively.

Chi Phi trounced the TEP Terriors 51-12 as Dan Bell and Tom Thompson stuffed in 20 and 19 points apiece. The Parker Plumbers also won in big style as they walloped Old West's Dudes 50-12. Footballers Bob Lacey and George Boutselis contributed 11 points each in the win.

Other scores:

Chi Psi Blues 42, Joyner Jocks 26
Physics Phiends 16, Stacy Studs 13
Old East 25, Kappa Psi 18
ZBT 28, St. A Shirts 17
Navy Bowlines 35, Ehringhous A Elders 14
Manly Riverrats 40, Phi Gam 23
Sigma Chi A 30, TEP Wildcats 28
Winston Offs 28, Law Darrows 18
Aycock Aardwolves 22, Avery Scarlet 17
Pi Lamb Panthers 1, Ehringhaus A Bombers 0
Everett Rogah 29, Avery Brown 18
Aycock Aardvarks 1, TEP Cyclones 0

Frosh Play Host To Military Team

North Carolina's freshman basketball team, fresh from an impressive 74-52 victory over Wilmington College, meets Edwards Military Institute tonight in a preliminary to the UNC-Clemson battle. Game time for the frosh is 6 p.m.

Mark Mirken and Bob Bennett, two big forecourt operators, will lead the Tar Babies into their final pre-ACC test.

The 6-6 Mirken and his rebounding playmate, 6-6 Bennett, scored 18 and 14 points, respectively, in UNC's first game.

They also completely controlled both backboards as Mirken grabbed 17 rebounds and Bennett chipped in eight more.

Johnny Yokley and Jimmy Moore will likely start at the guard spots for Coach Ken Rosemond tonight.

Yokley came up with nine points last Saturday and Moore added five while contributing a fine floor game.

The fifth starter will probably be Bill Harrison, but either Ray Hassell or Earl Johnson could get the nod.

In the Tar Babies' opener, Harrison got eight points and six rebounds, Johnson seven points and four retrieves, and Hassell added five points.

Jimmy Smithwick and Chapel Hill's Charlie Phillips performed well in relief roles. Smithwick rebounded five times and Phillips came up with five points.

In their opening win, the frosh shot 48.4 per cent from the floor on 30 for 62. Their first-half shooting percentage was a fine 53.3 per cent. UNC also rebounded well, coming up with a 54-34 edge on Wilmington in that department.

After tonight's game, the Tar Babies travel to South Carolina Saturday before returning home a week from today to face North Carolina College.

Cincy, Duke Pace Basketball Ratings

NEW YORK (UPI) — The University of Cincinnati, picked in the pre-season ratings to win the major college championship this season, was a near-unanimous choice Tuesday for the top spot in the first weekly ratings by the United Press International board of coaches.

The Bearcats, NCAA champions the past two seasons, opened the new campaign with an easy, 97-39, victory over DePaul and as a result were named No. 1 by 33 of the 35 coaches who comprise the UPI rating board. With points for votes from first through 10th places distributed on a basis of 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1, Cincinnati gained a total of 348, just two less than a perfect score.

The Bearcats also whipped Virginia, 92-41, Monday night, but the ratings were based on games played through Saturday.

Cincinnati meets Miami of Ohio tonight and George Washington on Saturday. Thus, the Bearcats could conceivably roll up a 4-0 record before meeting their first real test — on Dec. 14 against Kansas State. The following night they play Kansas.

Duke, which received the two first-place votes Cincinnati didn't get, was second in the first week's ratings, the same spot the Blue Devils were picked to finish in the pre-season ratings. Duke picked up 285 points, mostly on the strength of 19 second-place votes and nine for third.

The Blue Devils opened the new season with a 76-68 win over Davidson. They played South Carolina Tuesday night and then go against Maryland on Saturday.

Kentucky, picked to finish third in the pre-season ratings, and St. Bonaventure, the eighth selection, were the chief casualties of the first week. The Wildcats dropped an 80-77 decision to Virginia Tech, while the Bonnies were beaten, 73-66, by Southern Illinois, a small college power. Both dropped out of the top 20.

Moving up at their expense were Loyola Ill., Oregon State, Mississippi State, Illinois, Wisconsin and Kansas State. Loyola advanced from fifth to third; Oregon State from sixth to fifth; Mississippi State from seventh to sixth; Illinois from 13th to seventh; Wisconsin from ninth to eighth, and Kansas State from 14th to 10th. West Virginia remained fourth and Bowling Green held onto 10th to complete the select group.

The second 10 grouping was made up of Stanford, Creighton, UCLA, Kentucky, New York U., Arizona State, Ohio State, the defending national champion; Indiana, Dayton and Southern California.

Pete Seeger Sings To Over 1000 Despite YAF & Independent Pickets

By BILL WUAMETT

Pete Seeger sang to a crowd of more than a thousand persons despite picketers who marched outside Memorial Hall protesting his sponsor, the New Left Club, and the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, recipient of proceeds from the concert.

The Seeger concert had earlier drawn criticism from the conservative Young Americans for Freedom, and from Raleigh news commentator Jesse Helms who criticised Seeger for fellow-traveling.

Seeger performed a program of old and contemporary folk songs that include several songs that have arisen from the desegregation movement. The greatest audience participation of the evening came on one of these, "We Shall Overcome," theme song of CORE.

Two Lines

The ten picketers split into two lines about twenty minutes before the concert when five unaffiliated students refused to picket in the same line with members of PAF. Spokesman for the independent students, Sam Blumberg, said that the YAF members had joined their picket line without permission, and that his group wanted no affiliation with the conservative organization.

YAF President Mike Jaffe said that the executive committee of YAF had voted to picket the concert an dthat five members of that organization were among the signbearers.

The picketing was orderly as groups of thirty to forty students watched the protest. The only incident of the evening occurred shortly after the beginning of the concert when an unidentified person yelled an obscenity from outside a window.

Money To SNCC

Seeger was introduced by New Lefter Margie Shiffman who announced that proceeds of the concert would go to SNCC. Earlier statements from the group had indicated that money would go jointly to Seeger and to the New Left, but it was generally acknowledged by the group that both would contribute their money to SNCC.

New Left member Larry Phelps said that he did not think that the picketing or adverse publicity before the concert had hurt attendance. He said that the basketbal game had probably prevented Seeger from singing before a capacity crowd as he did three years ago at a Graham Memorial sponsored event.

Miss Shiffman said after the concert that the group was highly pleased with the turnout.

Signs carried on the picket lines asked student to "Give your money to Easter Seals, and not to SNCC — Watch from outside the windows — Do not go to this red-inspired concert — Don't support the silent sponsor."

While the picketers marched, a dog named "Russia" ran between their legs. The dog was snow-white.

67-33 Ratio Favors Demos In Senate

By United Press International

A lineup of 67 Democrats and 33 Republicans in the next U. S. Senate was assured Wednesday by the concession of Sen. Joseph Bottum in an election race that took almost a month to decide.

Bottum's concession meant victory for Democrat George McGovern, former Food for Peace director. The battle for the South Dakota Senate seat was the last to be decided.

At almost the same time that Bottum was conceding, former New Mexico Gov. Edwin L. Mechem, a Republican, signed a register in Washington, officially putting him on the payroll as a senator.

Mechem resigned as governor and was named to the Senate after Democratic Sen. Dennis Chavez died. Mechem was defeated in November for re-election as governor.

The addition of McGovern means the Democrats will have three more members in the new Senate than they did in the old Senate. The GOP will have three fewer.

The only vacant House seat is the one to which Rep. Clem Miller, D-Calif., was elected posthumously in November. There will be a special election in January to fill this vacancy.

If a Democrat is elected as expected to replace Miller, the congressional lineup will be:

HOUSE

	Democrats	Republicans
Old	263	174
New	259	176

SENATE

Old	64	36
New	67	33

Recounts still are pending in four races for governor but none are expected to change the results. Returns currently show these results in gubernatorial elections:

	Democrats	Republicans
Before Nov.	34	16
Now	34	17

Red Promises About N-Ban To Be Ignored

GENEVA (UPI) — The United States said Wednesday any Soviet promise to halt nuclear testing during the coming year would be of no more value than Soviet promises not to put missiles and atom bombers in Cuba.

U. S. Negitiator Arthur H. Dean warned that the Soviet might try to trick the world by announcing it would begin a moratorium on tests as of Jan. 1. He said this would be aimed at forcing the West into a situation where it would have to accept an uncontrolled moratorium.

Dean said that if such a pledge were made it would resemble "similar pledges given by the leaders of the Soviet Union with regard to a recent situation in the Caribbean with which we are all familiar." He did not elaborate on this reference to the Cuban crisis.

Earlier, the West had offered to sign an uninspected test ban treaty "tomorrow" if the Soviets could prove that international inspection is unnecessary. But Dean said the Russians' negative attitude appeared to be closing the door leading to possible areas of agreement.

Poteet, Brown Get 14 Each In Comeback

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

North Carolina's Tar Heels held a determined Clemson team to only four points in the final seven minutes and won their second basketball contest of the season last night, 64-48.

Jim Brennan, whose shooting had the visiting Tigers in the lead for most of the first half, narrowed the UNC lead to 46-44 with a jump shot at the 7:41 mark. Carolina reeled off six straight points on a set shot by Ray Respess, a driving lay-up by Larry Brown and a two-pointer awarded to Respess on a goal-tending violation by Clemson.

Choppy Patterson, the only Clemson senior starter, closed the gap to 54-46 with a field goal and Brennan added a foul shot. After Charlie Shaffer rebounded and flipped in another goal, Brennan hit for Clemson's last point on another foul shot.

The smaller Tar Heels threw in six straight points in the final minute for the final total.

Bobby Roberts' Tigers, with three men 6-7 or taller, lost the game—surprisingly—on the backboards. Paced by Billy Cunningham's tricky hands the homstanders picked off 56 rebounds to Clemson's 34. Cunningham accounted for 18, more than half the Clemson total.

All five of Dean Smith's starters hit double figures. Yogi Poteet, who fouled out with 2:44 remaining, and Brown shared scoring honors for UNC with 14. Shaffer had 12, Cunningham 10, and Respess 10.

The sharpest shot on the floor was that of Brennan's. He hit eight of 17 field goals — mostly on his soft jumper — and added three foul shots for 19 points — high for the night. He was the only one to hit double figures for the pesky Tigers.

The Tigers took the lead quickly in this battle of ACC darkhorses, but the Chapel Hillians took a 30-28 lead into the dressing room at halftime.

Spurred on by three Brennan jump shots, the Tigers rolled to a 14-7 lead in the first seven minutes. It was still a seven-point lead, 23-16, when Carolina made its move.

With about six minutes to go in the half, Poteet hit a jumper and followed with another jump shot on a fast break, narrowing the lead to 23-20. Brennan countered with one of his own, but Shaffer made it 25-22 with a pair of foul shots.

With 4:22 remaining UNC lost Cunningham, who drew his third foul. Without the ace rebounder, Carolina continued to roll — after Patterson hit a foul shot.

Ray Respess hit two free tosses and Brown tied it up with a jumper. Brennan put Clemson ahead again with a jump shot, but buckets by Brown and Mike Cooke made it 30-28. Cooke's tie-breaker came with 11 seconds on tne clock.

Patterson gave Clemson its last lead with a jumper making it 34-33 early in the second half. Poteet's bucket gave UNC the lead for keeps.

Scoring: UNC—Brown 14, Poteet 14, Shaffer 12, Respess, 10, Cunningham 10, Cooke 3, Galantai 1.

Clemson—Brennan 19, Patterson 9, Morgan 7, Bohonak 5, Mahaffey 4, Privette 4.

Coed Myth False, Di-Phi Discovers

By CHUCK NEELY

The Di-Phi Senate, after a debate of a hour and a half Tuesday night, passed a resolution condemning the "Myth of the Carolina Coed."

The resolution, which was introduced by Brooks Garnett, was passed unanimously by the twelve representatives and conditional representatives present. Fifteen guests at the proceedings also voted unanimously to pass the resolution.

Most of the debate centered around whether there was a "myth," and if there was, what were the facts, if any, behind the "myth."

Opposition to the resolution maintained that the resolution was not in the tradition of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society, that the Articles were too loosely connected, and that the "myth" was really not a fallacy, but was true.

Miss Garnett refuted these arguments and cited specific points to support her stand.

She said that most girls on campus were not "dated up snobs" but that a majority of the girls in the University, both in sororities and dorms, did not have dates on weekends, contrary to what she felt was the generally accepted idea on campus.

She also stated that the girls felt that it was up to the men on campus to take the initiative in making acquaintances and that it was extremely difficult for the women to take the first step.

The critic's report was delivered by Rep. Roger Foushee who discussed the night's debate and named Miss Garnett the best speaker of the evening.

Two resolutions were introduced for future debate. The first was submitted by Rep. Hubert Hawkins. It proposes the abolition of capital punishment. The second was submitted by Cond. Rep. Charles Neely. This resolution, which will be debated at the next meeting, on December 11, proposes "the opening of all men's dormitory rooms to female guests during specified hours."

Cuban Group Will Finance Phelps Trip

New Left president Larry Phelps announced Tuesday night that an invitation has been received from the Cuban Federation of University Students inviting American students to Cuba as their guests.

Phelps spoke before a group of UNC students interested in going to the Communist island during the Christmas holidays. He stated that he is definitely planning to make the trip.

The invitation came to Phelps by way of the Ad Hoc Student Committee for travel to Cuba from New York. Phelps said that a spokesman for the Committee had applied for validation of student passports to Cuba, and this validation was denied as a matter of general policy by the Department of State.

The committee feels, said Phelps, that the government does not have the right to restrict a citizen's right to travel" without trampling upon the fundamental principles of freedom of the individual upon which this nation was founded."

It is in this spirit that the Committee, composed if about 80 students from New York and Mid-West colleges and universities, has accepted the gracious invitation of the Cuban students and has decided to go through with his plans to go to Cuba.

Those going will be liable to revocation of their passports, plus a possible- two-year jail sentence and $10,000 fine.

The only expenses of those who make the trip will be part of their travel from here to Montreal, Canade, where the planes will depart.

The Cuban Government is providing the air transportation, while the Cuban Newspaper Federation is financing their stay. The students in New York have had two parties which raised about $250 to help pay the southern students' ways to Canada.

US And Russia To Cooperate

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI) —The United States and Russia told the United Nations Wednesday they will work together on three big space projects: Communications, weather-spotting, and mapping the earth's magnetic field.

A worldwide television hookup could be one result of the agreement, which stemmed from an exchange of messages between President Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev. This came just after astronaut John H. Glenn's three-orbit space flight last February.

The joint announcement was made to the U. N. General Assembly's main Political Committee by U. S. Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson and his Soviet counterpart Platon D. Morozov.

Council Commends Actions Of Coed, Dismisses Charge

The Women's Council dismissed its case Tuesday against a defendant who entered an indefinite plea to a charge of violation of the Campus Code.

The defendant was charged with having returned to her residence three hours and fifteen minutes late after the Thanksgiving Holidays. She said that she had been travelling with several other students and decided to leave their car because of their drinking and boisteous conduct on the trip to Chapel Hill.

The defendant called in to her housemother after she left the car and asked whether she should return to Chapel Hill immediately or spend the night in a hotel and proceed the next morning.

She was advised to return immediately by bus, which she did.

Council Chairman Bev Haynes, in reading the verdict, said, "The Women's Council feels that you have conducted yourself as a lady, that you were responsible in refusing to drive with people who had been drinking excessively, and that you were thoughtful to call your housemother.

"We respect you for taking the initiative which you did in this matter. We commend you for your intelligence in handling this situation.

"We, therefore, have decided to dismiss your case and excuse your lateness."

NCAA Vs. AAU
Who Is Anti-American?

Athough we would stand readily corrected on several matters pertaining to the Amateur Athletic Union, we would just as readily question some of the excited statements which have recently been made by the president of that organization.

We wonder just what prompts the AAU, through the statments of their president, to label the actions of the NCAA as "un-American."

Certainly the AAU must be willing to admit that more than just a "few" individuals are apparently dissatisfied with AAU control over track and field in this country. Regardless of what the AAU would have the country believe, they are not the grand saviour of amateur athletics throughout the United States.

Certainly, we would never want to deny the AAU has done a great deal to promote and sustain amateur competition in practically all areas of athletic endeavor. But we do not feel that the AAU has been the only pious organization to ever sponsor a sporting event. And we do not feel that the AAU is justified in apparently demanding to have the final say on all open competition.

* * *

But alas, we, as the greater majority of individuals interested in sports in this country, feel totally in the dark as to the actual charges and counter-charges being tossed about by the NCAA and AAU. The whole sordid mess seems to be confined to the smoke-filled rooms of crowded convention hotels. The general public is informed of the actions and decisions of the "powers that be" only through press statements which carry little but rantings from excited participants in the great war.

We read of coalitions, agreements, sham coalitions, and phony agreements, but only those lords who preside over the apparently inconsequential athletes seem to know what its all about. The public at large will have to be satisfied with some shallow knowledge of the fact that Johnny can't participate in the next Olympics.

The "why" of Johnny's ineligibility will lie somewhere in the great debate between the NCAA and the AAU, somewhere back in one of those smoke-filled rooms, somewhere behind the excited voices that made statements like the following:

"I believe it is the duty of the U. S. Congress to investigate the NCAA and its puppet federations from top to bottom."

The next charge may be that the NCAA is actually a Communist-front organization, which has been established to make our American athletes ineligible for Olympic competition, and thereby insure a victory for the Soviet Union.

After all, anyone liberal enough to fight the AAU must surely be more than merely "un-American," they must be anti-American. (CW)

The Woollen Gym Problem

We are glad to see that the State Affairs Committee has undertaken a program to present student needs to the 1963 N. C. General Assembly. More specifically, we are glad to see that the Committee has chosen the proposed addition to Woollen Gym as one of the items for which to plead.

The fact that the first two basketball games of the 62-63 season have been sold out prior to the day of the event in each instance is surely indicative of the inadequacy of the present facilities for the demands of an expanding student body, to say nothing of the fans who would like to attend from throughout the state.

But the tragedy of insufficient seating for home games is but one aspect of the Woollen Gym problem, and in a very real sense it might be considered the least important aspect.

The real headache stemming from accommodating home games in Woollen centers around the necessity of moving temporary bleachers in and out as the schedule demands. The placement of the bleachers throws a huge wrench into the functionings of the required program in Physical Education.

Classes of 45 students are forced to learn volleyball on one court. Basketball classes, equally large, must also confine their activities to the one main court and the Tin Can.

The situation also cramps the Intramural Departments activities. Games must be postponed and rescheduled; and space on the floor of Woollen must be fought for as if 3,000 erstwhile athletes desired to play soccer in Y-Court.

So we would suggest that although the lack of sufficient seating for home basketball games is more often publicized, we would rather see the plea to the General Assembly based on the need for more space for the required and intramural programs. These aspects of the problem effect practically everyone. (CW)

'Dook' & Student Gvmt.—Pro And Con

Primitive Arts Require Grossity

To the Editors,

I have read about the "Beat Dook" parade in your paper, and have enjoyed the interesting pictures you printed of the floats. Being new here, and unfamiliar with local customs, I failed to catch the event, but will make every effort to attend next year.

From what has been printed in your paper, it appears that there is is some disagreement as to the manner in which this celebration should be conducted. My feelings on pagan rites (for this seems to me the issue here) are that the ceremonial rules were developed long ago, and that it may be extremely difficult to improve them overnight, so to speak, by censorship. I do not imply that censorship of future parades would be a breach of religious freedom. (I believe that the courts no longer recognize this particular religion as such....

I cite the success of the parade last November 20 to illustrate how the universal curiousity and interest people have for their reproductive and eliminatory processes can make a powerful basis for common worship, and I submit that this is not necessarily a bad thing. Sex and well functioning bodies certainly are one of God's gifts (or one of the Gifts of the gods, depending on how you look at it) and I feel these are worthy subjects for Thanksgiving, public celebration, praise, worship, artistic expressions, etc.

Granting that deep down there is an animalistic "joy of living" basis for such efforts, there is still the problem created by the exhibition of the private social norm in public. I can only say as 40 million Frenchmen and others have said—the truth, I blush for it; but I cannot apologize—or words to that effect.

Seriously, now—the success of a public art can be judged in the light of the truth it reflects. If the "Beat Dook" parade was a success, (as I gathered from your editorials) we might well profit, each to his own, by the truth so revealed. This could be adapted by some, say a dean, to interpret the state of student morals. With some harsher types of censorship invoked, more devious and less informative means might have to be employed.

To sum up; my feeling is that if you are going to have a pagan-type exercise, it has got to be crude to be true to form. Any heavy-handed or unskilled censorship will show to great disadvantage, as everybody (or nearly everybody these days) knows the "goods" parade's norm. Girls and floral decorations on floats have their place, but a rampaging, stamping, unsublimated primitive blast beats it when you want to say you're glad you're living.

P.S. Keep those parade and float pictures coming!

—Tom Atwood

Make 'Dook' Innocuous?—No

To the Editors,

May one small voice be raised in defense of the students and their shameful Beat Dook floats?

Granted the humor this year was heavy-handed and unsubtle. Agreed the boys (and girls) deserved a slap on the wrist. But by me it 'tweren't all THAT bad.

The way everyone is carrying on they'll end up by making the Beat Dook parade as innocuous as the Santa Claus affair. The which Heaven forbid!

—Mrs. Paul Smith

Student Gov't; Has Failed

To the Editors,

Finally, the time has come in which student government must squarely face the issue of 'campus grossness,' and state distinctly just how far is too far! No longer can this growing trend of recent years be tolerated or ignored, for if student government does so, then it forfeits any claim to ever seriously exercising judicious restraint and self-discipline upon itself and upon the student body. For those who have seen recent Carolina parades, the past Beat Dook one was no surprise, but it was the most tragic abdication of the exercise of responsible student leadership even seen on this campus!

Herein lies the tragedy of this event, not the fact that a bad reflection was cast upon the University, but the fact that student government had numerous chances to exercise judicious control to prevent this display of 'grossness', and refused to do so, even in the knowledge of what last year's was like! For it is not enough to passively send out letter requesting 'no grossness': someone must have the guts to enforce this! Surely among the Pika officers, the IFC sponsors, and the Panhellenic Council there must have been some 'leader' present or in charge. It's impossible to believe that none there recognized the need to draw the line and say this has gone too far!

* * *

YET THIS case is not an isolated incident; rather, it is symptomatic of a greater problem involving the whole campus and student government at large. For the above failure to exercise responsible self-discipline and leadership may be seen in numerous other instances quite clearly this year:

. . . failure manifest in the lackadaisical attitude of student legislature in which one rarely gets more than a quorum for meetings,

. . . failure shown in the consistently-held SP and UP caucuses to beg someone to occupy a vacant legislative seat which, if occupied, will probably be vacant again before the next election,

. . . failure shown in the fact that after the Beat Dook debacle, students felt that they needed a faculty member to help them handle their problem,

. . . a complete failure to understand how poorly and falsely this parade would reflect upon the University and many fellow students,

. . . a failure shown in the fact that the IDC began to correct overtly gross dorm newspapers only after these publications had been condemned by the administration,

. . . a failure unfortunately shown in some Honor Council decisions in which overt violations such as lying, cheating, and stealing, either alone or in combination have been inadequately dealt with in light sentences.

In cases such as these, student government has failed to meet its responsibilities. This is not to condemn student government in total; but it is to point out some glaring failures which can not be tolerated. Thus tias the present crisis arisen—a crisis in which the essential issues are whether or not the student body will regulate itself without administration promptings; whether or not the student body will realize that student autonomy means self-discipline, not license; a crisis in which student government must say what it means what it says and do what it means and mean what it says and do it—whether this be condemning grossness within the context of the Campus Code or the restoration of respect among the elected that they must respond better to those tasks to which they have been assigned.

The administration in this recent episode has acted in the only way possible in face of this mass abondby those in charge. Hopefully, the executive branch of student government will begin to act to have two student representatives, which the administration has said it would welcome, on this board and to work toward the removal of all faculty-administrative members as soon as possible in face of this mass abandonment of student responsibility remains as presently envisioned, student government can never fully rectify for past failings in this area of its responsibility. Students must be willing to name the limits beyond which they should not go.

At present, the administration's policy is to review plans for floats, displays, etc., in advance. This process of prior cencorship is repugant to the very idea of student autonomy and must be destroyed and replaced by responsible student leadership. But this will not be the case until student leaders overcome their present lethargy and indifferentness.

* * *

PROGRESS can and has been made in some areas of campus life where the problem of overt grossness and wavering leadership have existed. Dorm newspapers have come under attack and rightfully so, for though these publications are not intended to be culture sheets, there is still no excuse for them to consist almost entirely of vividly off-color remarks and 'Confucius' sayings that would make Playboy seem like a child's comic book. In this case, dorm presidents and editors have been notified that they are personally responsible under the Campus Code for their publications and that they will be judged accordingly. Much work remains to be done here, but at least dormitory government has begun to move in the right direction, though it had to be prompted by an administration uproar first! Perhaps other branches of student government will learn a lesson from this.

Surely student government must begin acting to deal with this greater issue of officials failing to take responsibility seriously. For until this is done and until student leaders begin to tackle unreservedly other glaring issues and quit being a mutual admiration society, then it will never be respected and never should be!

Perhaps in the final analysis, the student body does not wish to assume the responsibility necessary for sound self-government. Perhaps the campus feels the only way to have fun is to be publicly gross, vulgar, potted, and/or throw an occasional 'gotcha' in for good measure. Perhaps it wants the University to be a mother and baby-sitter and nothing more. If so, then let's at least admit these things and quit being so hypocrital and self-righeous about our "tradition of self-government and hallowed perogatives of self-autonomy". Student government means one thing: self-discipline. Let's decide once and for all whether we want it or not; and if not, then bring on the proctors and baby-sitters—if so, then let's do things right!

Gil Expresses Corps Thanks

To the Editors,

Now that the Chapel Hill phase of the Peace Corps Venezeula Project in University Education has come to a close, we would like to take this opportunity to thank you and the University of North Carolina student body for the warm reception which the trainees received while on our campus. They were indeed enthusiastic in their praise for both their stay. It is our opinion that the the academic and social aspects of good impression carried forth by these Volunteers will be of great benefit to the University's national and international prestige.

Reflections: Gloomy, Witty; Change Needed

By T. Y. GREET

A careful scrutiny of the cover of Chapel Hill's only true "little magizine" reveals the new scope of its ambitions: no longer simply "Reflections from Chapel Hill" but "from Chapel Hill North Carolina." In terms of this aspiration and of their efforts toward its fulfillment Robert Brown and his associate editor, Katherine Strong, are to be highly commended. Few magazines, after nearly twelve months of dormancy, could have come back at all, much less confidently as this one has, confident by virture of its achievement of national distribution, at "select outlets," its offering of subscriptions for twelve future issues, its enlarged format and masthead.

But for all these symptoms of growth, the survival of the magazine must depend on its contents. Regrettably, a sounding of the current issue does not lead to a wholly favorable prognosis The will,. the energy are there; but a change of air and diet may be essential. The contents of this issue, unlike the last, are rather varied—General Hugh Hester on Berlin, Ralph Dennis again with his Sad Fat Man, poetry ranging from the lyric clarity of Michael O'Higgins to the caustic obscurity of John West. The excellent photographs of the sculpture of Edward Higgins and Miss Strong's decorations (even her advertising layouts) are, however, the only elements which provide a real change of pace and tone.

For one thing, it's rather gloomy. Herbert Matthews of the "New York Times" provides a studiously restrained analysis of our plight in Latin America but only increases our frustration when he admits that "there is no simple or quick solution." General Hester with considerable hindsight accounts for our dilemma in Berlin and heightens its implications by his comments on Nazi influences in Adenauer's government. But when he concludes that we can in Europe fight neither a limited nor a total war, we are left wondering what, then, we can do. Oddly enough, even Professor Howard's flip coolness is depressing: "No, I can't explain the sculpture of Ed Higgins. But I know that all experience is a miracle and to experience the work this young genius is to hear it speaking with a loud silence . . . see what I mean?"

Frankly, I don't. I would appreciate Professor Howard's help in getting at Higgin's esthetic. Just as I would appreciate from Matthew and Hester some speculations about policy. Already a multitude of voices from the Left remind us that we are in a bind in Latin America, that to defend Berlin's honor at the cost of Berlin's life is absurd. If "Reflections" is to be more than an surer sense of direction, opening echo, its comments must provide a up a dialog with the reader.

I press the point because when "Reflection" treats current affairs it has tended to do with a certain stridency of tone which precludes such dialog. "To reflect" is to cast back light and heat, but here the latter element is dominant. The editorials of Mr. Brown and Leon Rooke are right-thinking but somewhat wrong-headed. No reader of the magazine is apt to disagree with it's Editor's attack on those who would defend Governor Barnett as a man, at least, "of conviction." Why not, then, a more controlled, penetrating comment? And the question is for Rooke as well. I am still uncertain whether he is condemning "Profs" (his word) Matthew and Prothro for being behindhand in their racial concerns or praising them for being thorough. "To reflect" is also to meditate, and if the magazine is to grow in stature and substance, its editors must speak with more firm assurance.

Perhaps in this issue confidence is best justified by the short stories of Rooke and Ralph Dennis. In his "Return" Dennis' "Sad Fat Organization Man" is even sadder, Dostoievsky's "underground man" gone to pot. Putting aside his unfinished manuscript, "A Child's History of Autoroticism," he emerges from his cellar for a perhaps fatal interview with an ad agency. But he at least leaves us his journal, a wittily ironic and yet pathetic parody of all literary introspections—Proust, Faulkner, Sartre, Joyce.

In his "The Beggar in the Bulrush" Leon Rooke takes Joyce more seriously, almost as a model . . . As a result he reveals more concern with technique than with his grotesque cast of characters. Three school teachers out for a night on the town are caught in a nightmare. Pursued from terror to terror by a blind epilentic beggar, one of them makes a discovery about herself, an insight which seems to be the whole point, even where imitative, is excellent, but the cruelty of the story is gratuitous: the protagonist is a caricature, and it is unfair to put her and the reader through so much for so unsatisfying an outcome.

Thus even the stories are gloomy, though in a commendable way. Nor is this review an altogether cheerful or cheering one. Perhaps I have seemed to attack the magazine not for what it is but for what it is not, but my primary concern is that "Reflections" justify in its accomplishment the excellece of its speak with more freshness and oriintentions. As the magazine learns to ginality, with real daring, the prognosis will become a very favorable one.

IDC To Hold Next Dance Friday

Three IDC-sponsored parties are planned for Friday night, from 8 to 11:30 p.m. Ralph Mosely, president of IDC announced.

The Nurses' Dorm is planning a party with Ruffin and West Cobb is the scene of a party with Alexander and Aycock. If transportation can be arranged, Ehringhaus will play host to the freshmen girls from Spencer and the town students.

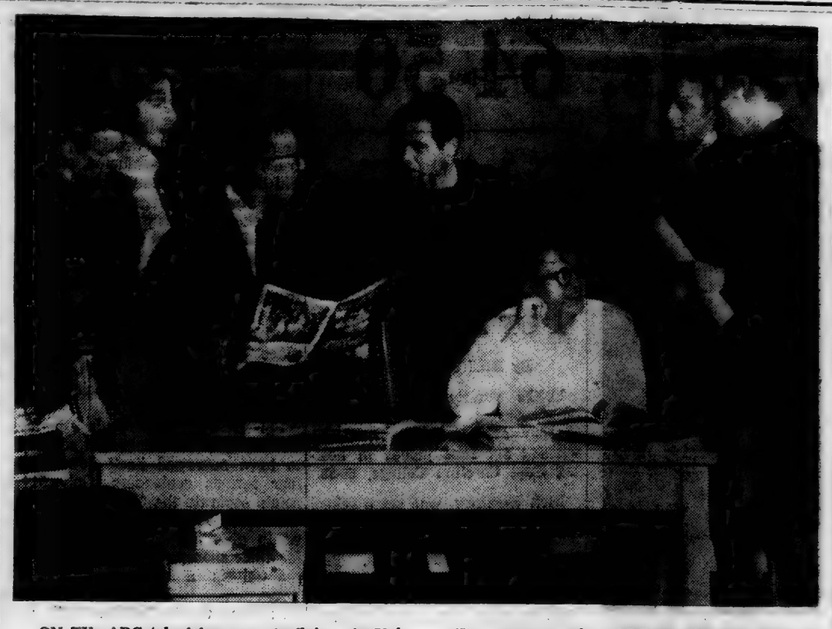
Music for dancing will be provided by juke boxes in the dorm social rooms. Funds for the parties are provided by the IDC. The CWC and the individual dorm councils are responsible for publicity of the affairs.

This round of parties is another in the series of parties planned and sponsored by the IDC between each men and women's dorm on campus, Mosely stated.

Sarah McGhee Named AFROTC Ball Queen

Miss Sarah Anne McGee, a sophomore at Appalachian State Teachers College, was crowned queen of the first annual Air Force Ball, held Saturday night in Durham.

Approximately 150 Carolina AF ROTC Cadets and their dates watched the ceremony which highlighted the ball. Miss Mary Ann Noble, an AFROTC Angel at UNC was presented a "Little Major" award by the members of the Arnold Air Society.



Miss McGee, a 5-foot-6, blue-eyed blonde was escorted by Cadet Thomas C. Harville of Lenoir. Miss McGee, also from Lenoir, is a home economics major. She was crowned queen by Miss Chapel Hill, Dorcas Henley.

The "Little Major" award was presented to Miss Noble in appreciation of the service and time, she has given to the Cadet Corps this semester. The Carolina sophomore was escorted by Cadet Monford Y. Stokes, a junior from Gastonia.

Tar Babies Whip Edwards, 64-50

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC's freshman basketball team got only token opposition here last night, but the Tar Babies were unable to capitalize on it and had to settle for a 64-50 win over the Edwards Military Institute.

Ahead by only 28-19 at the half due to sloppy ball-handling and other costly mistakes, Ken Rosemond's yearlings came alive at the outset of the second period and buried EMI's Rams with a 10-point outburst.

Iannarella Stars

Unheralded guard Mike Iannarella cracked the whip for Carolina in the streak.

The 5-9 Sharon Hills, Pa. native, called on by Rosemond to start the second half, responded with a fine floor performance as he set up Bob Bennett, Earl Johnson and Bennett again to push the lead to 15 points.

When Iannarella began the half, the Tar Babies had a shaky nine-point lead. When he left the game eight minutes later, Carolina had the contest all wrapped up and were on the long end of a 49-27 count.

Mark Mirken and Bob Bennett, UNC's fine forecourt operators, experienced some difficulties in basketball fundamentals in their second freshman start — but still wound up in double figures.

Mirken, the Big Bear with the fluent moves, sunk five of 11 from the floor for ten points. He also contributed seven rebounds. Bennett was on target six of 17 times for a total of 12 and came through with six rebounds.

Substitutes Jimmy Moore and Bill Harrison also came through with double-figure scoring contributions. Moore scored 12 points and Harrison added 11.

Cathey Scores 19

EMI's Cathey, a 6-5 center from Bristol, Tenn., was the game's high man with 19 points. Cathey hit eight of 17 times and was three for four from the foul line.

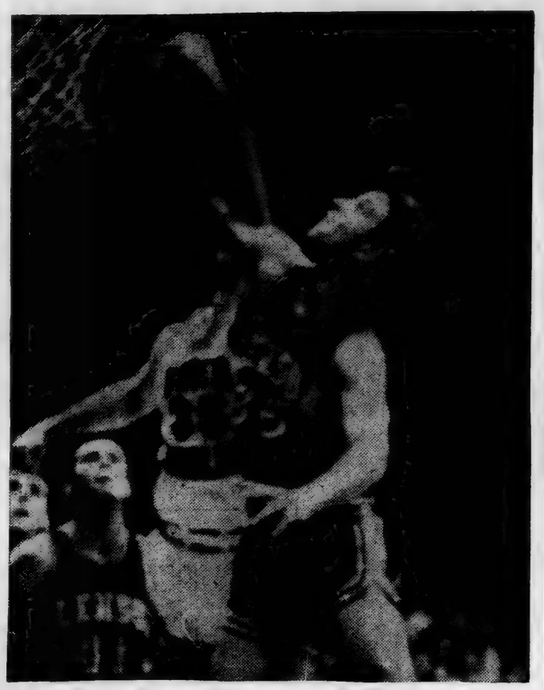
Vince Brennan, brother of former UNC All-American Pete Brennan, added 12 to the losers' total.

The Tar Babies looked like their first-game selves in the second half, but the first period was a different story.

That half was as poor an exhibition of basketball as has been seen here in quite some time.

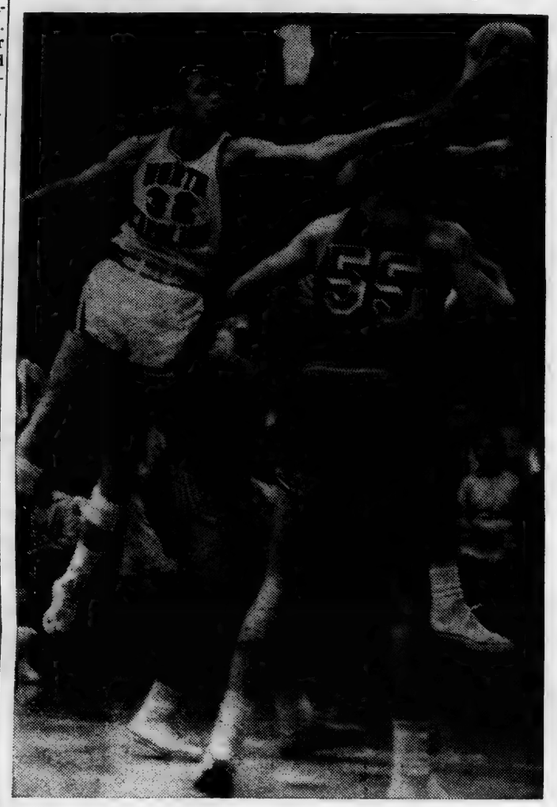
After Hassell and EMI's Brennan traded baskets in the first minute of play, the teams went approximately five and a half minutes without scoring. Traveling, out-of-bounds passes and double-dribbling featured the performance.

Merkin Ends Drough



Merkin ended the drought with a rebound bucket at the 13:10 mark of the first period, and the Tar Babies went from there to a 6-5 lead.

At this point, Rosemond sent in his fireman, Harrison, and the 6-3 Rocky Mount youngster lit a fuse and sent UNC on an eight point spree.



Harrison canned two free throws, Yokley added a jumper, Harrison stole the ball and fed Bennett for an easy lay up, and Harrison was again on the spot with a tap-in.

Scoring: UNC (64) Merkin 10, Bennet 12, Johnson 4, Yokley 9, Hassell 4, Harrison 11, Moore 12, Iannarella 2, Phillips 0, Rowe 0, Archer 0, Evans 0.

Emi (50) Brennan 12, Cathey 19, Black 7, Daughterty 9, Pollock 3, Morris 0, Mitchell 0.

Dolphins Top East Carolina For 2nd Win

By BILLY HATFIELD

UNC's varsity swimmers took their second consecutive meet Monday at Greenville, N. C. by winning six first places in beating East Carolina College, 58-38.

Dick Woodrow, who set a school record Saturday in the 50-yard freestyle, won both the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle events. Tate Kemper wheeled off another Blue Dolphin first in winning the 200-yard freestyle, then came back to take second place in the 200-yard breaststroke. Scott Smiley had a third in the 200-yard backstroke while Ernie Oare got a third place in the diving competition.

In the 500-yard freestyle, Frank Lea won first place and Mike Bissell took second. Willie Bloom won the 200-yard butterfly as Harrison Merrill and Thompson Mann finished one-two in the 200-yard individual medley. Those two came back with Harry Schiffman and Kemper to take the 200-yard medley relay. Then Woodrow, Bloom, and Schiffman joined Howard Cone to win the 400-yard freestyle relay.

Today the frosh team travels also to Greenville to meet the ECC freshmen. This is the opening meet for this year's edition of the Tar Baby tankmen, who are in top physical condition.

Three departments are the team's main strength. In the freestyle, Tom Murphy, John Sheldon, Scott Taylor, Dickie Chance, and Tom Bennett provide adequate depth. Fred Lipp and Murphy in the butterfly and Rick Forum and Dick Boardman in the breaststroke will hold down these departments.

The true strength may rest in the ability of the team of Sandy McNairy and Skip Schreiber to come through in the backstroke and the other boys to be able to work effectively in the medley and relay events.

The varsity has meets with Clemson and South Carolina here on Friday and Saturday respectively while the next frosh meet will be Wednesday against the Appalachian College freshmen in the Carolina pool.

Baker Says He'll Play Pro

NEW YORK (UPI) — Heisman Trophy winner Terry Baker of Oregon State said Wednesday he'll play pro football next year "for the club that presents the best deal."

Drafted by the Los Angeles Rams as the No. 1 choice in the National Football League and by the San Diego Chargers in the first round of the American League, the left-handed quarterback indicated a preference for the old NFL as the "greater challenge" but insisted he'll have to wait until after the basketball season to make a decision.

"I went to Oregon State in the first place on a basketball scholarship," said the 6-3, 195-pounder at the Downtown Athletic Club before accepting the club's prized Heisman award Wednesday night as the outstanding college football player in the United States. "I was a regular basketball guard last season," he said. "Now I'll have to hustle to make the team again."

Navy, Phi Delt, Law Set Pace

By STUART BALL

With point standings for intramural tag-football, wrestling, and track totaled and evaluated, Navy, Phi Delt, and the Law School lead their respective divisions to date.

In the Dormitory section Navy has pulled away to a 23-point lead over Manly by virtue of its win in track and second place finish in wrestling. Manly walked away with the football crown but has been able to manage only a third place finish in wrestling and a seventh place finish in track. Mangum is in third place, 49 points behind Navy.

Phi Delta Theta heads up a Fraternity division race that seems to have narrowed itself down to four serious contenders. Only 51 points separate the four top teams with SAE, Beta, and DKE all poised to give the Phi Delts a run for their money. Fifth place Sigma Chi is a distant 156 points away.

In the Grad division another three team race has shaped up with Law School ahead of Physics and Peacocks.

* * *

In Tuesday's Grail Mural Basketball action the second round of the single elimination tournament got under way and as in previous days a little of everything was to be had. There were the close ones like AK Psi's 16-15 upset victory over Peacocks I, and there were the one-sided affairs such as the 50-12 and 50-13 victories registered by the two Law School teams over the Pi Lamb Potshots and the Navy Pilots.

The day's high scoring honors went to Med School II's Ben Hammett who stuffed in 20 of his team's 37 points in their 37-7 win over the Chi Psi Golds.

Fencers Edge Johns Hopkins

It's "touchdowns" in football and "touches" in fencing, and Carolina's fencers had the "touch" Saturday in Baltimore against Johns Hopkins.

The Tar Heels opened their season with a 14-13 squeaker.

Johns Hopkins took an early lead which they held throughout most of the afternoon, but Carolina slowly closed the gap.

Behind by one but with two to go, sabre man Tom Welch switched weapons to win an epee bout, and tied the score. Team captain Don Hubbard then won the final foil bout to win the meet.

Hubbard was the standout winning three foil and three epee bouts to finish with a perfect day. The foil team of Hubbard, Bill Benton, and Murray Pender dropped only one of their nine bouts.

The UNC team, seeking varsity recognition this year, has scheduled some of the roughest teams in the nation including Detroit and Ohio State. Also on the schedule are VMI, The Citadel, and Duke.

An evening of entertainment will be provided by a folk-singing quartet tonight at 8 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial. Known to the campus as the Migrants, the foursome will give a concert of a wide variety of folk songs ranging from blue grass to close harmony.

Composed of guitarists Ben Newlin and Sandy Moffett, banjoist Danny Sheppard and singer Betty Ferguson, the Migrants had their beginning at The Lost Colony this past summer where three of the group were working. Since that time they have introduced many original arrangements and hope that eventually all of their arrangements will be their own. Though they have been together only a short time, their appearances include concerts at the Null and Void in Durham, where they are scheduled for another appearance the weekend of Dec. 30.

Tonight's performance, sponsored by the social committee of Graham Memorial, will be free.

Huge New Loan Funds Can't Be Used Here Yet

By JOEL BULKLEY

Julian Mason, director of Student Aid at UNC, reported yesterday that the new three million dollar student loan program, announced jointly by both Gov. Terry Sanford and the N. C. Bankers Association Tuesday, will have very little effect on the University of North Carolina for the next few years.

Mason stated that UNC will not be in position to take full advantage of the new plan for at least a couple of years. He noted that it is a good plan and will eventually be of help to students desiring financial aid here. Mason added that at present it will unfortunately have little effect on the medical or dental students here and they are the ones who need the money most.

Mason also added that because a student must apply to a college and be accepted there and then state in his application for aid that the school will admit him but cannot provide the money itself before any action can be taken. UNC will not be affected for a few years.

Under the new plan, loans may be given to any qualified student, including enrolling freshmen, on the basis of need. No repayment is required of the student while he is attending college. After graduation the student has up to four years to repay the loan.

This program will be administered by the College Foundation, Inc. which will act on all applications for loans forwarded by loan officers at colleges and universities throughout the state.

Oscar J. Mooneyham, of Forest City, president of the N. C. Bankers Association, stated Tuesday that approximately $2,500,000 will be available for the program at its beginning and that eventually $3 million will be available for use.

Participating banks will pledge up to one percent of their capital reserve and surplus to the College Foundation. More than half of the banks in the state have already given their approval to the plan.

Mooneyham gave detailed examples of why there was a clear need for such a program in North Carolina. College costs have increased 122% in the past 20 years, he said, and approximately 44% of the students now in college depend on some form of student aid.

Further, he stated, the number of students receiving scholarships at state-operated institutions total only 10%. There is only one-half of the amount of money needed in student loan programs to meet the needs of eligible students.

Last year some 7,304 students in public institutions of higher learning dropped out because of a lack of money.

J. Temple Gobbel of the Bank of Chapel Hill said yesterday, "We are proud to be one of the group of banks which has agreed to participate in this fine program." He added that the program should be helpful to many more qualified students who desire to complete their education.

'Tobacco Road' Set No Fake; Even Dirt (½-Ton) Is Real

If nothing on stage looked fake when "Tobacco Road" opened here Wednesday night there's good reason—it isn't!

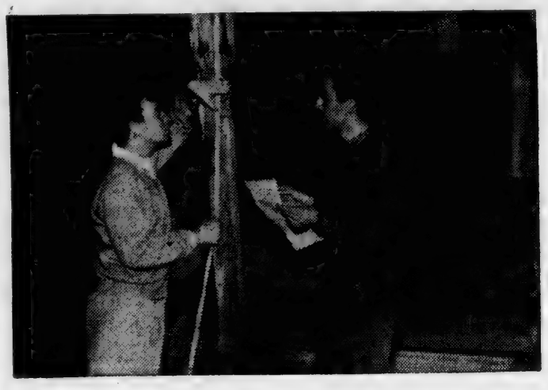
Out of rotting boards, wooden shingles, rusty tin, tree limbs, transplanted weeds and over a half ton of dirt, set designer Larry Randolph has brought to life the decadent homeplace of the Lesters in rural Georgia. But it wasn't easy.

Randolph gathered most of his raw—and very real — material, from numerous visits to torn-down buildings and junk yards in Durham and Chapel Hill.

"This is the first completely naturalistic set we've attempted here in years," Randolph pointed out. " 'Tobacco Road' demands this sort of realism for the best effect, and we knew painted scenery wouldn't do.

"We had a real problem when we first brought the dirt in. It was like mud. Keeping fans and hot lights constantly running on it corrected this. You should have seen the Playmakers Theatre janitor's face when we started hauling the dirt in!" Randolph laughed.

Playmakers technical director Tony Rezzuto pointed out that a total of 1500 man hours has gone into building the set, which consists of the house, corncrib, well, fences, mounds of dirt and the 'road.'



"It's especially difficult to give the illusion of a spacious exterior on a stage as small as ours," Rezzuto said, "but Randolph has done it."

A graduate assistant in the drama department here, Randolph has designed sets for the Durham Theatre Guild, The Carolina Playmakers and the University of Arkansas, where he was a student.

But the versatile theatre man is better known for his appearances on stage here in "Guys and Dolls," "The Matchmaker" and "Renegade." He has worked as a costume assistant at the Circle in the Square Theatre in New York and for one season at the Erie Playhouse in Cleveland.

Technical director Rezzuto pointed out other problems in staging "Tobacco Road," such as getting the much-needed parts of a Model A Ford. "Then, there are the dozens of turnips that will be used during the run of the show."

Curtain time for "Tobacco Road" is 8:30 p.m. through Sunday, with an additional performance Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Tickets are available at 214 Abernethy Hall (Phone 968-4468) and at Ledbetter-Pickard, both in Chapel Hill.

Tass Editor Claims Russian More Informed Than We Are

By PETE WALES

"The average Russian has a much less distorted picture of the United States than the average American has of Russia," said Nikolai Turkatenko yesterday.

He might almost have been taken as a Madison Ave. man. The tall, distinguished Russian news correspondent relit his pipe and continued.

"There is less prejudice in Russia," he said. The average Russian knows more about the United States.

"They know your literature much better. The literature reflects the life of your country."

Turkatenko, 34, has been a Tass correspondent in New York since October, 1961. He first came to New York to cover the 16th session of the United Nations and then stayed on with the bureau.

He spoke last night on the dissemination of news in the Soviet Union.

He cited Mark Twain, Theodore Dreiser, and O'Henry as the most popular American authors in the Soviet Union.

Turkatenko comes from an extensive educational background in history, literature and geography He completed his studies in international law at the University of Moscow ten years ago.

Turkatenko worked on the student newspaper at the University and joined Tass after graduation.

"It somehow happened," he said. Most of his University friends were with Tass, and he began work on the West European Desk as a copy editor. He worked five years with the London bureau of Tass before coming to New York.

"The first job of a news agency is to report the facts," Turkatenko said. "I write what I think is correct."

Turkatenko lives in New York with his wife and two children. He has a son, Misha (Michael), 8½, and a daughter, Masha (Maria), 3½. Both are in a school for the children of Russian diplomats in New York.

Russian correspondents were not allowed to go to Oxford for the riots this fall but gave the stories full coverage. Turkatenko said the Russian people view the racial situation in the U. S. "with disgust."

"I like Chapel Hill very much," he added. This is his first trip south of Washington. He hopes to stay on here until Saturday to see more of the campus and then fly back to New York.

Poet Watson To Read Works

Robert Watson, 37-year-old poet and associate professor of English at Woman's College, will present a public reading of his poetry tonight at 8 in the Faculty Club Lounge.

Watson is appearing at UNC for the Poetry Circuit of North Carolina, sponsored throughout the state by the UNC Press. Local sponsors for his appearance are the UNC Department of English and the English Club.

Watson's first volume of verse, entitled "A Paper Horse," was published by Atheneum earlier in the year.

His book has been acclaimed by critics who have said, "The title poem is lovely as 'Kubla Khan' is lovely, in its strangeness and control" (Carl Morse in The Village Voice-; "These are the products of a poetic sensibility attuned to the comic as well as to the macabre in life, and of an imagination startingly able to project itself into the predicaments of various other people real or invented, with a steady compassion" (Charles H. Philbrick in the Providence Sunday Journal); ". . . there is a wildness, as extravagant strangeness, in some of these poems" (Dudley Fitts in the "Saturday Review.")

Born in Passaic, N. J., Watson attended Williams College and Johns Hopkins University where he received a Ph.D. degree. He has also served as a Swiss-American exchange fellow and studied at the University of Zurich.

The University of North Carolina Press sponsors two poets on the Poetry Circuit of eight participating North Carolina colleges and universities during the academic year. The circuit was established in 1961. Participants in the circuit are East Carolina College; N. C. State College; North Carolina Wesleyan College; Duke University; Woman's College; Davidson College; Wake Forest College; and the University of North Carolina.

"GREEK GODDESSES"

Graham Memorial Activities Board announced yesterday that on Saturday afternoon about 450 sorority members will be present at Graham Memorial to aid in the annual Christmas decorations there.

The Pan Hellenic Council is sponsoring the affair in conjunction with GMAB and urges all students to attend and "help" the girls.

At 2 p.m. Sunday the "Greek Goddesses" will arrived, a GM release said. The program, including entertainment and refreshments, will continue until Graham Memorial is decorated.

According to Bill Seldin, chairman of the Graham Memorial Social Committee and head of the festivities, "the whole afternoon will be treated as a party, with the emphasis on socializing while the decorating is done."

Women's Council Campuses Coed

Bev Haynes, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, released the following statement to the Daily Tar Heel yesterday concerning the council's Monday night meeting:

The Women's Council met Monday night to hear an alleged violation of the Honor Code and Campus Code. The student entered innocent and guilty pleas, respectively, to the charges.

The defendant was alleged to have lied to a member of a dorm administration, to have failed to sign in, to have failed to obtain an invitation from the proper authorities to stay in the dorm, and to have failed to change her destination on her original sign-out slip.

The Council found the defendant innocent of the lying charge and guilty of the social violations. The defendant was given a campusment of five days.

Although the three violations were House Council offenses, the defendant requested that the entire situation be handled by the Women's Council for reasons of expediency.

Gerry Goode Appointed To Legislature By SP

The University Party has appointed Gerry Goode to the Student Legislature to fill a vacant seat from Dorm Mens' IV. Gerry is a Junior and a resident of Ruffin Dorm.

UP Chairman Mike Chanin said in announcing the appointment, "Gerry will give his constituents experienced and active representation. As president of Ruffin Dorm he is well acquainted with the problems of the upper quad. Last year he showed his ability to lead in the successful effort to allow Ruffin Dorm residents to remain in the dorm rather than be moved out when an attempt was made to make the dorm a Freshman Dorm. The UP has great faith in Gerry's ability to be an outstanding Legislator."

Teaching Award To Be Continued By Junior Class

The Cabinet of the Junior Class has decided this year to continue designation of a Teacher of the Month, according to a statement from class president Larry McDevitt.

The selection of these teachers will not be in the hands of one small group of Juniors, the statement said. Under the leadership of the class Scholarship Committee, attempts will be made to contact personally each member of the class and thus obtain his three choices for Teacher of the Month. These preferences will then be compiled on a point system basis in order to determine the recipient of the award.

All members of the junior class should understand that their preferences for the award do not have to be limited to classroom contacts, but may be based on dealings with instructors outside the classroom as well. In the spring on Junior Class J-Day, a Teacher of the Year will be announced who has been selected in the same fashion.

McDevitt's statement said, "Taking this poll of the entire class is a mammoth task. Therefore, we are asking Juniors from every area of the campus (including dorms, fraternities, and residential districts) who would be interested in helping with this poll to contact me at 942-1022 or 968-9034 as soon as possible."

Criswell, Trull Represent UNC At Latin America Meet

Bill Criswell and Scott Trull recently represented UNC at a program on Latin America at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia.

The weekend program was a final installment of a University of Pennsylvania campus symposium called "Connaissance." The "Connaissance" program is held each year concerning a different world problem with speakers and discussion throughout most of the fall semester. For the final weekend students from colleges throughout the eastern United States are invited to the special final session. The delegates are given opportunities to exchange ideas in much the same way our Carolina Symposium provides for delegates from other schools.

There were three principal lectures. The first on Friday night was "The Alliance for Progress" with Dr. Marvin Weissman of the Agency for International Development and Dr. Joseph Gruenwald of Yale University.

Both speakers concentrated on the economic problem with declining U. S. investment in Latin America and the need to somehow supplement funds to meet the area's capital needs for present and future growth. Both speakers emphasized that an approach to the problem must not be one that might further aggrevate the U. S. image as a foreign controller. Dr. Gruenwald suggested the use of outright grants because of Latin America's problems with balance of international payments. Dr. Weissman advocated an agency to guarantee loans from private investors with the stipulation that investors could not intervene in the Latin American business.

Saturday morning's lecture on Post-War United States — Latin American Relations was delivered by Dr. Roberto Alemann, Argentine Ambassador to Washington; Dr. Walter Muller, Chilean Ambassador to Washington; and Dr. Roland Ely, Professor at Rutgers University. All three speakers pointed with enthusiasm to the importance and influence of the Peace Corps and similar groups in bettering relations; Optimistic views on future implications of the strengthening of the OAS during the Cuban Crisis were expressed.

Cuba and Its Impact on Latin America was the topic of a panel discussion between avowed socialist Dr. Paul Sweezy, Editor of Monthly Review Press; and a highly conservative general, Charles Kentner, currently a professor at the University of Pennsylvania. The discussion developed into a debate between the two speakers whose stands were so diametrically opposed as to allow agreement on only the most established facts. General Kentener said, "About all that I can agree with with you so far, Dr. Sweezy, is that Cuba lies to the south of us."

One of the chief values of the weekend was the opportunity to discuss ideas with other delegates. Randolph Macon College of Lynchburg, Va., was the only other southern school represented. It was not an outstanding conference from the standpoint of information or ideas resulting from the speeches; however, the University of North Carolina did benefit by sending delegates. Most schools sent delegates who were not really qualified, but rather were just interested: therefore, Carolina was able to contribute to a greater extent than many others. The people running the conference seemed impressed that the U.N.C. student government would send delegates to Philadelphia.

AID TO INDIA

There will be a meeting tonight of all residents of Chapel Hill who are interested in providing humanitarian aid to the Indians who are the direct sufferers from the undeclared Indo-Chinese war.

The meeting will be held in 265 Phillips Hall at 8:00 p.m. Anyone interested is urged to attend.

Campus Briefs

FRESHMAN CAB. INTERVIEWS

Interviews will be held today in Roland Parker III from 3-6 p.m. for positions on the Freshman Class Cabinet and the class committees.

Interested freshmen may sign up for an interview anytime at the Information Desk of GM, or during interview hours on the door of Roland Parker III.

The following four committees will be formed: Social, Financial, Publicity, and Special Activities.

SPANISH CLUB

The members of the Spanish Club of Woman's College in Greensboro have invited students of Spanish at UNC to attend their Christmas party and dance, which will be held today at 7:00 p.m. sharp in the Student Union Building at WC. All those interested will meet tomorrow at 6 p.m. in G.M. Those with cars are requested to bring them.

WESLEY FOUNDATION

There will be a supper at the Wesley House today at six p.m. A group will attend "The Fantastics" after supper. For reservations, call 942-2152 by 2:00 p.m. Friday.

The Wesley Foundation will have a regular meeting Sunday night at 6:30 p.m. in the basement of the University Methodist Church.

PHI BETA KAPPA

All initiations of Phi Beta Kappa will be held this afternoon in Di Hall, third floor New West at 5:00 p.m.

PHILOSOPHY COLLOQUIUM

Professor J. N. Findlay of the University of London will speak on "The Map of Value" at 8 p.m. today in the Faculty Lounge in Morehead Planetarium.

ORPHANAGE COMMITTEE

There will be an important meeting today at 5 p.m. in Y Court of the Catholic Orphanage Committee to make plans for the Christmas party. All interested persons are invited to attend.

REWARD

A chain bracelet was lost German's weekend. The only identifying factor is the initials on one of the charms. Call 968-9167 and ask for Andy Anderson.

MIGRANTS

The "Migrants" will present a program of folk music Friday from 8 to 9:30 p.m. in the Rendevous Room at Graham Memorial. Admission is free to this G.M. sponsored program. There will be free dancing afterwards.

NAACP

The NAACP will meet tonight in 205 Alumni Hall at 8:30 p.m.

MONOGRAM CLUB

The Monogram Club will meet at 7:30 p.m. tonight to make plans for a Christmas party. The meeting will be in Woollen Gym.

CAROLINA CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

The annual Christmas party at WC will be held at 7 p.m. Saturday. Rides may be arranged at the Friday night meeting or by calling 942-5591.

LOST

A silver Juvenia wristwatch, by Frank Brock. Call 968-9147.

SOCCER

There will be the usual weekly soccer game Friday afternoon pitting the varsity and freshmen against the graduate students. The game will be at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field.

Our Pearl Harbor— An Even Greater War

December 7, 1962 — Twenty-one years after Pearl Harbor. The "day that will live in infamy" does not seem so infamous to us.

Most undergraduates at this University remember nothing of the horror which followed Pearl Harbor. We are, on the average, about twenty years old. We have only a loose, hazy feeling about the war—a nebulous collection of impressions rather than a concrete picture. We did not share in the long hours of waiting, any more than we shared in the frantic joy which swept the country at the war's end.

We have vague memories, perhaps, of knowing our fathers were not here, were off fighting. But most of us have never truly wondered if someone we cared for would be dead tomorrow.

The persistent, pervading finger of Uncle Sam and his "I need you" have not touched us as they have touched older Americans.

We see a top headline in yesterday's newspaper which says, "Yanks Roll Into Berlin" and what can this mean to us that it once meant to our parents?

We have not seen the factories flying flags to mark their special effort in the war. We have not seen the troops marching off to the war. We have never known an America whose total being was poured into war.

We have known a different kind of horror and of hope.

We have learned that Russia exploded a bomb with the force of over fifty million tons of TNT. We are horrified. And yet we did not see the light of the blast; our windows were not darkened by blankets to hide our cities; we had no friends or relatives in the battle. The explosion killed no Americans.

We are at war with Communism, but there are no troops on the field. We are in a death-struggle with the Russians, but the Russians have not killed our husband, our high school friend.

Our war is carried on over the conference tables at Geneva, not on the shell-ridden terrain of Europe or the inflamed waters of the Pacific; it is waged with "quarantines," not blockades; with Peace Corps instead of Marine Corps.

And our war is pervaded over all with the impersonal horror of nuclear annihilation. This horror forces an urgency into our councils. It brings the war to our homes, to the fallout shelters in our back yards and the shelter signs on this campus. It intensifies and makes immediate our concern with the war.

The nature of this war presses on our minds with a dull, daily tension. Our minds are strained with the awesomeness of the atom, the vastness of our struggle. The complexities of our war bear on us constantly.

Yet we cannot relieve this tension as previous generations of Americans have. In our daily lives there is not the relief of knowing we are fighting our war. We say, "Dirty Reds," but our words have none of the vehemence that "Dirty Japs" once had. We are not personally involved in the war; our lives continue placidly, not disrupted by the war.

We have never been faced with the stark reality of an oncoming enemy intent upon our personal death.

We cannot relieve ourselves with the easy personal involvement of a fight. We cannot cut through our tension with a swift, sure action or with an easy phrase.

But there are many among us who would do so. These students strive to escape the tension, and in their striving they tur nto extremes.

Some of them, unwilling to understand the complexities of our current situation, long to take a bold, fresh action. They would follow Senator Goldwater and the others of his cult in an invasion of Cuba, perhaps of China. They take up arms as "Minutemen" and train for the happy day when they can prove their Good Old American Courage and face the Enemy with bullets and knives in the supermarkets and bowling alleys of the land.

Others o fus, unwilling to admit we are at war at all, vent their petty spurtings against one facet of this war, hoping vainly that they can end the tension by ending one instrument of the tension. These are the students who march in ragged little lines around the nuclear bases, who sail bravely and blindly into the nuclear test zones—unafraid of a slow death from the fallout but terribly afraid to stay on the land and live with the knowledge that we are at war and must win the war.

* * *

These extremes, both of them, disregard the vastness of our war. Both of them speak of "freedom"—the "freedom" to assert American Might and Truth in the world at whatever cost, or the "freedom" from the terrors of nuclear war, also at any cost. But neither faction speaks of freedom "for"—they both say freedom "from." Both wish to be free from the complexities and tensions of the world as it is.

We cannot heed these childlike voices. We must fight our war in full cognizance of all its scope. We cannot free ourselves from the myriad of powers in the world, or from the fact of nuclear power. We must learn to use these realities for a more genuine freedom—freedom which recognizes the responsibilities that beset us on every side.

Our parents' Pearl Harbor came in the angry violence of a dawn attack. Our Pearl Harbor may never come with such clarity. It may come today in the mind of an Indonesian peasant or the economic production of a Chinese iron mill. We must perceive and cope with this reality or we are lost.

Our task is more difficult than that of our parents. They were able to defend their freedom with their hands and hearts. We are obliged to defend ours with our minds.

If we do not, our Pearl Harbor will surely prove more terrible than theirs.

UP Position

Reason Given On Frosh Case

To the Editor,

This is a final statement of the position of the University Party on the appeal made to the Constitutional Council. Our appeal was made on three points. The first is that the re-election held for Freshman class president was actually the same as the first election. We feel that the action taken by the Elections Board in throwing out the first election was as if to say that the first election never existed. Therefore, we felt that the election laws should apply to re-election. Second, if the election laws did not apply, then there could be no legal Freshman Class President. The Student Constitution says that all elections authorized by legislature must be held according to the laws established by the Legislature — the election laws. Third, we felt that the Election Board does not have the power to legislate its own rules for elections. The Student Constitution reserves this power to the Legislature.

On the ruling of the Constitutional Council, we feel that the Council's upholding of the appeal that our case be dismissed in effect said that the election laws were in order for the re-election. However, the council never gave this view and never took any official stand on the question on the application of the election laws to the re-election. We are disappointed that this situation has not been cleared up and we feel that the Constitutional Council has neglected its duty in not ruling on the question. To help make the election laws clearer for future elections, the University Party will work for legislation simplifying and clarifying the election laws.

—Mike Chanin,
Chairman
University Party

REFLECTIONS

If Carolina's student government looks pretty silly much of the time, it can't be as bad as what they have at East Tennessee State College in Johnson City, Tenn.

From a recent story in that school's newspaper, reporting a meeting of the Student Senate:

"A letter was read which requested money to be sent to a foreign college so it may maintain and operate as a college. Then letter was discussed. Motion made to disregard letter. Vote was taken by roll call, 10-7 not to throw letter away. Jane Duncan made a motion to investigate the letter sending money to the college. It was voted 100 per cent to investigate the letter before taking action."

After this business had been dispensed with, "the meeting adjourned, and the senators stayed following the meeting to have pictures made for the annual."

Gov. Sanford

South's Emancipation Proclamation: Education

The text of an address delivered to the Commission on Secondary Schools of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools at Dallas, Tex., on Nov. 28, 1962.

By GOV. TERRY SANFORD

When I was a boy a group of us sometimes visited a farmer who lived out near the Lumbee River. He had been everywhere, it seemed to us, and he would tell us about his adventures. You didn't see quite as many magazines then, and there wasn't any such thing as television, so he was our eyes into the far corners of the world. He had crossed the Mississippi River. He had been all the way to the great hills of San Francisco. He had worked on a fishing boat off the coast of Canada. He had been all the way across the continent on a freight train, he said.

He had gone to school catch-as-catch-can, attending the type of school existing in North Carolina back before your organization was quite born. He knew a little about reading and writing, but he could talk about the Continent of America, and Canada, and about Mexico, which he claimed to have seen, and Panama.

We boys absorbed all that he told us. On the dusty summer afternoons we sat on his porch listening.

One August day I recall one of the boys got to talking about being tied down to Scotland County, said he believed he wouldn't go back to school but would go on out to Seattle or even to Canada to get a job on a fishing boat.

The old man crossed that porch, took that boy by the front of his shirt, pulled him from the bannister to his feet and said firmly, "Listen here, don't you know you have to live in the world you're born to!"

There are signs that we in the South at last are taking hold of our own shirt fronts, shaking ourselves, and are saying to ourselves as Southerners: "Listen, don't you know you have to live in the world you're born to?"

I'm not suggesting that we forsake the past, the good things of the past, but we do need to free ourselves of the weakening bondage which has held us down.

The South, and the rest of the nation for that matter, needs to take a long, hard look at itself to see where it stands now, and to see where it hopes to stand twenty years from now.

The material assets of the South are many. It is the only region in the United States that fronts the sea on two sides. It has one-third of all the good farm land in the nation. The South has two-thirds of all the land in our country where the annual rainfall is more than forty inches, providing water in abundance for industry, for crops, for transportation, for recreation. The South produces up to 65 per cent of the natural gas, and 100 per cent of the bauxite and naturally occurring sulphur.

In addition to these assets the South is industrializing rapidly and this constitutes one of our most dynamic potentials. There is evidence of this all the way from the Piedmont Plateau to the Gulf shores of Beaumont and Corpus Christi. Textile mills dot the streams of the Piedmont Plateau; paper mills gulp short leaf, loblolly and other pines from Virginia to the Texas plains; flame and smoke point out the steel mills at night; and regional plants of big corporations spring up almost overnight.

Our public school system is Southern, and we have no desire to make it Northern or anything other than Southern. But that does not require us to be provincial in our efforts to prepare our children to take part in life. The sheer impact of the change taking place in this modern day America places our children in competition with children from eery section of the country.

The present day businessman cannot rely on competition solely from his own county or even his own state. Products from all over America, and indeed all over the world, flow in daily to compete against the product he is selling. If he is a manufacturer, he can rest assured that a new industry from outside the South will soon come in and he will have to meet the new demands for labor and other resources.

If the child is setting out to become a lawyer, he can no longer plan to make a living on criminal cases and a few actions in the JP courts. He may be practicing in what we think of as a one-horse town, but he still must match wits with bond attorneys from Wall Street, tax attorneys trained by the Federal Government, and corporation lawyers sent out by General Electric and Standard Oil.

In all professions and businesses the child from the South can no longer think in terms of how good he might be in his own community. He must be trained to compete on equal terms with children schooled across the nation.

A friend told me once that he would rather live in the present than in the past, but he sure did like the past better. I understand that and I revel in the stories of the Old South, but whether the old folk stories of a never-never land were entirely true or not does not matter any longer.

My old man near the river lived in a world so different it's not easy for us to reckon with it today. Take the element of time itself. He farmed by spring, summer, fall. I don't remember his ever mentioning the month of a year, rarely did he refer to a day. He had no specific concept of how long an hour was. He would tell us to sit a spell. How long that was, nobody knew, and nobody cared.

These were the ways of another time, leisurely times, and we all like the memory of them. He liked them too, but at the same time he sensed that we boys were in for a change, and maybe he even knew that time and space were in for some changes too, more than in any other generation in world history. He perhaps was aware that the boys on his porch would come to know time by hours and minutes and seconds and split-seconds; that for one of them a fraction of a second would stand between him and death in planes powered by thousand-horsepower motors. He didn't know anything about the speed of sound, nor how far it was to the moon. For him, the moon was just over the corn field. But he knew change was natural. And he sensed, perhaps because of his travels, that the changes in the future were not routinely mapped out, would not be repetitious only, as spring, summer, fall, winter, follows spring, summer, fall, winter.

And so to them some thirty or thirty-five years ago he said that the training which had served him, which he had moved along with, just as he moved along in companionable style with time and space, would not serve them, and that they were the boys of a new day.

Now, a generation later, we can see that our own children are to be part of a new day too, of still another new day. We can't see its face, can't tell much about it from this distance, can only judge that it will be far different from ours. We can know, however, that our children must prepare themselves to be part of the world, part of the dynamic new South, part of their own new day.

I don't think we are doing a good job of this in the South. For that matter I don't think the schools across American are doing what they are capable of doing.

I think we are beginning to see what we must do, and in some places we are getting a start, but we are not quite fully under way.

We are far behind the rest of the country, generally speaking, and while the distress and poverty of Reconstruction explains this, now is no time for explanations. Because we are behind it is require of us that we make sacrificial efforts to catch up and assume the lead.

We need our own and a new kind of Emancipation Proclamation which will set us free to grow and build, set us free from the drag of poor people, poor schools, from hate, from demogoguery. It has to be a bold dream for the future, realistic in terms of our whole country, and aware that the South is entering upon the mainstream of American life. This kind of proclamation can be written in one word: "Education." It must be the kind of education which seeks excellence, reaches all, looks to the future.

We simply have a difficult job to do, so let's get on with it.

About half of our students do not finish high school.

Not half enough of our able students go to college or technical schools.

We have too few teachers—not enough pay, not enough security, not enough freedom, not enough standing.

Our classes are generally too large.

Our libraries are generally not large enough.

Our local governing bodies say too frequently that they don't have the money.

Our state legislatures frequently do not have the money, and more frequently have not been given the information they need if they are to see the urgency of school needs.

In most of our schools we don't offer a selection of studies wide enough to cover the varied talents and skills the students have.

By not challenging our gifted students we lose their interest, they lose their ambition, the region and nation lose their leadership which we need more than ever.

In having too few programs for the very slow child, we deny happiness, leave too many unproductive, and make more burdens for society.

In school administration, not all of our principals and superintendents measure up to the professional standards we would set, but this too is a reflection of public attitudes and money shortages.

Not nearly enough people have nearly enough understanding of schools and the meaning education has for every part of our lives and every hope of our nation, and therefore not nearly enough citizens have the necessary commitment to building and paying for public education.

These are our problems — some of them. What do we do?

Well, we can think about our own individual schools, do a good job, and let it go at that. But you wouldn't be at this meeting if you believed that way.

The critical need today in education for the South is for a universal belief in education, what it can do for a people, its power and its importance. Even in 1962 we need obedience to Jefferson's command to "preach a crusade against ignorance." And who can best preach this crusade? Those who are at the top in the region. And who are they? Members of the Southern Association. You must show the way.

Who knows better than you the drag of underdeveloped talent manifested by youth who quit school before completion?

Who knows better than you the barrenness and dullness of the school programs characterized by a lack of appeal, lack of imagination, and lack of adequacy to meet the needs of 1962 youth?

Who knows better than you what happens when graduates of high school are not prepared for college, or jobs, or in all cases to fill the obligations of citizenship?

Because you possess the knowledge, because you occupy the position, because education in the Southern Region is crying for leadership and direction, you have the responsibility for showing the way.

Educational leadership involves more than executive detail. It envolves courage and concern, imagination and flexibility of mind, tolerance and the ability to receive and turn criticism to improvement.

If North Carolina has demonstrated nothing else, the events of the past two years have demonstrated that the people will support education, that they do understand the need, that they do believe in preparing for the future of their boys and girls, and that they will make the necessary sacrifices to support their schools.

Too often the trouble is that the public, busy with its many undertakings, doesn't know the shortages, is not aware of the needs, and therefore fails to insist on appropriate school improvement.

And too often the trouble is that the educators do not tell the story, do not get the public's attention, do not let the people know the needs of the schools. It is easy to understand that the educator has his problems, his daily routines, his own doubts about what his role in public appeal should be. Is it his duty to tell the full story, to suggest that there are shortcomings? Is it his duty to "sell" education? Is it his duty to ask for more than he knows lies within the present range of the public revenues?

I think you can afford to tell the full story. I think you can afford to say to your public that you are doing the best job you can with what you have. I think your people would like to know what you could do if you had more support. I think they would like to have you picture for them just what kind of school system your state, or county, or city could have. I think they should have goals for better schools, and I think no one is better qualified to define the goals than the professional educators.

True you cannot fight the battle alone. But you will not have to because among those responding to your call will be legislators, county commissioners, governors and others in a position to take decisive action.

The South has its problems, but the South has the answer. Time and circumstances charge you with the duty of delivering the answer to all the people.

We know enough about our section to know that the future can be told in terms of the educational emphasis we establish in our own day. We know that the social, economic, scientific and cultural progress of our people is dependent on education. We know the future of commerce, industry, agriculture, society in all its facets, and human happiness in most of its ways, are tied to education.

We know that many of our people are doing something about it and the South, this rich, great, storied, proud region is beginning to stretch, to grow, to expand, to lead, to serve.

18th Century Christmas Planned

The University Methodist Church will present a concert of seasonal music entitled "Music for an 18th Century Christmas" at 3:30 p.m. December 9. Works by Corelli, Torelli, Handel, Bach, and Leopold Mozart will be heard. William Bennett, director of music, will conduct.

The program will open with Handel's overture to "The Messiah." Corelli's Concerto Grosso, Op. 8, No. 8, the "Christmas" will follow. This work uses two solo violins and solo cello in contrast to a fuller body of strings. Edgar Alden and Jean Heard will be soloists for the number.

Handel's music will again be heard in the next two selections. Bert Adams, well known baritone from Chapel Hill, will sing two arias from "The Messiah" and Susan Horton, a graduate of Westminister Choir School and organ teacher at Campbell College, will perform the organ concerto in F, Op. 4, No. 4.

Bach will be represented by two arias from his setting of Mary's hymn, "The Magnificat in D." Martha Gibbs, mezzo-soprano from Greensboro, will be the soloist for these two arias.

The program will end with a composition of Leopold Mozart's, the "Toy Symphony." For this work the orchestra will be augmented by such unusual instruments as ratchet, quail, nightingale, and cuckoo.

The orchestra, made up of outstanding musicians in the Triangle Area, will number twelve strings and two oboes with additional instruments for the Mozart number. A harpsichord will be used as continuo, and will be played by Robert Steelman.

Mr. Bennett says, "In this program, we are departing from the usual, the familiar, and quite often overworked pieces often heard at Christmas, by trying to present the nativity of Christ and the spirit of Christmas as seen through the eyes of an 18th century musician. We have tried to approximate the baroque sound inasmuch as this is possible with our modern instruments. The overall purpose of our program is to produce the feeling of the joy of Christmas, sometimes tender, sometimes gentle, but usually bursting with exuberance and rejoicing. It is too easy in our modern society to forget this and substitute a commercial and insincere happiness; we hope that by going back to the 18th century, even if only for a short time, the real, unquestioning exuberance and joy of Christmas will be realized."

Swimmers Meet Clemson Tonight

Blue Dolphins Seek Third Straight Win

By JOEL BULKLEY

Carolina's varsity swimmers, boasting victories over two non-league opponents, open their Atlantic Coast Conference schedule tonight with an 8 o'clock meet with Clemson in the Bowman Gray Pool.

Last year the Tar Heels scored an impressive 65-30 win over Clemson. In the overall standings in the ACC last season, Carolina finished second, although they copped the ACC meet, while the Tigers managed only a seventh place finish, including an 0-5 season mark.

Coach Pat Earey's Blue Dolphins have scored wins to date over VMI and East Carolina. Saturday they downed VMI, 70-25, and Monday night they defeated East Carolina, 58-38, scoring a total of 15 first places in the two meets.

Senior Dick Woodrow of Princeton, N. J. heads the list of UNC scorers with three first places, one of which was a record-breaking effort in the 50-yard freestyle event Saturday.

Freestyler Harrison Merrill, breaststroker and Captain Willie Bloom, distance man Frank Lea and the relay team of Thompson Mann, Tate Kemper, Harry Schiffman and Thad Adams each have two firsts.

Other probable starters for the powerful Blues are: Barry King (200-yd. individual medley; Ernie Oare and Bob Birkenstock (diving); Russell Redding (backstroke; and another relay team—Scott Smiley, Joseph Mummaw, Woodrow and Aevelia.

Saturday afternoon the varsity opposes South Carolina in another ACC meet.

Alumni Return

Four starters from the 1957 National Championship basketball team will return to Woollen Gym next Wednesday for the UNC varsity-Alumni game.

Tommy Kearns, Lennie Rosenbluth, Joe Quigg, and Pete Brennan will be among some 18 top-flight ball players who will try to beat this season's edition of the Tar Heels.

That's only part of the show. Some 60 oldtimers have indicated they plan to return Wednesday for a reunion. They date back to the 1920's and there will be a special game (two-minute quarters) for them to exhibit their abilities as standing guards, two-handed shooters and the like.

Among those indicating that they'll be on hand are the four McCachren brothers who captained the Tar Heels in the 1930's and early 40's; Early Ruth, Nemo Nearman, Coy Carson, Bob Paxton and a real honor roll of standouts including the heralded John (The Hook) Dillon will show.

Tullai Quits Coaching Job

Fred Tulltai, who for the past six years has served on the University of North Carolina football coaching staff, resigned his post this week to enter private business.

Tullai, a graduate of the University of Maryland, will become director of sales promotion for the Kenan Transport Co., with offices in Durham.

"I regret leaving college coaching," said Tullai, "but the opportunity appears too good to refuse. My plans are to continue living in Chapel Hill."

Frank Kenan, president of Kenan Oil Company in Durham, said he was quite pleased Tullai had decided to join his operation. According to Mr. Kenan, the requirements will be for Tullai to travel extensively across the Eastern Seaboard.

Tullai came to Chapel Hill in 1956 with the late Jim Tatum and his first year served as freshman coach. A center and guard during his collegiate days, Tullai later moved to varsity assistant, dealing chiefly with line tactics.

Born in Essington, Pa., in 1930, Tullai had a distinguished athletic career in service and later at Maryland. He followed Tatum to Chapel Hill despite the fact he had a year's eligibility remaining as a player at Maryland.

"Fred has given us outstanding service in his capacity as assistant coach," said Head Coach Jim Hickey of the Tar Heels. "We wish him the best of luck in his new venture."

Tullai is married to the former Twila Bender of Wakeeney, Kansas. They have a young daughter and a son, the latter named after the man who first hired Fred as a coach—James Moore (Tatum).

Tom Brown Gets Double In ACC

GREENSBORO (UPI)—Halfback Tom Brown of Maryland scored an unprecedented double in the 1962 Atlantic Coast Conference individual statistics race. He became the first man in ACC history to lead the conference in catching both his own and the opposition's passes.

The senior halfback, who also holds the ACC batting average record in baseball (.449), won the 1962 ACC pass-receiving title with a record-matching 47 catches. He also topped the league in interceptions with six, his second straight conference pickoff crown.

The versatile Terp star also owns the ACC career record for interceptions at 17, the single-season record at eight, shares the single-game mark at three and capped his season with a record-equalling 100 - yard interception runback against Virginia.

Brown did not win all the 1962 pass-receiving honors in the ACC however, final ACC Service Bureau compilations showed that North Carolina's Bob Lacey, a close second in total catches with 44, established a new ACC record for yards gained on pass receptions, 668, and matched the single-season record for scoring passes caught, five. His reception average of 15.2 yards also was tops for the conference.

Economy Dictates Disarming Editor Turkatenko Declares

By HUBERT HAWKINS

"Why should we conquer the world?" asked TASS editor Nikolai Turkatenko in a speech on the dissemination of Soviet news Thursday night.

"The basis of wars has always been economic," the New York correspondent explained, "and what does the Soviet Union need? Disarmament — for purely egotistic reasons. We need the money now used for defense in other areas of the economy."

The moderate audience in Carroll Hall greeted the 10-year TASS newsman with cool applause. The auditorium was silent as Turkatenko "lectured" informally on the problems of news agencies in the U. S. and Russia. An informal question period followed.

"Of course Soviet correspondents in the U. S. cannot do their jobs as well as we'd like to," he said, "but we do our best. We have five correspondents in New York, two in Washington. On the other hand, the Associated Press, your largest news agency, has a total staff of two hundred in London. So you can compare. . . ."

The Russian emphasized that TASS is one of many news agencies in the Soviet Union.

"It is, however, the oldest and the largest," he said. "We receive a yearly allotment from the government, and besides that we make a huge profit."

"It's sort of a joke," he said, "but we greet the healthy competition, as you say in this country."

Concerning objective coverage, he said, "I am confident that we cover events in the United States better than American correspondents cover Russia."

"TASS is often blamed for being late," he later emphasized, "but never for being untruthful."

"A writer cannot choose what should or should not be reported, he cannot make a partition in himself. His job is to tell the whole story as he sees it. The facts are there; but of course how you understand the facts will depend on your outlook."

To a question on censorship under Stalin, Turkatenko said, "He did use it, very skillfully and very gravely. During the war there was a very rigid censorship machine inside the press. Though this was formally abolished after the war, I would presume these people were still left in their places. We did have them, nobody liked them.

"Anyway, they are not working anymore," he said. "They were not sent to the salt mines, as you say, But I suppose they found the atmosphere warm."

A student said that Radio Moscow had reported four protest movements in American universities, one of them UNC, and asked if TASS was responsible for the distortion.

Turkatenko replied, "You may think you have self-respect and honor in these matters all to yourself. If so, you're wrong. I have never heard of such a story."

"I don't know what was reported on Radio Moscow, but where could such information come from? We simply can't get access to such close reporting of news within universities."

Asked if Russia could ever become an ally of the U. S., he answered:

"Yes, if West Germany should get atomic weapons. And with their scientists and recent prosperity, there is no reason to think they will not."

U. S. Will Insist On Disarmed Cuba

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States will insist that Russia remove the bulk of several thousand Soviet troops from Cuba now that offensive missiles and bombers have been taken out, informed sources said Friday.

For the moment, however, the administration was not pressing the troop issue with the Soviets, because Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev has indicated he intends to remove them of his own accord.

President Kennedy told his last news conference Nov. 20 that U. S. intelligence had a few days earlier discovered the presence of "Soviet ground combat units" in Cuba.

Associated With Weapons

Kennedy said the United States was "informed" these troops were "associated with the protection of offensive weapons systems and will also be withdrawn in due course."

Kennedy did not say so, but it is now known he was informed of Russia's intention in a letter from Khrushchev.

U. S. officials have not pressed the troop issue while first the missiles and the bombers were being removed from Cuba. They preferred to take things on a step-by-step basis.

Intelligence estimates of the number of Soviet troops placed in Cuba during the weapons buildup, which began in mid-July and led to the October Cuban crisis, run up to 13,000.

No Cubans Ditchdigging

These included missile technicians and even laborers, since the Russians did not let the Cubans do any work on the medium and intermediate range missile sites—even ditchdigging.

These Soviet troops were not included in Kennedy's original list of "offensive" Soviet forces which he demanded must go.

Nor were they covered by the Oct. 26-28 Kennedy - Khrushchev exchange of letters agreeing to settlement of the Cuban crisis.

But the United States is unlikely to be willing to tolerate any substantial number of Soviet forces remaining anywhere in the Western Hemisphere.

Noted Philosopher Will Teach Here

Stephan Korner, chairman of the Department of Philosophy at the University of Bristol, England, will serve as the first Mahlon Jordan Distinguished Visiting Professor during the spring semester, 1963.

Professor Korner will teach two courses at UNC: "Philosophy 58" or "modern philosophy," and Philosophy 108," or "philosophy of the natural sciences."

Professor Korner holds the Doctor of Law degree from Charles University, Prague, Czechoslovakia, and a Ph.D. from Cambridge University, England. He served as visiting professor of philosophy at Brown University in 1957 and at Yale University in 1960.

The author of "Conceptual Thinking," second edition, New York, 1959; "Kant," second edition, London, 1960, "Philosophy of Mathematics," London, 1960 and New York, 1961, and "Observation and Interpretation," London, 1959, Professor Korner is currently working on a book in the philosophy of science.

He has contributed numerous articles to professional journals on topics in epistemology, philosophy of logic and mathematics and the philosophy of science.

Mahlon Kline Jordan of Berkely, Calif., a UNC alumnus of the class of 1935, has entered into a trust agreement with the University to supplement the salary of a visiting teacher or lecturer who is not otherwise employed by the University either for a semester or a year. The fund was established in 1961.

Jordan received a B. S. degree in chemical engineering from UNC. He is the president of Avoset Co., a subsidiary of Smith Kline & French Laboratories, Inc., manufacturers of chemicals and drugs.

LAW SCHOLARSHIPS

The University of Chicago Law School has announced that a scholarship will be awarded to a University of North Carolina student for the study of Law for the academic year 1963-1964.

The scholarship will provide full tuition for one year and may be renewable for the last two years upon satisfactory completion of the first year's work. Applications for this scholarship should be made to Dean Charles Henderson Jr., Dean of Student Affairs.

Dean Jo Desha Lucas of the University of Chicago Law School will visit the campus Friday, December 14 to interview students who apply for the scholarship. Interview appointments should be made through the Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall.

YDC

Representative David Henderson from North Carolina's 3rd District will address the monthly meeting of the UNC-YDC Monday, Dec. 10 at 7:30 p.m. in the Law School Courtroom.

National Review Editor Buckley To Speak Here

William F. Buckley, who first provoked public attention through his best-selling book, "God and Man at Yale," will speak in Memorial Hall Monday at 8 p.m.

Buckley, now editor of the "National Review," a magazine which seeks to revitalize conservatism, will speak on "Freedom and the Welfare State." The lecture is sponsored by the Carolina Forum.

At 37, Buckley has three books to his credit, and his work has appeared in many leading national magazines. His writing career began at the age of six when he wrote a letter to King George V suggesting that England pay its war debt.

Perhaps more than anyone else, Buckley has given the Conservative movement a stir in a number of college campuses. He challenges the "New Frontier" but realizes that his ideas will not sweep across the country overnight.

He founded the "National Review" in 1954 to "keep the left from winning by default." He directs the counterattack against "The Nation," "The New Leader," and "The New Republic."

A graduate of Yale University in 1950, Buckley was chairman of the Yale Daily News, class day orator, and key man on the debating team that beat Oxford.

"God and Man at Yale" was published in 1951.

In 1954, Buckley co - authored "McCarthy and His Enemies." His most recent book, "The Committee and Its Critics" was published in January of 1962.

Friday Denies He Will Seek Public Office

Consolidated University President William C. Friday said Thursday that he is definitely not a candidate for any political office.

The president's statement came as a result of further controversy and accusations about the the proposed name-change at N. C. State and Woman's College.

A document was released recently that said the reason for changing the names and expanding two of the state schools represented a "power grab" on the part of the Terry Sanford administration.

The document alluded to an alleged plan by Friday to run for governor in 1964. It was not signed.

Friday said of the accusation: "I am reluctant even to acknowledge such malicious rumors. To prevent further attempts to damage the University through such irresponsible action, I state that I am not a candidate for any political office."

Inspection Offer Not Made, Red Says

GENEVA — (UPI — A Soviet spokesman said Friday an offer had been made to permit international inspectors into Russia to police the "black box" method of detecting nuclear explosions. Later he denied the Soviets had advanced such an offer.

It appeared the Soviet delegation had sent up a trial balloon and then shot it down themselves. At any rate, U. S. negotiator Arthur H. Dean said the West never would accept such an offer with the strings the Russians attached to it.

Soviet spokesman Alexei Roschin plunged the conference into confusion by telling newsmen negotiator Semyon K. Tsarapkin had offered to permit installation of the black boxes for automatic detection of seismic movements in three Soviet areas and allow international inspectors to check them.

Roschin said Tsarpkin called it a "major concession" since the Soviets had refused on all other occasions to permit any form of international inspection on the grounds it would amount to espionage. Then Roschin blandly told newsmen later Tsarapkin had intended to make such an offer but, in fact, had not.

"I am sorry if I misled you," he told newsmen.

Some Western sources speculated the Soviets may have planted the idea as a trial balloon. They conditioned it on a withdrawal by the West of demands for inspection on the spot of any suspected underground nuclear explosion.

"We . . . cannot accept such an agreement," Dean said. He had received word of the Soviet "offer," from newsmen.

Dean said the purported offer was an attempt to persuade the West to accept "some unclear, undefined system of automatic seismic stations to monitor underground weapon tests" while bowing to Soviet insistence on-the-spot inspection was unnecessary.

Asks Student Responsibility

SL Reacts To Action On Beat Dook Parade

Legislators Snowed Under By Flood Of Legislation

The Student Legislature was snowed under Thursday with the introduction of 22 bills, 12 of them financial requests.

These money bills, with a total request of approximately $4,000, were referred to the Finance Committee, include the following appropriations: $600 for the Carolina Forum for additional programs; $50 for campus communications between legislators and their constituents; $100 for the Campus Entertainment Committee; also: $100 to the National Merit Scholarship Committee for transportation of prospective students to UNC; $90 for two delegates to attend a conference on Latin America at Swarthmore College; also:

$200 for the State Affairs Committee for administration; $360 for the Daily Tar Heel for salaries for three reporters; $951.50 to supplement the Yackety Yack budget; also:

$1060 for the purchase of two tape recorders for the Men's and Women's Honor Councils; $25 for the printing of student government posters and $50 for the National Student Association Campus Committee for administration.

Other bills and resolutions introduced were: a bill to submit to the student body a referendum to ascertain their opinions concerning the power of SL to pass various types of resolutions, also:

A bill to allow women to serve on the Graham Memorial Board of Directors; a bill to establish a Physical Development Committee which would give students a voice concerning the addition of buildings to the campus, also:

A resolution to extend the hours of the Ehringhaus cafeteria; and a resolution to condemn the giving of homework assignments over vacation periods.

A highly controversial session of SL is expected next week when Ford Rowan's (SP) bill concerning bad checks comes up.

Lawler Requests Restoration Of Student Rule

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature Thursday night resoundingly approved a resolution "calling for student responsibility in regard to the administrative action concerning the 'Beat Dook" parade."

The resolution, introduced by Harry DeLung (UP) passed by a vote of 31-1.

Mike Lawler, author of the resolution and Speaker of the Legislature, reaffirmed the right of student government to have jurisdiction over and responsibility for all campus affairs, including the irresponsible or ungentlemanly actions of any members of the student community.

Lawler stated that UNC prides itself on the tradition of student society, founded upon student responsibility, and that the administration's intervention and arbitrary action denies student action.

He said that this course of action by the administration was in bad faith with the concept of "our government by compact" and with the principles of student responsibility. He also emphasized the fact that this action was taken only one day after school reconvened after the Thanksgiving Recess, thus showing that the action had been formulated over the previous weekend.

Lawler said that the first word of administrative action was received by Inman Allen, President of the Student Body, Monday afternoon.

Lawler strongly recommended that student government immediately begin carrying out a threefold plan: (1)— go before the administration in an effort to get them to rescind their action; (2)—clarify with the administration the nature of student responsibility and student jurisdiction in conduct and morals and (3)—clarify with the IFC its responsibility in the area of conduct involving fraternity houses or individual members of Greek Letter organizations and a like clarification with the responsibilities and jurisdiction.

Must Take Initiative

Lawler continued saying that student government must face responsibility and take the initiative and must not remain on the defensive "as it has been in the past five years." This particular case should offer a "new concept" as to the status of student government here and should end the string of bad precedents against SG, set within recent years.

Representative Roy Kirk (UP) spoke against the resolution and said that SL shouldn't slap the administration on the wrist now." He added that the administration had informed him that if the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity's resolution had been submitted earlier, they would not have released their plans to the papers on Monday.

Kirk, a Pika member, reported that he felt that this year's "Beat Dook" parade was not as bad as the ones before it and that "it had received nothing but bad publicity from the DTH, because of its yellow journalism." Kirk concluded by saying that two committees will exist to supervise these affairs until the student committee can prove itself worthy of responsibility.

Lawler concluded his presentation by reiterating his belief that the administration was not justified to act, and had acted in bad faith, and that responsible student action must be taken immediately to alleviate this problem.

Dave Williams (SP) and Ford Rowan (SP) also spoke in favor of the bill. Williams stressed that it is the responsibility in a compact body, in student government's relations with the Board of Trustees and Administration, for one party to announce its plans to the others before action is taken. Rowan emphasized the importance of student autonomy.

Codification Bill

Earlier in the meeting SL passed one bill and overrode a veto on another. SL overrode Student Body President Inman Allen's veto of a bill to apropriate $210 from the unappropriated balance for the codification of all Student Govern-

Petites Musicales Features Pianists

The Music Department will present a program with compositions from three musical eras as a part of its Petites Musicales Series at Hill Hall, Sunday at 8 p.m.

Six piano pupils of Dr. William S. Newman will pair off and present three compositions written for two pianos.

The Classical Period will be represented by Bill Fickar and Tom Glymph, Jr. They will perform the "Sonata in B Flat for Two Pianos" by Clementi.

Clementi was one of the first great composers to write for the pianoforte instead of the older harpsichord. His sonata contains tuneful melodies, clever imitations between the two pianos, and a fine sense of balance.

Sue Wallace and Lynn Duval will perform "En Blanc et Noir" by Debussy. This suite of three pieces represents a remarkable study of two-piano writing. In the second movement the German chorale theme, "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," is introduced.

Harriet Herring and Bill Robinson will play "Variations on a Theme by Haydn, and Opus 56b," by Brahms. The theme is the familiar St. Anthony's Chorale and the composition culminates in a powerful fugal finale.

The participants are all music majors and have had a variety of musical experience.

Tom Glymph, a junior transfer from Rollins College, appeared with the N. C. Symphony when he was a junior at Durham High School.

Harriet Herring, a graduate of Salem College, has studied for a year at the Julliard School of Music.

Bill Robinson, a freshman in the honors program and a General Motors Scholar, has had extensive church music experience as an organist.

U. S. Military Aid Due In India Soon

NEW DELHI (UPI)—U. S. Ambassador John K. Galbraith said Friday that the first big sea shipments of American military aid to India would arrive within a month.

"Loading has been in progress for some days now," Galbraith told a news conference here. Galbraith said he was flying to Washington Monday for his first meeting with President Kennedy since the outbreak of the border war between India and Red China. He said he would confer with the President and State Department officials on "military developments of the last few weeks."

In Karachi, the U. S. Embassy announced that U. S. ambassador to Pakistan Walter McConaughy also has been summoned to Washington for consultations.

The prime minister also reported that the Chinese Communists had killed two Indian soldiers and wounded four others in scattered incidents in the two weeks since the Communists proclaimed their cease-fire Nov. 21.

The Hicks Click: 'Road' Is A Riot

REVIEW: TOBACCO ROAD by Jack Kirkland adapted from the novel by Erskine Caldwell. Directed by Harry Davis, Settings by Larry Randolph, Costumes by Irene Smart Rains, Lighting by Russell B. Graves. Playmaker Theatre thru Sunday.

By NEILL CLARK

The stage of the Playmaker Theatre was covered with a half ton of real dirt; stage right was a real corn crib; stage left was a real porch, and upstage were a real log ence and two stalks of real broomsage, but, as the coed said o the beatnik, "I just caint buh-leeve youre reeul!"

Believe it or not, however, Tobacco Road is nothing less than a gas, and I recommend it to everyone who would like to titilate their superiority and unleash some of their repressed sadistic impulses. You'll laugh when lovable ol' Jeeter chides his daughter for her harelip, you'll shake your head and chuckle when that young rascal Dude runs a Negro off the road and leaves him dead underneath his overturned wagon, and you'll positively howl when mother Ada gets run over by her son in his new wife's new automobile. In fact, by God by Jesus, its the Best damned comedy I've seen in years!

To say the least, it is difficult to make this play seriously accepted by a modern audience. The fact that it ran for seven years on Broadway seems more indicative of the perversity of the audiences than the quality of the play. Today, however, audiences are so surfeited with so-called "Southern Gothic" literature the play is quite refreshing as a parody, when ironically enough, it was one of the prototypes.

Whatever one's opinion of the play the production was very entertaining, though perhaps misconceived in some ways. Lloyd J. Borstelmann as Jeeter Lester gave a one-dimensional portrayal that concentrated on the comic rustic elements to the detriment of the role and the play. What he did was good, but the play needed more. The audience should not leave laughing at Jeeter or the point of the play is missed. He had none of the frightening, sinister qualities that make him a despicable human being. By playing him as a worthless but harmless old man he set a tone for the production that made the serious comic and the comic ridiculous. Susie Cordon as Ada Lester gave a convincing performance as the tired, worn, beaten down wife who wanted more for her daughter. Her raspy voice and sluggish, time-slowed movements set the right tone for the play, but I felt she indulged herself in the last scene by trying to take advantage of a "dramatic" moment.

Daniel Proctor as Dude was excellent, but I felt that his energy, which is his finest quality as an actor, was out of place at times. He seemed too energetic, too nervous, too active for a person who sat around the house bouncing a ball off the house all day. However, certain scenes, such as the one in which he tries to fix the spokes of the wheel he has just mangled and tries to keep his horny fat bride off his neck was really well done.

Dick King as Lov Bensey revealed the same weakness. He was constantly tensing up, striking poses with inhibited naturalness. There was a real intensity in his performance, though, which at times was quite effective.

Sister Bessie Rice, played by Betty Setzer, was rather uninteresting and superficial, though she did come to life for a moment in the fight with Jeeter.

The smaller parts were filled by Elanya A. Sundbeck as Grandma Lester, Dick King as Henry Peabody, Mary Lindsay Spearman as Pearl, Jack Nicholson as Captain Tim and George Payne as Hyman Field. A small but important part, that of Ellie May, was adequately filled by Myra Ellis, though her mannerisms were so pronounced that one might thnik her spastic rather than harelipped.

Harry Davis did a good job of utilizing stage space and making pleasing stage pictures. There was never any problem of visibility and usually the scenes also had dramatic effectiveness. I think he fell short however in allowing the comic to eclipse the serious. There were such a variety of acting styles that I felt he should have taken a firmer command in setting the basic mood of the play, in establishing the life of the region as expressed in the attitude and character of the people.

The setting by Larry Randolph was excellently done but the style of performance didn't suit it. It remained real, natural, immediate, while the performances seemed to flirt around it without ever really coming down to the half-ton of dirt on the floor. The lighting by Russell B. Graves, heightened the comic effect. Very warm lights gave a picturesque quality to the already picturesque setting which made Mr. Davis's task of making this into something of significance to the audience even harder.

This play would be hard to make convincing under any circumstances for it is rife with sentimentality, superficially, and shock effects that don't really shock, but merely amuse. I am disappointed with the choice of this play, stageworthy as it is, amusing as it is, and likewise in the production, which is also stageworthy and amusing, for the undercurrent of meaning upon which this play like every piece of theatre floats remains underneath and never ripples the surface.

Does Failure To Act Mean Abdication?

The "Beat Dook parade" resolution, passed Thursday by a 31-1 vote in Student Legislature, was intelligently written, presented and debated. The spirit of the resolution was responsible — we hope action following from it, will be equally responsible.

The resolution protested the administration's unilateral establishment of an administrative-faculty board to review future parades and similar student programs, such as the Sigma Chi Derby and Homecoming Weekend displays. The administration's course of action, the resolution said, was "in bad faith with the concept of our government by compact." The student legislators asked for the abolition of the review board.

This legislative action, we feel, correctly expresses a widespread and genuine student concern.

Students have acknowledged the bad taste of several of this year's parade floats. They have acknowledged that students have waited too long to do something about the parade and similar displays. Nevertheless, the administration's unilateral action brought resentment. A review board is one thing — but an administrative-faculty board imposed from above (even with the sizable provocation which South Building had in this instance) is quite another thing. The legislative resolution verbalizes student discontent.

* * *

THERE ARE dual issues involved here — the practical question of what to do about "bad taste" and the broader question of student responsibility for student action.

For future parades, the PiKA fraternity has established its own review board composed of two students and a faculty member. This group probably could serve adequately to ensure responsible student action — although it could function better if representatives were added from student government, the IFC, the IDC and the Pan-Hellenic Council.

Such a group could perform its job easier and more effectively than an administrative-faculty board, which would have to depend on fear of punishment to deter "bad taste"—and this would give birth to more daring than good taste, and certainly would not insure what the administration wants.

More important, however, than this near-term problem is the question of student self-responsibility. In whose domain are such purely student functions as the "Beat Dook parade"?

The students say, "The students." The administration, we are sure, similarly would answer, "The students . . . But—when the students fail to assume this responsibility, then we must step in."

Agreed. Now this gets into the question of time — how long is too long? After how long can failure to assume proper responsibility be considered an abdication of that responsibility?

The administration gave the students exactly one school day before springing their decision on student government. Is this sufficient time?

The administration said students had failed to assume responsibility in previous years. This was true, but it did not therefore necessitate unilateral administrative action this year.

Student responsibility is student responsibility. That students temporarily may fail to live up to their system and tradition is no reason why that system should be circumvented and that tradition ignored.

* * *

THE SITUATION now pits two opponents who basically agree with each other. The administration probably would like to give students the responsibility for reviewing parades. (We doubt if the Office of Student Affairs really wants to be responsible for every student float and display.) As it is, however, the administration feels it has committed itself and should not "back down."

Public opinion, which was a major cause of the administration's action, has now subsided. It is time when the administration can acknowledge in public, once again, what it would like to believe — that the students are capable, in most cases, of handling their own affairs.

We hope the students soon will regain direction and control of policy in this small but significant area of student activity. (JC)

Negro Actors, Not Roles

"Manchurian Candidate" was, to say the least, an interesting movie. Director Frankenheimer made skillful use of numerous technical and psychological devices to grab up the viewers and carry them through a twisted narrative. The acting was nothing out of the ordinary, nor yet did it need to be, it was sufficient for an hour's entertainment.

But one small thing within the movie that was significantly out of the ordinary was the casting of a Negro actor in a role that obviously did not demand that the part be played by a Negro. It was certainly not a large part; nor was it a difficult part, but it was a part, and it was well done.

The role was that of a consultant Psychiatrist, and obviously could have been played by a member of any race. But we find the fact that the Frankenheimer gave the opportunity to a Negro significant and heartening. Many of the leading Negro entertainers have expressed regret that directors have been reluctant to cast qualified Negro actors in roles that do not absolutely demand specific races.

Their complaint seems justified. Indeed, if one were to judge the ratio of the races in this country on the evidence of our films, he would be led to believe that there just weren't too many Negroes in America, and that those who were here were of a specific type—that which seems best to accommodate itself to Hollywood.

We do not know if directors have been discriminating against Negroes in the rationing of roles, but we do know that we seldom see a Negro in a role that does not demand a member of that race. And when there are Negroes in this country, there are colored actors in Hollywood, and when there are roles that do not require a specific racial quality, we see no reason for not giving the parts to qualified Negro actors who have been suffering from an unjust "type-casting."
We hope the snowball is gaining momentum. (CW)

Reaction To 'Fascism'

Students View U.S. Democracy

A professor recently asked his political science 41 Seminar classes to write their reactions to comments made by Wade Wellman in a three-part series in the DTH. Wellman defended the Fascist form of government and said, Democracy has failed because it insists that society should be organized on a basis of equality, without visible classes." The Poli. Sci. 41 text says, "The most fundamental belief of democratic theory . . . is the concept of equality."

(Below are short excerpts taken from the written reactions of the students.—JC.)

"Democracy is a way of all persons having the opportunity and right to express and carry out their opinions and beliefs."

* * *

"I am not surprised that someone has spoken out against democracy in favor of a more efficient form of government. Perhaps there are other forms of government which are more efficient but I believe that the freedoms given in a democracy are the most important things to consider."

* * *

"I believe that dictatorships can have certain merits . . . the Democratic process, in determining and carrying out an action, is not as efficient as (dictatorship)."

* * *

"Under our (democratic) system, there will always be economic classes. When we cease to have economic classes, we will no longer have a democratic government."

* * *

"Our democratic government has not yet crumpled and even though it appears defeated in the eyes of some, I believe it is still the best system . . . In any democratic government . . . the right to dissent is an extremely important right.

* * *

"Democracy more than any other system stresses freedom, equality and individualism."

* * *

"Democracy . . . has more check and balance than fascism . . ."

* * *

"A highly nationalistic movement such as fascism seems to be a fly-by-night operation . . . Democracy can cite as proof of its success the multiparty system."

* * *

"If Fascism is due for a return, it is only because in democracy, we are allowed and often become slugglish and lazy and do not think as much of the freedom we have. Fascism and Communism are for lazy people."

* * *

"Democracy will soon have to give way to a much stronger, unified form of government. Sometimes the things the people think are best for them are not always best, and I think this would be the weakest point of democracy, which may bring its downfall."

* * *

"Equality as far as economic or class distinction is concerned, is impossible. Democracy has provided a system whereby the inequality of man is for the most part determined by each man's own worth . . . some men will be more successful than others."

* * *

"America is now more democratic . . . and the American people now play an increased role in government . . . Fascism can exist, but cannot flourish in America."

* * *

"I believe that today equality is becoming, if it has not already become, the most fundamental democratic belief—unfortunately. I believe that this is wrong. Man is created equal before God and the law—but equality ends there and should end there. To equality we owe many of our present troubles in government. . . . I believe that a dictatorship is much more efficient than a democracy."

* * *

. . . This concept of equality is the grass roots of our constitution, our breaking away from England, our laws, etc . . . If we (take it away), we become a nation without beliefs."

* * *

"Fascism is indeed more efficient and stable than democracy . . . The masses can be many times more tyrannical than a single leader . . . Limited democracy is the only answer."

* * *

"One particular problem we face in our democratic system of equality is that of the Negro. We have not achieved true equality in this area, but in the past few years we have made progress."

* * *

"I feel that Fascism may be half way between democracy and Communism and might be better if we could stay half way. However, I do believe a half way mark can be maintained and I do not believe that ending equality in any way will help the human being."

* * *

"Our form of democracy is itself becoming "middle ground." There no longer exist major differences between political parties. This is not to deny that radicals are not among them, but ideas are becoming more consistent."

* * *

"In America . . . the individual achieves certain class distinctions through competitive business. This comes to be the goal for successful business men today, to rise in class distinction . . . Fascism is a workable form of government and put in the proper hands could be an effective one."

* * *

"The people of the U.S. will never give their liberal freedom today for a limited one in the future."

(Less than 10 per cent of the students quoted above had read any of the Wellman series on Fascism.

(The Political science professor has offered a prize of $15 to the poli. sci. 41 student who writes the best article on democracy in response to the Wellman series. The articles will be judged by the Editors of the Tar Heel.)

REFLECTIONS

The Cavalier Christmas Fund has begun its annual charity drive at the University of Virginia. The fund is similar in nature to UNC's Campus Chest; it is run by the student union and has a monopoly on campuswide charity collection.

This year's inspiring and patriotic theme for the Fund is "Fight Communism." All recipients of Fund money are "actively engaged in winning friends for the U.S. and levelling the rising tide of communism," the Fund says.

It's encouraging to see that UVa has risen above such bleedingheart, sissy stuff as giving their money to the American Cancer Society or similar health organizations. UVa has charged into the charity area of stopping them dirty Reds, with truth from Radio Free Europe and all that.

Equality Was Misunderstood

To the Editors,

(Dear Mr. Wellman,)

Though myself no formidable student of history, I venture to think that you express a superficial idea of democracy—democracy, not in its extreme form of anarchical egalitarianism which is condemned by Plato in his Republic and by the profounder thinkers of all ages, but in the republican form in which it was instituted in this country. The phrase you drew from the Declaration unfortunately lends itself to the extreme interpretation, so that it is true, perhaps, that the drafters of the Declaration overestimated the importance of environment as opposed to heredity, but a more adequate or at least a supplementary explanation for the apparently naive statement that all men are created equal is found, I conjecture, in the assumption voiced in the same document: that all men stand together under God. It is in respect of their relation to God that men are created equal, albeit they exhibit multifarious inequalities in relation to one another. It was out of reverence for this God-man relation, as well as for the philosophical principles of social, contract and natural right that the founders demanded that essential advantages be available to all. The most essential advantage was education, which was to be available according to individual ability. Thus should be made possible Jefferson's ideal of equality of opportunity with consequent aristocracy of achievement. Here is a democratic spirit which strives for excellence but without abridging the liberties which were so deplorably suppressed in the Italian Fascist experiment.

I submit my conjecture to the correction of a more accomplished historian.

JC 'Praised' Billy Graham?

To the Editors,

I'm afraid the editor was a little carried away in his praise of Billy Graham. It would be as easy to prove that Dr. Graham is not infallible as it would be difficult to find anyone beside an editor who would make such a claim.

On the other hand, "Billy" could well claim an honesty in expressing his beliefs that is sometimes lacking in others. He would never assert, as our editor has written that "there are not even a few young people who are upright and right-thinking." However, he may well say that many young people have embraced rather low standards of behavior—but then this wouldn't surprise anyone who hasn't given up newspapers . . . or parades.

Honor Violation Brings Probation

A student was convicted of violation of the Honor Code in a Men's Council trial held Thursday night and sentenced to indefinite probation.

The defendant was cited for the following offenses:

1. Alleged to have told an administrative secretary that he had a 3 p.m. physical education class. (Pleaded guilty).

2. Alleged to have told an administrative official that he had arranged to see his advisor about his class schedule. (Pleaded not guilty).

3. Alleged to have told an administrative official that he had seen his instructors and that he was reinstated in all his classes. (Pleaded not guilty).

A confusing point in the trial was the mixup as to whether the defendant had actually been reinstated in all his classes after overcutting.

In connection with the first offense it was learned that the defendant did not have a 3 p.m. physical education class. According to the defendant, he was in a hurry to get to Woollen Gym and accidentally said that he did.

The Council found the defendant guilty of the first charge and not guilty of the second and third. He was given a sentence of indefinite probation.

After a minimum of one full academic semester, the defendant can apply to have the probation status lifted.

WC Takes Ban Off Booze

W. C. students are now permitted to drink alcoholic beverages within 50 miles of the campus under a new ruling approved last week by the Student Legislature and Chancellor Otis Singletary.

In the past, students were not allowed to drink within 50 miles of Greensboro, unless in their own homes.

Though drinking is now allowed, the rule further states: "Any student whose conduct, because of drinking, is not in keeping with the standards of the college will be subject to disciplinary measures by the Court of Social Regulations."

Food, Heat Biggest Gripes In New Dorm

Ehringhaus residents complained of "far from good" food in the cafeteria, having to buy social cards to vote, insufficient heat and excessive noise in a report recently submitted by the U.P. Grievance Committee.

Almost half the complaints pertained to the building itself such as insufficient heat, out-of-order elevators and empty fire extinguishers. These were referred to the dorm inspectors.

A major grievance was that students in Ehringhaus had to buy social cards in order to vote. This problem was referred to the I. D. C. and dorm president.

Ehringhaus spokesmen stated that because of distance and coming cold weather, transportation to and from campus is needed.

They also said that the "food in the Ehringhaus cafeteria is far from good and the prices 'seem' to be rising."

Check cashing is also a problem, the report stated, since this service is offered only about half of the week. This complaint was referred to the Campus Affairs committee.

Members of the Grievance Committee are Marshall Bellovin, Rex Savery, Bob Clawson and Dee Johnson.

The committee found that many of the problems presented were "unique rough spots connected with the opening of a new dorm on the edge of campus." Also many problems arose because Ehringhaus is an all-freshman dorm.

Friday Honored By Air Force In Washington

CU President William C. Friday was awarded a United States Air Force Scroll of Appreciation by Secretary of the Air Force Eugene Zuckert at award ceremonies in Washington, D. C. this week.

President Friday received the honor for his service as chairman of the AF-ROTC Advisory Panel for the past three years. He is one of four who served on the nine-member panel and received the scroll.

Membership on the panel is provided for by nominations from educational associations on a rotating basis. President Friday was nominated by the Association of American Universities. He will be replaced by Chancellor Harry Ransom of the University of Texas.

One of the major outgrowths of the panel's activities during President Friday's chairmanship is a proposed Officer Education Program which would replace the present Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps (ROTC) education program and which is awaiting future Congressional legislation.

The proposed program would offer the following changes: (1) a two-year program to replace the present four-year policy; (2) one month summer training courses in addition to three hours per semester of study in military sciences; (3) substantial scholarships for those selected for the program.

Young Dems Holding Meet In High Point

The Federation of College Young Democrats of North Carolina meet in High Point today for an active day of events, workshops and guest speakers. Three top Democrats will conduct and lead the discussion groups during the afternoon session. They are Joel Fleishman, Governor Sanford's legal assistant Dr. Gordon Cleveland, UNC professor of political science and Al House, UNC graduate and national committeeman for the YDC of N. C.

A general session of the Federation will be held in the late afternoon for the election of officers for the coming year and also to hear Mike Lawler, UNC student and NSA representative.

The highlight of the all day rally will be an appreciation dinner for outgoing state YDC president William "Dub" Graham, former UNC student and now an attorney in Charlotte. The guest speaker for the banquet is State Senator W. Lunsford Crew, President pro-tem of 1961 State Senate, a UNC Trustee and NC Representative to the Southern Regional Education Board.

The College Federation, chaired by Fred Ricci, a UNC student, was started at the University last March by the YDC and now lists more than twenty colleges and universities in NC in its ranks. The event is open to all young democrats at UNC.

CHRISTMAS PARTY

GMAB and the Pan - Hellenic Council are sponsoring a "trim the tree" party Sunday at 2 p.m. in G.M. All students are invited.

The purpose of the party is to decorate G.M. for Christmas but entertainment and refreshments will be provided.

Bob Rearden, chairman of GMAB, said, "It is hoped that many campus men and women who have the 'Christmas Spirit' will come Sunday to help out." An estimated turnout of over 400 girls is expected.

Tar Heels Visit South Carolina

Poteet, Brown Lead Balanced Offense

By ED DUPREE

UNC's Tar Heels, boasting a scoring balance unequalled in the Atlantic Coast Conference, go after their third win of the young basketball season tonight against South Carolina.

Game time for the Carolina-Gamecock clash is 8 p.m. in Columbia's Carolina Field House.

North Carolina is 2-0 for the season. The Roosters, in the midst of a rebuilding program under new coach Chuck Noe, have defeated only small Erskine while losing to Duke and Georgia.

Dean Smith's men defeated Georgia easily, then topped Clemson in UNC's conference opener.

Yogi Poteet paces the Tar Heel Scorers with a 17.5 average, but five more players have contributed greatly to the team's two victories.

Charlie Shaffer, playing his first full season of basketball, is right behind Poteet with a 16-point average. Larry Brown, co-captain with Poteet, has hit for 15.5 a game.

The Tar Heel backcourt combination, seniors Brown and Poteet, have tallied 66 points, but the big men have done their share.

Ray Respess has a 9-point average, just below double figures. Billy Cunningham, the sensational freshman of last year, leads the team in rebounds with 33—each time he had to match talents with much taller men. The New Yorker has also hit for an 8-point average.

Reserve—or "sixth starter" Mike Cooke completes the balanced scoring attack with a 7.5 mark.

The Tar Heels have a good reason for wanting to trim the Columbians. Last year, in Charlotte, the southerners took a 97-82 victory. Then, in the first round of the ACC tournament last spring, Bob Steven's men won again, 57-55.

Stevens, after guiding his team to a 15-12 record and USC's first winning season since 1957, accepted another coaching offer and South Carolina got Noe from Virginia Tech where he had made the Gobblers into a basketball powerhouse.

Back from last year's top five are 6-3 guard Ronnie Collins and 6-1 guard Scotti Ward. The other three starters, Art Whisnant, Bud Cronin and Bobby Robinson, graduated—thus Noe has quite a job in store for him.

Reserves returning are guards Bill Yarborough and Terry Lucansky and forwards Bob Haney and Dave Prevoznik. Prevoznik and soph John Gorsage, at 6-6, will be the biggest men in tonight's game.

Other sophs hoping to fill the three big vacancies are Dennis Ostaszewski, a forward, and Richard Grich, a guard. Gorsage, Ostaszewski and Grich are up from a yearling team that won only one game last year.

The Tar Heels lead the series, which started in 1918, 37-13.

Frosh Tankmen Set Two Marks In Easy Victory

Taking first places in all but one event and second places in all but two, the Tar Baby swimmers won their opening meet of the season against East Carolina College Thursday at Greenville, 78-15. Two freshman school records were broken — in the 200-yard butterfly and the 500-yard freestyle.

Fred Lipp set a new record in the 200-yard butterfly with 2:14.2 time, bettering by 2.7 seconds Barry King's 1960 mark.

Versatile Tom Murphy set another record in the 500-yard freestyle by turning in a time of 5:35.5, five seconds better than Jon Weber's old record.

In the 400-yard medley relay, the team of Al Schreiber, Dick Boardman, Lipp and Taylor won easily. Lipp joined John Sheldon, Dickie Chance, and Tom Bennett in the 400-yard free-style relay for another first.

Sheldon copped a first in the 200-yard freestyle and Bennett picked up second. Murphy and Chance turned in the same one-two performance in the 50-yard freestyle. Rick Forum and Sandy McNairy also did a one-two job in the 200-yard individual medley.

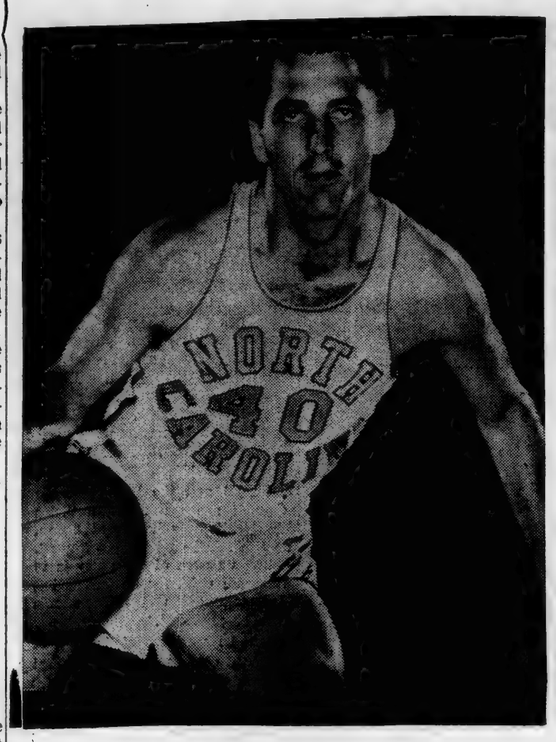
Diving was the only event where the tankmen didn't manage a first place. Paul Donohue of ECC placed first in this event, followed by the UNC team of Guy Smith and Charlie Brion.

The 100-yard freestyle went to Sheldon and Chance with one-two finishes and Schreiber and McNairy wheeled the same trick in the 200-yard backstroke.

Rick Forum pulled up one-tenth of a second short of the school record in the 200-yard breaststroke in a first place finish of 2:33.7 as Boardman took a strong second.

Coach Alan Gentry, in his debut, was pleased with the overall effort and thought the team gained needed confidence, as well as valuable experience. The next freshman meet will be December 15 at 1:30 p.m. against J. H. Rose High School of Greenville in Bowman Gray Pool.

IN-SERVICE TRAINING



Dr. Harris Tindall, Associate Physician of the UNC Infirmary Staff, will speak on "Health Services of the University" Monday, Dec. 10 at 4:30 p.m. in 105 Hanes Hall.

Honors Yogi Poteet

Athlete Of The Week

By ED DUPREE

George (Yogi) Poteet returned to Carolina basketball last week in the opener against Georgia and made area sports writers sit up and take notice.

After missing last season because of scholastic ineligibility, the Hendersonville senior scored 21 points and sparked the Tar Heels to an 89-64 victory.

But it wasn't all that easy.

Yogi's father died at his home in Hendersonville two days before UNC's game. Mr. Poteet's last wish was that his son play in Saturday's game, regardless.

Yogi told Dean Smith later that the only thing his Dad had to look forward to was the coming basketball season. His father's sickness was incurable.

Poteet, regarded as one of the top defensive men in the Atlantic Coast conference two years ago, is now the man to watch in the league scoring race. It's unlikely that he will win the title since he has four men in the lineup with him who can hit 20 points on any given night, but he'll be near the top.

A sociology major, Yogi has one of the deadliest one-hand jump shots in the league. He and Larry Brown, the co-captains, seem destined to be one of the top backcourt combinations in the south, if not the nation.

Yogi was a star athlete in two sports at Hendersonville — basketball and football. He could have played college football, but preferred the round ball game.

Frosh Cagers Play

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Ken Rosemond sends his freshman basketball team into its first ACC test tonight when the Tar Babies battle South Carolina at Columbia.

In the Tar Babies' first two games (74-52 and 64-50 victories over Wilmington College and Edwards Military Institute, respectively), the scoring attack was considerably balanced.

Mark Mirken leads the point parade on 13 of 27 from the floor and two of five from the free throw line for a total of 28 points. Big Mark is also credited with 24 rebounds for the two games.

Bob Bennett is right behind Mirken with 26 points. Bennett has hit 12 of 26 field goals and two of three free throws for his total. He has rebouned 14 times.

Bennett Right Behind

Bill Harrison has scored 19 points on seven of 11 floor shots and five of 10 from the charity stripe. The slim Rocky Mount native has also contributed 12 rebounds.

Iannarella May Start

The freshmen, lagging and floundering in that second game, were put on the right track by little Mike Iannarella.

Iannarella, a fine ball-handler and playmaker, may get the nod tonight at a starting guard position.

Sigmon Paces Parker Romp

Now in its final phase, the Grail Mural Basketball Tournament has been narrowed down to 16 teams. In Thursday's action two-point wins by Chi Phi and the Beta Blues over the Sigma Nu Blues and Med School-II team were the closest games of the day, and the 46-26 Craige B-I win over AK Psi was the most one-sided.

High-scoring honors went to Gene Sigmon of the Parker Plummers with 17. Sigmon was the mainstay in Parker's 38-33 comeback win over the Law Shysters, and established them as the team to beat in the Playoffs.

Dolphins Host Roosters Today

By ED DUPREE

Coach Pat Earey's varsity swimmers meet their second straight opponent from South Carolina this afternoon at 3 in Bowman Gray Pool.

Today's opponent, the University of South Carolina, has only two lettermen back from last year—Joe Hullings and Steve Smith. Jimmy Ratliff coaches the Gamecocks.

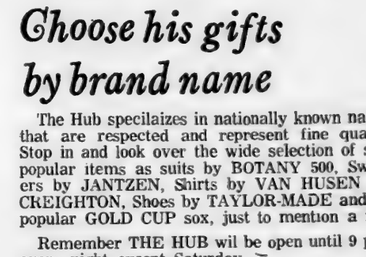
Last night the Blue Dolphins played host to Clemson College. Earey's men already hold victories over VMI and East Carolina.

Missing from the Tar Heel lineup will be sophomore star Harrison Merrill. Merrill, who delighted the coaches with his record-breaking frosh performances, suffered third-degree burns on his hand in a chemistry lab this week and won't be swimming tonight.

Earey hopes to have his ace breastroker back in the water soon with a rubber glove covering the bandages on his hand.

Pete Swift, counted on to be one of the top breaststrokers this season, is recovering from tonsilitis and won't be ready for a while.

Freestyler Dick Woodrow, backstroker and freestyler Thompson Mann, breaststroker Willie Bloom—the team's captain, distance man Frank Lea and Barry King in the individual medley are big men for the Dolphins.



Relay men, in addition to Mann, are Joe Mummaw, Tate Kemper, Harry Schiffman, Thad Adams, Scott Smiley and Woodrow, the team's high scorer.

Molly Snead Wins

Molly Snead of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority saved her best for the finals of the Women's Athletic Association table tennis tournament and won the championship easily.

Miss Snead defeated Missy Vorus of Alpha Delta Pi sorority, 21-3, 21-9. The KKG entrant bested Susan Mott of the Nurses' Dorm, 21-12, 21-12, in the semifinals.

Sixty-four coeds participated in the tournament.

UNC Team Meets Oxford Debaters Here Tomorrow

The UNC Debaters will be challenged by the famed Oxford University Debate Team tomorrow from 4-5 p.m. at Gerrard Hall.

This will be a split-team debate, with a member of the North Carolina team and an Oxford debater facing fellow teammates. The subject of the debate is: "Resolved: That it is the business of the Government to give the people what they need rather than what they want."

The Oxford debaters are coming to UNC on the invitation of Donald K. Springer, director of debate. The event is open to faculty, students, and townspeople.

The UNC Debate Team will consist of Mack Armstrong and Bill Patterson. Armstrong, a senior from Rogersville, Tenn., and veteran debater for four years, was a 1962 delegate to the National Student Congress. He is a history major and a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Patterson has had three years of experience in college debating, and is a senior history major from Bedford Hills, New York. He is director of the Southeast District of the College Young Republican Federation.

Debaters from Oxford are William D. Madel and John B. W. McDonnell.

Madel, who is 24, is a member of the Oxford Union Society, the Oxford University Conservative Association, the Federation of University Conservative and Unionist Associates, and the Oxford hockey and cricket teams. He attended Uppingham School and Keble College, Oxford, and plans to enter publishing.

McDonnell, 22, is a member of the Oxford Union Society, the Oxford University Conservative Association, the Carlton Club, the Coxswains' Society, the College Sports Clubs Committee and the editorial staff of "Mesopotania." He plans to enter law.

International debating such as the UNC contest on Dec. 10, began in 1921 when a Bates College debate team argued at Oxford University. Almost every year since then with the exception of the war years, a foreign team has toured the United States debating American college students.

Advantages of international debating include an opportunity for American debaters to re-evaluate their teams, and to study different debating approaches and techniques.

The United States also sends debate teams abroad. Team members are selected by the Institute of International Education following tryouts.

NATO Nations Try To Reach Agreement

PARIS (UPI)—The United States and its North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) partners meet here next week to patch a series of rifts that suddenly have threatened the alliance's unity.

They will meet in the NATO Ministerial Council Dec. 13-15 and in a number of side conferences in an atmosphere heavy with disagreements, angry recriminations and bickering.

The United States believes the European NATO members are not pulling their weight. It wants them to increase their lagging defense spending and to step up their conventional forces in Europe.

The Europeans are suspicious the United States wants to keep the entire Western nuclear deterrent in its own hands.

The United States is ready, although reluctantly, to help the Europeans create a European nuclear striking force inside NATO. But the Europeans are split among themselves over this.

France wants to push ahead with its go-it-alone program for an independent French nuclear force. West Germany wants a NATO nuclear force. Few European NATO countries appear ready to put up the money which a NATO nuclear force would cost. Great Britain is alarmed and angered by United States threats to halt the kybolt missile program on which the British A-bomber force depends.

The British government and press still are seething over charges by former U.S. Secretary of State Dean Acheson that Britain's "attempt to pilay a separate power role is about played out."

Britain is disturbed, too, over continued deadlock in the Brussels negotiations on its entry into the European Common Market. Britain blames French intransigence for blocking agreement.

Most of these issues probably will not come up for discussion at the actual NATO council table. But they certainly will be threshed out at the private meetings between ministers on the fringes of the council session.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk arrives here Tuesday and is scheduled to meet British Foreoign Secretary Lord Home the same afternoon or evening.

Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara will meet simultaneously in London with British Defense Minister Peter Thorneycroft for a foirst go-around on the Skybolt dispute.

Atomic Boosters Seen Necessary

Kennedy Considers Space Speedup

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (UPI)—President Kennedy Saturday completed his speedy tour of nuclear and space installations better prepared, according to his associates, to decide whether to speed up the government's atomic propulsion program.

Kennedy arrived here at noon (PST for an overnight rest at the desert home of singer Bing Crosby before returning to Washington early Monday to face a heavy schedule of visitors and final budget decisions.

The Chief Executive started early Saturday morning at Roman Catholic mass in the sunlit chapel on Kirkland Air Force Base outside Albuquerque, N. M. He then flew to the nuclear rocket development station on the Nevada test grounds near the Indian Springs AFB.

There he saw a "Kiwi" reactor still "hot" radioactively from a recent test firing being dismantled behind a shield of glass and liquid six feet thick.

Discuss Mars Landing

It was at the nuclear rocket station that Kennedy discussed with some of the government's top scientists the probability of the first U.S.-manned landing on Mars. Such a trip will require a refinement of the current Project Rover which is dedicated to building the nuclear propulsion units for pushing man deep into space.

According to Kennedy associates, one of his primary purposes on this trip was to study fiscal 1964 budgetary needs against the Rover potential.

The President, with the best advisers he could summon, examined the possibility of stepping up federal funds for Project Rover.

The question before the administration was whether Rover has reached the point where extra funds might cut appreciable time off the American effort to put a man on the moon, and later on Mars.

Kennedy and a few members of his personal staff planned little more rest and swimming in a heated pool at the Crosby house Saturday night and Sunday. The President planned to take-off for Washington about midnight Sunday.

A crowd of 5,000 greeted Kennedy at the Palm Springs Airport when the jetliner touched down. He was greeted by a cheer—and 80-degree temperatures.

Watched Reactor

The President watched dismantling of a "hot" radioactive Kiwi reactor at the "Area 400 Nevada test site" near Las Vegas, where Atomic Energy Commission AEC Chairman Dr. Glenn T. Seaborg and Harold D. Baker, director of the space nuclear propulsion office, were his guides. When he asked the scientists about future space probes, and specifically when this country would begin shooting for Mars, the President was not given a target date. But the scientists envisioned a one-year round trip to Mars, with American spacemen involved spending 40 days on the planet. First, however, there must be successful exploration of the moon, hoped for near the end of this decade.

Buckley To Speak On Welfare State Tomorrow Night

William F. Buckley Jr., editor of the nation's leading conservative magazine, will speak Monday night at 8 in Memorial Hall.

The Young Republicans Club and the Carolina Forum will co-sponsor the speech, on "Freedom and the Welfare State."

WILLIAM F. BUCKLEY

Buckley is editor of National Review. Sen. Barry Goldwater called him "the chief spokesman for the young conservative revival in this country."

Buckley, 37, has three books to his credit: "God and Man at Yale"; "McCarthy and His Enemies" (with Brent Bozell); and "Up From Liberalism." He edited and wrote part of "The Committee and Its Critics," a defense of the House Un - American Activities Committee, published in January, 1962.

"God and Man at Yale", published in 1951, is an attack on what Buckley considers a false view of "academic freedom." It presents the view that most college professors (at least, at Yale) are presenting their students the "liberal line" on politics.

"McCarthy and His Enemies," published in 1954, is a detailed defense of the charges made by Sen. Joseph McCarthy.

"Up From Liberalism," published in 1961, is an attack on the "Liberal Indoctrinator" and the liberal political "establishment."

Perhaps more than anyone else, Buckley has given the conservative effort a stir on the college campus. He is a regular speaker before student, as well as business and political, groups.

He founded the National Review in 1954 "to keep the left from winning by default."

A 1950 graduate of Yale University, Buckley was chairman of the Yale Daily News, class day orator and key man on the debating team that defeated Oxford that year.

Khrushchev To Give Report On Cuban Crisis To Soviet

MOSCOW (UPI)—The Supreme Soviet, the nation's parliament, opens an annual year-end meeting here Monday that may be the forum for Premier Nikita Khrushchev's first report to the country on the Cuban crisis.

The 1,443 deputies, drawn from all over the Soviet Union, also will approve the government's 1963 budget and economic plan and possibly make formal a number of secondary level government job changes.

But top interest at the Kremlin gathering, expected to last about a week, will be centered on the expected foreign policy report which should cover Cuba, Berlin and possibly outline the Soviet stand on the Sino-Indian border dispute.

Khrushchev Report

If Khrushchev, as he often does, addresses the Supreme Soviet session, he would be expected to cover ail thse points, as well as internal questions, in his report.

But the Premier's address is not required, and the Cuban question and other matters could be covered by Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko.

Khrushchev is reported to have discussed the Cuban crisis at length in a closed-door meeting of the Communist Party's powerful Central Committee here late last month.

But so far he has not given what could be considered an official report to the people.

Borneo Rebels Try To Seize Oil Fields

BRUNEI, Brunei (UPI) — Rebel forces revolted Saturday against the sultan in this oil-rich British protectorate on Borneo, one of the last outposts of empire. Britain flew in two companies of Gurkha troops from Singapore to try to restore order.

Initial reports said seven persons, including three policemen, had been killed in the fighting as the rebels sought to take over the Shell Oil Company fields at Seria.

International Living Plan To Be Discussed This Week

Mr. Sam Achziger, representative from the U. S. Headquarters of the Experiment in International Living, will speak to students interested in the Experiment's program of cultural exchange Tuesday at 7 p.m.

Achiziger's talk will be hosted by the International Students Board in GM's Roland Parker Lounge. Achziger will speak on the philosophy and operations of the Experiment, and will tell about costs, application procedures, and scholarship opportunities.

The Experiment in International Living is a non-profit, non-sectarian organization of world - wide scope. This year, the organization observing its thirtieth anniversary has grown in that time to include all the countries of Western Europe, many Iron Curtain countries, most of Latin America, and various nations in Africa and the Near East.

According to Larry Winecoff, the organization's Chapel Hill representative, "The Experiment offers an unusual challenge to the person interested in contributing to the growth of international understanding.

"By placing students in foreign homes as 'family members', the Experiment gives the student the opportunity to become acquainted with a foreign country from the viewpoint of the natives, to live the everyday life of an average family, and to see the country and its culture through the native's eyes."

The Experiment philosophy is expressed in the phrase, "People learn to live together by living together," said Winecoff.

Typical Program

Winecoff went on to outline the typical Experiment program, which consists of four parts:

(1) an intensive linguistic and culture orientation, usually during a period of approximately ten days on shipboard en route to the foreign country;

(2) the "Home Stay" in the host country, a period of about five weeks, in which there are regularly scheduled bi-national meetings under the direction of an Experiment group leader, in order to discuss new impressions, problems, adjustments, etc.;

(3) the "Informal Trip" including both the American students and members of like age from the host families, usually a period of three to four weeks, in which the group visits not merely tourist attractions but sites which responsible natives consider most truly representative of the country; and

(4) an evaluation session during the homeward journey, aimed at summing up the summer's experiences both in terms of the educational value and its contributions to international understanding.

The usual Experiment group has ten members and a leader, who is often a teacher during the regular academic year. Each group is assigned to a different town, with the towns being chosen on the basis of their ability to represent the country.

Peace Corps Post Filled By N. C. Man

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Dr. Samuel Dewitt Proctor, now on leave of absence as president of North Carolina A&T College, was named Saturday as associate director of the U.S. Peace Corps.

Practor, 40, has been in Nigeria since January as head of Peace Corps work there. Director Sargent Shriver said in making the announcement that Proctor will be in charge of recruit training and overseas administration for the Peace Corps.

Proctor, a Negro, will receive $20,000 a year in his new post, one of the highest in the Peace Corps.

Proctor is scheduled to return to Greensboro, N. C., in September 1963 to resume the presidency of A&T College. He was granted an 18-month leave of absence by the college's board of trustees in December 1961 when offered the Nigerian Peace Corps post.

Galbraith To Check Border Conditions; Chinese Withdraw

NEW DELHI (UPI)—U. S. Ambassador John Kenneth Galbraith flew to Communist-invaded Ladakh Saturday on an inspection trip while Communist China announced a series of withdrawals all along the 2,500-mile Sino-Indian frontier.

Peking Radio announced the new withdrawals shortly after Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru said the Chinese would withdraw from disputer areas of the Northeast Frontier Agency (NEFA) except for the posts of Dhola and Longju, which they captured in September.

Galbraith, accompanied by his wife and military aid specialist, Brig. Gen. John E. Kelly, made a flying visit to Leh, capital of Ladakh. Mrs. Galbraith visited Indian wounded in the hospital while Galbraith conferred with Indian officials.

Washington Visit Planned

Galbraith and U. S. Ambassador to Pakistan Walter P. McConaughty both fly to Washington on Monday for conference with President Kennedy. Presumably they will discuss the aid program and the Indio-Pakistani decision to negotiate on the long-smouldering Kashmir dispute.

The Peking broadcast listed a string of towns and villages the Chinese Communists have captured inside territory claimed by India. The broadcast said Red troops would begin withdrawing from these towns Sunday. The towns ranged from Ladakh areas to the extreme eastern end of the frontier. Another Peking report said the Communists would release 146 sick and wounded Indian soldiers Dec. 13 in the Dirang Dzong area —well inside the NEFA.

Tezpur dispatches said there still was no sign of a large scale withdrawal although Peking announced it would begin its withdrawals Dec. 1. The Chinese still held Bomdi La, north of Tezpur, but Peking said troops would pull out of there as far north as the disputed McMahon Line.

The Tezpur dispatches said Indian army officials feared the Chinese actually were consolidating some positions inside India instead of withdrawing. The officials said the only withdrawals to date were from advanced outposts reached just before the cease-fire was announced Nov. 21.

Nehru went before the Upper House Saturday to clarify his confusing statements which left members of parliament angry and uncertain as to his intentions. Some wondered whether he was carrying on secret negotiations with Red China.

Saturday he said the Chinese would pull back from all except two posts from Indian-claimed territory in the NEFA-Dhola near the borders of India, Ghutan and Tibet, and Longju about 30 miles further east.

Experiment To Be Tried By UNC Club

Aimee Gibson, spokesman for the International Students Board, announced yesterday the board's plans for a College and Community Ambassador Program in co-operation with the Experiment in International Living.

The purpose of the program, said Miss Gibson, is to give a student the opportunity to spend a summer in a foreign country and report back to his sponsors what he has learned from the trip.

The ISB is presently trying to raise money from campus and community organizations to sponsor the program. They need about $950.

In order to apply for the ambassadorship, the applicant must be a student at the University and must be willing to speak to sponsor groups on his return to Chapel Hill. He does not necessarily have to have command of a foreign language, said Miss Gibson.

There will be a meeting of all faculty and community members interested in seeing the program established on Tuesday night at 9:00 in the Episcopal Church of the Cross. Sam Achziger of the U. S. Headquarters of the Experiment in International Living will speak to the group about the Ambassador Program.

Any students interested in applying for the program should meet at the "Y" Thursday at 4:00.

Cuba Buildup Cost Russia $1 Billion

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The ballistic missiles and other weapons which Russia shipped into Cuba in its clandestine effort to gain a Western Hemisphere foothold were authoritatively estimated Saturday to have cost not less than $1 billion.

Washington computed the cost as one attempt to measure the enormity of the Kremlin enterprise that resulted in the brink-of-war crisis last October. In the face of U. S. demands, the "offensive" ballistic missiles and obsolescent IL28 bombers have pulled out and presumably shipped home to Russia. But a huge share of Moscow's investment in arms-for-Cuba remains in the form of what Washington elects to describe as "defensive" weapons.

With them are Russian troops and technicians estimated in the capital to number anywhere from 5,000 to 20,000 men. There is no sure estimate, but an insistent administration goal is to bring about their departure.

Weapons still in Cuba include a highly developed anti-aircraft missile system, Komar patrol boats able to fire short-range missiles, FROG free rocket over ground missiles with 20 to 25 miles range, complex military communications systems, and MIG jet fighters that could lug bombs as well as conduct air defense.

Columbia Dean Will Be Here This Week.

Walter D. Smith, Assistant Dean and Chairman of the Committee on Admissions of the Graduate School of Business, Columbia University, will be on the Carolina campus on Thursday, December 13.

Dean Smith will be available in the afternoon to talk with Juniors and Seniors about the graduate Business program at Columbia.

The School has a three-term program which allows students to gain credit for a full term of work during the Summer period.

Ackland Plans Special Show

New Purchases To Be Displayed For Fourth Anniversary

By ALICE WELSH

To celebrate its fourth anniversary the William Hayes Ackland Memorial Art Center will hold a special exhibit of its new acquisitions from December 15 to January 20.

Many of these new objets d'art were purchased in Europe earlier this year by Dr. Joseph C. Sloane, director of the Center, and will be on public display for the first time. An additional observance will be the publication of a small illustrated volume describing some of the present holdings.

In conjunction with the exhibition, a new booklet picturing and describing some of Ackland Art Center's holdings is now on sale. Entitled "An Introduction to the Collection, 1958-1962," the booklet treats 94 of the pieces in the Center's permanent collection with illustrations and a text on each item.

The Ackland Art Center was formally opened in September 1958. It is a memorial to a Southern attorney, William Hayes Ackland (1855-1940) who, because he visualized broader art education in the South, bequeathed to the University a teaching museum and a purchase endowment. By means of Mr. Ackland's generosity which was later supplemented by the William A. Whitaker Fund and gifts from friends, the Center has made slow but steady progress towards fullfilling the benefactors' intent.

Four Years Of Growth

Since its meager beginning four years ago the Center has become an integral part of the University. And, while its primary function is pedagogic—which is sometimes dull — monotony has been avoided by a highly selective and wary director to whom "quality has been a major consideration for both purchases and the acceptances of gifts." Dr. Sloane's attitude is that esthetic and instructive needs are not incompatible—the practical result being an unusually stimulating, well-rounded collection that will eventually represent the entire range of art history.

Substantial progress towards that goal has been achieved by the new acquisitions with fewer and fewer deficiencies in any period. Outstanding paintings, sculpture, prints, drawings, and other arts are comprised by the recent additions.

The new objets d'art include a 5th century B.C. Greek kylix attributed to Makron; a 1st century B.C. Roman or Greek torso; a 15th century painting by Jacopo Sellaio; two 15th century prints by Andrea Mantegna and Martin Schongauer; two 16th century drawings by Francesco Primaticcio and Remigio Cantagallina; a 17th century Italian painting of dramatic chiaroscuro and an oil still life of the same period by Jan Davidsz De Heem; a 17th century drawing by Il Volterrano; two 18th century paintings by Pierre Subleyras and Josepth-Marie Vien; three 18th century drawings by Nicolas Lancret, P. G. van Os and William Payne and a watercolor by William Blake of the same period; two 19th century drawings by Constantin Guys and A. L. Barye; a 20th century drawing by Georges Matieu and a bronze sculpture also of this century by Jean Arp.

The museum is open to the public Tuesdays through Fridays, 2 to 5 p.m. and 8 to 10 p.m.; Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sundays, 1 to 5 p.m. Closed Mondays.

Conservative Buckley, A Welcome Relief

Monday night at 8 p.m. one of this country's more sincere citizens and most enlightened conservatives will expound on "Freedom and the Welfare State." We would suggest that every member of the student body attend the lecture.

William F. Buckley will have, we think, something to say. And though we may not agree entirely with what he says, we do anticipate being entertained by the way in which he will say it. Buckley has a speaking reputation of which every conservative must surely be proud.

Need more be said?

Well, perhaps just a little more. Namely, that we would stress a difference which should be apparent between the "conservatism" of an extremely wealthy (arne't they all?) and educated editor of the "National Review" and the conservatism of "negation" which is too often in evidence on the campuses of southern universities.

Conservative Buckley may not like the "New Frontier," but he apparently has the presence of mind to refrain from bleating about it. Rather, he has ideas of his own, or at least, of his own set, and it is with these ideas that he will confront his critics.

This may seem, initially, inconsequential, or at least inconsequential in so far as we presuppose that all political figures have ideas of their own, and that it is with these ideas that they approach opposition. But to those of us who have repeatedly encountered conservatism as a mere "loud-lament" about the sorry state-of-affairs in which the "New Frontier" has placed the country, the fact that Buckley will speak instead of "crying" is hardly inconsequential.

We welcome to this campus, with open arms, a man of conservative convictions who rises above petty name-calling and negative lamentation.

We are tired of hearing everything left-of-the-American Legion being labeled as Communist and thereby summarily dismissed as unworthy of intelligent consideration. We are tired of seeing those who call themselves "conservative" put on shows that are worthy of the Mickey Mouse Club.

In essence, we are tired of seeing the conservative element on this campus permit a small, but vocal, group of weeping malcontents represent the causes and stands of a sometimes-valid political position.

Indeed, "conservatism" as it is too often presented on this campus fails to be a valid political "position" or "approach." It becomes, rather, a mere anti-liberal lament.

And in view of this sad situation, the presence of William F. Buckley should be a welcome relief—a source of encouragement—whether one claims agreement with his ideas or not. (CW)

Cover To Cover

Probably one of the most important intellectual events in the public sector to occur in the three years we have attended this University has been the birth and life of "Reflections" magazine. Perhaps one of the most pleasing occurrences of recent months is that Editor Brown has managed to get another (his fourth) issue published.

This "Reflections' 'is 64 pages of articles, fiction, poetry, drawings and sculpture—and possibly the world's most appealing advertising. There is much in the magazine which is pleasing, encouraging and exciting; and there is a little material which forces the reader to cry, "So what?"

From cover to cover, very briefly:

The cover itself—superb, marvelous use of color.

Size of the magazine—expanded in width, more readable.

Editorials — Brown and Leon Rooke on Mississippi, leadership and politics. These edits, shorter than in previous "Reflections" issues, are good and gutty, with no holds barred—but, in parts, a little superficial by the magazine's high standards. The brief "awards" are somewhat useless.

"Poverty and Possibility" by Herbert L. Matthews — Timely in the context of the Cuban crisis, but applicable to all the problems faced by the United States in Latin America. The article is an intelligent, important reminder of the unfinished business of democracy within the nations of Latin America.

"The Tragedy of Our German Policies" by retired Gen. Hugh Hester—A very interesting piece with vital information concerning misinformation on the Berlin problem and general American policy in Europe. Its primary limitation is the propagandistic language (such words as "war-mongering" and "honey-combed with Nazis" appear several times in condemning Western propoganda.

There are two short stories, both excellent, by Leon Rooke and Ralph Dennis. The stories are probably this issue's best feature. The Dennis story continues the saga of his sad, fat, word man. There are also eight pieces of poetry and a series of pictures of Edward Higgins' welded sculpture.

In all, this issue follows its predecessors in offering dual visual and mental benefits.

But, to harp on an old point, the best aspect of "Reflections" publication is its publication. It is encouraging and pleasing by its very presence. (JC)

SSL Bills Inconsistent

To the Editors,

Is it not strange that the SSL decided that capital punishment should be abolished (ostensibly because man does not have the right to take the life of another human being—this being the usual argument) and in the same breath saw fit to affix circumstances whereby a single man could do this—legally? This seems to me to be an outstanding inconsistency in thought here.

The students achieved further absurdity by the conditions they established, only one of which (No. 4—when the pregnancy threatens the mother's life), in my mind, even approaches justification of abortion. The first condition by which a doctor could legally perform an abortion if "convinced" that the baby would be deformed, is not far removed from the similar practice of the ancient Spartans, who at least waited to be sure that the baby would be deformed before 'hey put it to death.

Suddenly Huxley's Brave New World does not seem so far-fetched after all. Do the students who represented UNC really feel that an unborn baby should be deprived of his life because of a misfortune suffered by the mother? (A silly question—obviously they do.) And since when can a mother of unsound mind not bear a healthy child? Either there is an error in my thinking (in which case I wish someone would please enlighten me) or the SSL has been guilty of some rash acts. How about it, delegates?

Faculty Ruling Discriminatory

To the Editors,

It has been said that there are two sides to every issue. With that maxim in mind let's study the recent Student-Faculty Committee ruling on bull-pledges and inactives. They have decided that being disaffiliated should mean specifically that bull-pledges and inactives cannot so much as enter their fraternity house nor attend any social functions, open or closed.

There are those who feel that this is a positive step in the right direction and that it should be commended. Perhaps such a harsh move is necessary to point out to these students just what their purpose at Carolina is and perhaps nothing else could have as moving an effect. Besides being a type of guidance for the bull-pledges and inactives, the ruling also serves as a protectorate for the fraternities themselves. Many are the inactives who enjoy knowing that they do not have to attend chapter meetings or have other obligations to the house yet can still receive all the benefits thereof. These students are in essence mooching off their friends who in turn must take upon themselves all the obligations and expenses for both themselves and their disaffiliates. Under this light it appears that the committee came up with a basically sound and competent decision.

However let's look at the other side of the picture. There are cries of "Persecution" on many sides of the campus. Elsewhere the Negroes and the Jews are persecuted, yet here at Carolina it is the fraternity man who must keep a constant vigil, not towards the Ku Klux Klan or towards the S-S Trooper, but towards South Building.

When the Beat Duke parade was reviewed, who got kicked? The fraternity system. It is true that fraternities produced more unacceptable floats than did the dormitories; however when one considers the higher participation rate of fraternities this is a seemingly natural result.

Dorms were censured also, but it was the fraternity system that was lambasted. Is the faculty unaware of certain happenings in the dormitories? Don't they know that on occasion girls have been known to spend the evenings behind the locked doors of dorm rooms? Perhaps this is perfectly alright since there is no curfew rule imposed in the dorms just as there is no rule that says a student must leave a certain dorm if he does not maintain a "C" average or cannot attend his dorm's social functions for the same reason.

How does the faculty propose to enforce such an autocratic ruling? Must the IFC post armed guards at all entrances to fraternity houses and parties with mug-shots of each disaffiliate to prevent their entrance? Has the faculty considered the possibility that ATO disaffiliates could easily attend a Zete party and vice-versa? More important, has the faculty forgotten that each student has certain unalienable rights . . .?

It would appear that South Building has acquired one trait usually assigned to the fraternity system—discrimination.

Does the faculty realize that total strangers, regardless of their Q.P. average, may come to the fraternity parties while inactives can hardly peek through the windows?

It appears strange that only those students who were so unfortunate as to have pledged a fraternity are the ones to be discriminated for not maintaining a "C" average. When will the faculty decree that no fraternity man possessing less than a "C" average may dine in Lenoir Hall?

Who makes certain that no dorm intramural team has members with less than "C" average?

In the past each fraternity had the final voice in selecting their members, but now this right must be shared with the institution referred to as South Building. Are we not now even more selective? Does the faculty not realize that right now no disaffiliate can eat meals at the house? That he can visit only occasionally? That he cannot attend sorority mixers? That he cannot participate in intramurals? That he cannot engage in his chapter's business matters and decisions? Does the faculty intend to take away every right he possesses? It is not so preposterous to ask "may we speak to our disaffiliates in Y-court or sit next to them in class? Can we attend church with them? If they are seemingly so unfit that they shouldn't be allowed to visit the fraternity house, would it be proper to take them home to meet the folks?

In conclusion it is evident that a certain minority of students have been denied their right to visit their friends when and where they so choose.

Does the faculty actually think that this ruling is an effective solution or do they somehow "subconsciously" realize that this is simply one more step towards the total banishment of fraternities from Carolina and the liberal community of Chapel Hill???

Far Left And Right Condemned

To the Editors,

As this seems to be the time of year during which various societies of evidently extreme deviant character show signs of great activity on this campus, I somewhat question their purposes, and even more their means of achievement of these purposes. I am especially referring to the New Left Club, its elite, the Progressive Labor Club, and its antithesis, the Young Americans for Freedom. The New Left, according to the opinions of several of its ardent members, is theoretically seeking the establishment of Social Democracy in the U.S., a principle which is dear to many Americans, and is the obvious trend in American politics today; yet the New Left, by its association with various other organs and personalities, definitely, and beyond any doubt, shows pro-Soviet leanings, a characteristic which has slowed down the movement for Social Democrcy more so in this country than in any other nation in the Western community of nations. Others within this area, such as the United Kingdom and Italy, have Social Democratic parties, which, not desiring Communist co-operation, have made great strides in the establishment of true democracy. But when the New Left comes out with pro-Castro propaganda leaflets in time of government crises, then certainly people who have any respect for any aspect of American life, are almost forced into the conservative fold by no real choice of their own. Thus, by such activities as the New Left has been occupied with of late, the club has actually been working against its proposed principles, and having done so, has actually done harm to the cause of Social Democracy. The ideas of the Progressive Labor Club are evident; it has no sympathy for Western Socialism or liberalism, and prefers the crude ideas of Lenin.

As for the other end of the pole, the Young Americans for Freedom, there too exist numerous contradictions. The organization claims to be pro-American, but with its Birch-Goldwater-McCarthy type thinking, has certainly hurt not only its own cause of conservatism, but has in the process of its evolvement turned away from the cause of democracy, and has instead turned to the emotional outbreaks of various fanatics, including Mr. Rockwell of Arlington, Virginia, who reminds one of a certain character of several decades ago, namely Adolf Schickelgruber. I am nevertheless sure that most sane people will turn away from these fruitless organizations which I have here mentioned, and if they have not done so yet, then I urge them to do so, for it will only do them harm in their future careers and lives. If you are a Socialist, then turn to one of the existing parties of this country, and help shape it your way; and if you happen to be a conservative, restrain yourself from Fascism and attempt to achieve your goals within democratic organizations.

Otelia Real –And Youthful

To the Editors,

I was eating alone in Lenoir all last Sunday afternoon when an elderly lady approached my table and asked if she might sit with me. I, of course, consented and she introduced herself as Otelia Connor. The name sounded familiar, but I did not immediately realize with whom I was having the pleasure of eating. However, during the course of our conversation, I remembered seeing articles in the DTH signed by that name and I asked if she were the author. She said that she was and seemed pleased that I had read her articles.

I have found that very few students, especially freshmen, know anything about Otelia Connor. Many, myself previously included, thought "Otelia Connor" to be a pseudonym used by a DTH editorialist who wished to remain anonymous. To those persons who are laboring under this misconception, Mrs. Connor is in fact a delightful individual. She is a widow and has two married children. She told me that she thought that children had lives of their own to live and should be allowed to do so without the interference of parents. Mrs. Connor informed me that she came to Chapel Hill in order to live in an intellectual atmosphere and at least partially escape the world of "bridge parties and garden clubs."

I used the word "elderly" most hesitantly in reference to Mrs. Connor, for, if youth is an attribute of the spirit, Otelia Connor could not possibly be more than thirty-five. There are very few individuals around, but it was my pleasure to have lunch with one today.

Major Threat To UNC Seen

To the Editors:

Last Spring two seniors who obviously loved this place wrote articles for the Tar Heel on the meaning of the University. It may well be to add a midyear footnote to those articles, however ironically the footnote may contrast with the spirit of the original articles.

There has arisen a threat to this campus in recent years and it is fast approaching a climax. Any honest analysis of it must penetrate beyond consideration of "weejuns," "sharpness," and the Duke parade. The threat involves the whole University. It is best seen in the perspective of the University idea. This idea involves a community of scholars searching earnestly for the truth, ever maintaining intellectual concern and personal integrity in that search. Yet, at UNC the posture of the student is the antithesis of this concern. Casualness is the goal. This is exemplified in the spectator stance of casual clothes, casual feelings toward courses, casual relations with other students, and a casual refusal to become actively involved. There results an intellectual lethargy in meeting academic requirements of the University. In interpersonal relations there is not only a lack of any real warmth or affection, but there is in its place an affected friendliness that approaches manipulation. Most dangerous of all is the general flouting of anything that purports to be honorable and meaningful.

This casual posture has the potential of becoming a malicious force that may bring the ruin of UNC as a university. True, this general quality is ubiquitous in the outside world, caused as it may be by the World Wars, the potential of nuclear war, and the inordinate misuse of freedom that result from affluence. This is no reason, however, that it cannot be met here at UNC. How met? The answer is not clear. Certainly the threat should be met directly and acknowledged realistically. Beyond that, there must be reliance on certain qualities inherent and potentially forceful in the individual student, such as integrity, courage, verility, and a serious concern for searching out and fighting out a real kind of truth.

GOP Gains In South--Golden

Mr. John Tower, Republican Senator from Texas, made a post-election statement on television. The Republican gains in the South, he said, not only showed the emergence of a two-party system, but revealed a definite swing to the conservatives.

I subscribe to the first view but hardly to the second.

The two-party South is already here; the result of two basic factors; the intense industrialization of the South, and the assurance by the Republican candidates that they can be relied upon to maintain the system of racial solidarity. There is no question about this. No one can say Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Texas are solid Democratic states, any more than they can say Virginia, Oklahoma, Kentucky, and Tennessee are.

* * *

But whether the folks voted for "the conservatives" is open to question. As a matter of fact Senator Tower himself serves in the United States Senate because he has received the support of most of the Texas liberals. Where Mr. Tower is openly, and with considerable pride, to the right of Barry Goldwater, his Democratic opponent, William Blakely, was openly, and with equal pride, to the right of Strom Thurmond. Indeed Mr. Tower's supporters secretly intimated to the Texas trade-unionists that if they voted for the arch-conservative Blakely, they'd be stuck with him for life, whereas a vote for the less-secure Republican would give them a better chance of getting a liberal Senator some day.

In two Congressional races in North Carolina, the Republicans probably won because they were less conservative than their Democratic opponents. This does not mean they were endorsed by Democrats but these two Republicans won House seats because they picked up most of the organized labor and some of the Negro votes in their respective districts. Charles Raper Jonas returned to the House for a sixth term as Republican representative from North Carolina's 8th district. It is no injustice to him to say that Mr. Jonas is considerably to the right of Dwight D. Eisenhower. His defeated Democratic opponent, Paul Kitchin, however, was to the right of John C. Calhoun. Both men were incumbents, running against each other, because North Carolina lost a House seat in the 1960 census redistricting.

In the 9th district, Republican James Broyhill defeated Democrat Hugh Alexander who was in close competition to see if he could be even more conservative than Mr. Kitchin. Republicans and Democrats knew they would split the conservative vote. The election depended upon who could swing the vote of the textile unions, the Negroes, and the supporters of social legislation.

* * *

The Republican candidates won most of these votes for the same reason Senator Tower did: because, as Republicans, their position is yet a little shakier in the South than their Democratic opponents who once elected, serve forever.

One has to remember, too, that the chief Republican winners, Rockefeller in New York, Romney in Michigan, and Scranton in Pennsylvania all talked about jobs, security, and "immediate help for the unemployed." I listened to a speech by Republican Romney of Michigan. I shut my eyes and for a moment he sounded for all the world like Henry A. Wallace, in his third party race for President in 1948.

Senator John Tower of Texas may think there's a Barry Goldwater Renaissance going on, the voters apparently don't.

Foreign Student Visits Capital

"It looks like a European capital because of the parks and avenues," a foreign student here said about Washington, D. C.
Antonio Munoz was one of the five foreign students studying in the United States who were chosen to represent their respective countries at Foreign Student Day in Washington, D. C. last Tuesday. He not only represented Spain but all of Europe.
These five students from Japan, Argentina, Iran and Ghana joined other foreign students studying in Washington to celebrate the annual event sponsored by the Foreign Students Service Council.
The highlight of the day was an address by President Kennedy in which he emphasized the responsibility of foreign students as ambassadors of their respective countries.
Munoz, a Business Administration major, was a Fulbright scholar during his first year in graduate school here.

Piano Recital Slated Today

Dr. William S. Newman of the Music Dept. calls it his "pet."
Music majors call it "one of their favorites."
What are they talking about? "Original Music for Two Pianos."
This petite Musicale presentation of Graham Memorial featuring the twin piano recital will be presented tonight at 9 in Hill Music Hall.
Five of Carolina's most talented pianists will present selections by Clementi ("Sonata in B-flat"), Debussy ("En Blanc et Noir") and Brahms ("Variations on a Theme by Haydn").
Those students who will be performing include Sue Wallace, Lynn Duval, Harriet Herring, Tom Glymph, Bill Flicker and William Robinson.
Dr. Newman, co-ordinator for this GM presentation, invites everyone to enjoy a Sunday night of music.
The concert is free and ID cards are not required.

Faculty Pay Raises Said Likely

Faculty members of colleges and universities in North Carolina may get a substantial pay raise in 1963. The state's proposed new budget, which was completed last week, calls for increased salaries for college and faculty members.
Consolidated University President William C. Friday had asked the advisory budget commission for almost $5 million for faculty increases at the three branches of the University. Presidents of the other state operated institutions followed much the same line.
Hugh Cannon, state director of administration, said the summary sheets his department will prepare for the legislature should be finished by Christmas.
The total amount of the state budget for the next biennium will not be released until Gov. Sanford presents it to the legislature.

Tar Heels Pressed Hard To Beat Birds, 75-65

Soccer Team Looks Ahead To Promising '63 Season

By MARTIN KRUMING

Throughout the world from Spain to Hawaii soccer is one of the leading spectator sports. At Carolina this fast moving, highly competitive game takes a back seat to football, basketball, and baseball.

This fall head Coach Marvin Allen guided the Tar Heels to an 8-2 record and a second place finish in the Atlantic Coast Conference. The only losses were to perennial champion Maryland, 7-0, and Eastern powerhouse Navy, 4-0. The Terrapins, representing the South in the NCAA championship playoffs, breezed past Pittsburgh and Springfield before bowing to St. Louis, 4-3, in the finals. In that final game Maryland was leading, 3-2, at halftime.

The highlight of the campaign was the victory over Duke, 1-0. Realizing the offensive might of the Blue Devils, and having been crushed by Maryland only four days before, Carolina needed this game to close out its best season since 1959. That year UNC was 9-1.

Led by co-captains Charlie Battle and Peter Blake, 1963 should be an exciting one for the Tar Heels. Both Maryland and Duke invade Fetzer Field.

Battle, an English major from Miami, has been a starter at right fullback for two seasons. His best games this fall were against Duke and Maryland. Blake, a native of Rumson, N. J., was all-ACC right wing in 1961. Both players are Morehead scholars.

Missing from this fall's starting forward line will be co-captain Bob Kemper at left wing, high scoring center forward Jimmy Reston and "Flying Dutchman" Herman Prakke at right inside.

Only co-captain Bill Snyder at center fullback is missing in the backfield.

The freshman squad, whose 7-0 slate was the first undefeated one since soccer was established at Carolina in 1946, produced some outstanding players.

"He did as much for the team as anybody and showed a lot of potential," said Coach Bob DeVoogt of his co-captain and right halfback, Danny Galves.

Drew Murphy, the leading Tar Baby scorer with 12 goals and 7 assists should be of tremendous help to the varsity at center forward next season. "He passes beautifully and his head won two or three games for us," commented DeVoogt.

DeVoogt also singled out his starting left wing, Mac Skelly. With seven goals to his credit, Skelly was praised as being able to play any position on the forward line.

The squad's best game was against Warren Wilson Junior College, a team which had not lost a contest in three years. "I had my doubts about this one but the boys came through beautifully," said DeVoogt.

"The players worked hard for me and came from behind in four of the seven ball games," DeVoogt remarked. "Each time a goal was scored against them the team would huddle in the center of the field and rise to the occasion."

DeVoogt, in his first year of coaching, is a graduate of Brockport State Teachers' College, near Rochester, N. Y. Brockport was number one nationally in 1955 and has been in the top ten each year since then. DeVoogt was a member of the all New York State soccer team in 1961 and was offered a contract to play in Canada.

"My one aim is to coach in college," he said.

The personable coach is quite a psychologist. At the beginning of the season he announced that he would wear the same shirt and Tar Heel suit each game until the team was defeated, and promised that the players could throw him in the shower if they went undefeated. So when the bus returned with a 4-1 win over Duke, DeVoogt was hoisted on the players' shoulders and dumped into the swimming pool during the middle of varsity practice. Head swimming coach Pat Earey was speechless.

Swimmers Crush Roosters 59-32 For Fifth Win

By JOEL BULKLEY

Carolina's varsity swimmers continued their winning ways yesterday, registering a 59-32 triumph over an under-manned University of South Carolina team for their fifth straight victory of the year.

The Blue Dolphins scored first places in all but two of the day's 11 events as they copped their second win in as many days. Friday night they topped the Clemson varsity, 65-29, taking all but one of the first-place honors.

Since there was no opposition the relay team of Jim Huffman, Harry Schiffman, Tate Kemper and Harry Mummaw won the 400-yard medley event to begin the afternoon. Barry King, who took first in Friday's individual medley race, added a first in the 200-yard freestyle race yesterday, with Chip Smith taking third.

Howard Cone scored first in the 50-yard freestyle with Dick Woodrow third. Woodrow finished first in the 100-yard freestyle. Captain Willie Bloom won the 200 individual medley; Larry Roberts captured the butterfly event; and Thompson Mann and Joe Huffman finished first and second in the backstroke.

Thad Adams and Mike Bissell were one-two in the 20-lap freestyle event while Earl Bradford won the breaststroke event.

Al Biggs and the freestyle relay team of Hulings, Evans, McDaniel and Fitzpatrick were the only victors for the visitors from USC. Biggs was the only entry in the diving competition.

In Friday's meet against Clemson, the Tar Heels swept first places in all but the butterfly event.

Coach Pat Earey commented yesterday that "the team was coming along especially well and looks better time-wise at this stage of the season than any other I have seen here." He added that he was happy that he had been able to give all his swimmers a chance in the past few meets.

The varsity travels to Durham Wednesday afternoon for a meet with the Duke Blue Devils.

WESLEY FOUNDATION

The Wesley Foundation will meet tonight at 6:30 in the basement of the University Methodist Church.

Bill Cunningham Tops UNC Scorers With 18 Markers

COLUMBIA, S. C.—North Carolina, betrayed by its shooting eyes all night long, finally had to rely on fast break lay-ups and free throws in the last five minutes last night to edge stubborn South Carolina, 75-65.

The Tar Heels, scratched, mauled and shaken by USC's supposedly hapless Gamecocks, held only a slim 60-56 lead at the 15:35 mark of the second period before they could get going.

Then the dam burst. Charlie Shaffer started things off for UNC with two fould shots. Larry Brown then stole a pass from the Gamecock's Scotti Ward and went in for a three-point play. This put the Tar Heels up by nine at 65-56.

Shaffer then applied the finishing touches as he raced down on the lead end of two more fast breaks which gave UNC an unsurmountable 69-56 margin.

Ward and Ronnie Collins, the only returning veterans for new coach Chuck Noe's South Carolina club, had kept the Gamecocks in contention up to those last five minutes.

Colins, who was high point man for the night with 22, brought South Carolina from a 46-55 defiit midway through the final period with some deadly shooting.

The USC cause was furthered by Ward's fine floor play. The 6-2 guard contributed 17 points before fouling out just before UNC's closing streak.

Carolina was also hampered by foul trouble.

Billy Cunningham, on whose shoulders may rest the fate of the Tar Heels, was eliminated on infractions with about eight minutes remaining in the game.

Before he left, however, the big Brooklyn Jumping Jack had scored 18 big points—by far his best production to date.

Ray Respess, the 'Heels' other highly-regarded rookie, also came up with a fine game—both point and rebound-wise.

Respess scored 14 and, with Shaffer and Billy Galantai, continually came down with important rebounds while Cunning was on the bench.

UNC's troubles with is pesky rival started early.

South Carolina gave the Tar Heels all kinds of trouble in the first half.

From an early deadlock, Larry Brown drove for a three-point play which gave UNC a 7-4 lead.

Carolina then started to apply the pressure, largely due to the efforts of its two fine starting sophomores, Cunningham and Respess.

Cunningham hit a foul shot, Respess threw in two long jumpers, and Cunningham came right back with a tap-in to boost his team's lead to 16-11.

Charlie Shaffer drove to a basket for a seven-point lead, but then the Gamecocks started to roll with Ronnie Collins leading the way.

Collins proceeded to hit five straight points on a rebound and a drive sandwiched around a free throw.

Mike Cooke and Respess then threw in back to back jumpers, but two foul shots from Jimmy Collins and two fast-break buckets by Ronnie Collins tied the score at 22.

That's the way they went to the end of the half, when Ward canned a long jumper with two seconds remaining to deadlock the game at 31.

SCORING:

North Carolina (75) Shaffer 12, Respess 14, Cuningham 18, Brown, 12, Poteet 14, Cooke 4, Galantai, 1, Krause 0.

South Carolina (65) R. Collins, 22, Yarborough 10, Gorsage 5, J. Collins 11, Ward 17, Haney 0, Lucanski 0.

Baltimore Whips Redskins 34-21 On Late Passes

BALTIMORE (UPI)—The Baltimore Colts, sparked by the touchdown passing of Johnny Unitas, exploded for three scores in the final period Saturday to beat the Washington Redskins 34-21 in a see-saw Memorial Stadium battle witnessed by 56,964.

The inter-division National Football League game was a duel between master passers Unitas and Washington's Norm Snead, with all the touchdowns but one scored via the air.

Unitas, recapturing the form that made him an all-pro and playing perhaps his best game of the season, threw for four touchdowns and set up another with a 22-yard run. He also established a new completion record for himself, hitting on 25 of 36 passes for a total of 367 yards.

Snead, in only his second year with the NFL, passed for three touchdowns and kept pace with Unitas until the Colts' big last quarter. Snead's record for the day was 18 out of 33 for a total of 351 yards.

Nugent Named North Coach For Annual Blue-Gray Game

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — Maryland head Coach Tom Nugent, the man who invented the "I" formation, will match wits with Nebraska's Robert Devaney here Dec. 29 in the silver anniversary performance of the Blue-Gray Bowl.

The two coaches were named to head the North and South squads Saturday and six players were chosen for the two teams. Picked to represent the South were halfback Jimmy Burson, 170 pounds, tackle Winky Giddens, 220, and center Jim Price, 220, all of Auburn.

Chosen for the North were Nebraska's halfbacks Warren Powers, 192, and Cennis Stuewe, 185, and guard Dwayne Carolson, 210.

The Blue-Gray Association also announced Charlie Bradshaw, who took over at Kentucky this year, would assist Nugent in coaching the Rebels and Robert Faurot, the split-T wizard from Missouri, would assist the Yanks. The other coaches are Hank Foldberg of Texas A & M for the Southerners and Bump Elliott of Michigan for the northern invaders.

The nationally televised and broadcast game usually is a wide-open affair where points are piled up like casualties at Gettysburg.

Oxford, UNC Teams Split In Debate

The Oxford University debate team debated the UNC Debate Squad before a near capacity crowd in Gerrard Hall yesterday afternoon on the topic: Resolved, "That it is the business of the government to give the people what they need, rather than what they want."

The cross-examination debate was in the form of a split team match with John B. W. McDonnell of Oxford and Bill Patterson of UNC speaking for the affirmative. William D. Madel of Oxford and Mack Armstrong of UNC spoke for the negative.

The affirmative, after stating that it interpreted the resolution as applying to a democratic form of government, went on to point out that one may readily determine what one wants, but what one needs is determined with regard to desired ends and available means.

The affirmative also pointed out that justice must be upheld with or without people wanting it.

The negative stated that one cannot restrict the argument only to democracy, because if the government does not give the people what it wants and remains in power, it is no longer a democracy.

The negative went on to say that in a democracy, when a great issue develops, such as British entrance into the Common Market, it should be for the people to decide whether or not they want it.

The affirmative, in rebuttal, said that a free government is in the hands of the people, but the government must take the initiative, and thus give the people what they need.

The introductory statements and analogies drawn by the British debators had the audience in near hysterics.

FIGHT—Anne Carson as young blind Helen Keller pulls Margaret Cathell (Ann Sullivan) her social worker friend across a table during rehearsals of the fight scene of the "Miracle Worker." The play, to be presented by the Petite Dramatique Friday through Monday at 8, in the round in Memorial Hall, will be free. All seats are reserved, and free passes may be picked up at the GM Information Desk.

Buckley Says US Power Held Down By Liberals

William F. Buckley

William Buckley told a Memorial Hall crowd of 900 last night that the power of America is being "held down by the Lilliputian hands of American liberalism."

Buckley blamed this on the disintegration of liberal understanding of the events of the contemporary world, and said that the conservative goal was to introduce reality to the Left and not escape it as liberals charge.

"Our mission," he said as spokesman of the RIGHT, "is to draw attention to the fact that the cold war is being lost. We know our leaders are not communists, but they have failed to grasp the fundamental logic of nuclear blackmail, and do not understand this logic enough to enforce a policy 140 years old—the Monroe doctine."

Change In Topic

Buckley was slated to speak on "freedom and the welfare state," but changed his topic to a relation of conservatism to present policies. In doing so, he unleased a biting attack on Norman Mailer as a literary spokesman for the left.

For Mailer, and the Left in general, he charged, the meaning of today's world lies in the loss of operative values. The conservative, he said, believes instead in the validity of certain non-personalized standards, and assumes that certain questions of value are closed.

The conservative assumption, he said, is that the survival of the Western culture is worth the supreme sacrifice. "The conservative," he said, "posses courage, humility, and a certain quiet pride in living under a small ray of light while the East lies clothed in impenetrable darkness."

"The conservative by no means assumes that we live in a perfect society," he said, but is prepared to fight to the death for the preservation of what is good within it."

"Surprise"

As he centered his attack on present foreign policy, Buckley said that the U. S. has been "surprised" in Cuba, Berlin and Laos, and that conservative attempts to explain why this has happend have been labeled as McCarthyism.

The Conservative committee tends to avoid this surprise, he said, because this committment makes it possible to take positive action.

Buckley pointed to Cuba and Berlin as evidence that America's two fundamental policies in foreign affairs—those of containment and the Monroe Doctrine—had been abdicat.

He called this abdication the type of eccentricity in foreign policy that is likely to lead to an "accidental war," and said it was the responsibility of President Kennedy to adhere to definite lines of policy that would prevent this eccentricity.

Conservative Fulton Lewis Talks Tonight

Fulton Lewis, III, former research director for the House Un-American Activities Committee, will speak here tonight on "The Future of American Conservatism."

Lewis is on the Board of National Directors of the Young Americans for Freedom. His speech is sponsored by the local chapter of the YAF.

"Last week was the left wing's week. This week is ours," Sam Jones, president of YAF at Carolina said.

Lewis will speak in the Law School Court Room at 7:30 tonight. In the past two years he has lectured on conservatism in over a hundred colleges across the nation.

Last spring Lewis was here in a debate with Mike Harrington, liberal editor of the "Catholic World," on the film "Operation Abolition" which Lewis narrated.

Lewis is also a contributor to the "National Review." He is 26 years old, and a graduate of the University of Virginia where he was a Kappa Sigma.

"We believe it would be advantageous for Carolina students to hear something from one of conservatism's leaders," Mike Jaffe, vice-chairman of YAF said.

"We hope his appearance here will attract students to YAF where they can do something to put their conservative beliefs into action."

Guevara Discloses Castro Planned To Loose Russian Nuclear Arms At New York

NEW YORK (UPI) — Ernesto Che Guevara, international communism's "man in Havana," was disclosed Monday to have told a Communist reporter that Fidel Castro had planned nuclear attacks on key U. S. cities, including New York.

In an exclusive interview with the European Communist correspondent in Havana earlier this month, Guevara said "if the rockets had remained, we would have used them all and directed them against the very heart of the United States, including New York, in our defense against aggression."

Guevara did not disclose any other Cuban target cities except New York City.

Two weeks before the interview with Guevara, Cuba's economics czar, the Russians had withdrawn 42 nuclear missiles from Cuba.

Communist publications in Europe which used the Guevara interview suppressed the blunt confession, presumably because it conflicted with Moscow's current "coexistence" policy line.

UPI's textual transcript of the Guevara interview showed careful deletions in European Communist publications of the following politically-embarrassing points:

—The Cuban plan for a merciless nuclear attack on the U. S. to stave off "aggression."

—Cuban advocacy and support of Communist armed intervention in Latin America.

—The Cuban belief the Kennedy-Khrushchev agreement did not assure Carribbean peace and only averted a confrontation of the two world powers "so far."

—The Cuban "contribution" to the spread of international communism in Latin America.

—Cuban belief that "armed struggle" is the only "solution" to Latin American problems.

Womens Peace Gp. Will Picket HUAC

The national president of Women's Strike for Peace told the DTH by phone yesterday that the group will hold a demonstration in Washington, where the House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC) is questioning some of its members.

The House committee has subpeonaed seven members of the national organization, which demonstrates against nuclear war, to appear before it in connection with alleged infiltration by Communists.

Dagmar Wilson, head of the group, will go before HUAC Thursday. She said the group will have a demonstration in Washington "not against the committee, but for peace."

The group plans a "counter-hearing" just before the HUAC hearings begin. The counter-hearing, Mrs. Wilson said, is on the topic, "Is Peace Un-American?"

Subpeonaed From 3 States

Members of the organization have been subpeonaed from Washington, New York and Connecticutt. There is no Women Strike For Peace in Chape lHill, but there is a recently-formed Students for Peace group.

Several members of that group and other UNC students have written letters to HUAC, protesting the calling of Women Strike for Peace members.

Mrs. Wilson said many members of her group were volunteering to testify before the committee. "There are women flying in from all over the nation to testify," she said. "They're going to get much more than they bargained for, when they asked women to come before the committee."

Women Visitors In Male Rooms Di-Phi Topic

A resolution advocating the opening of all men's dormitory rooms to female guests during specified hours will be debated by the Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society tonight at 7:30 in New West.

The resolution reads:

WHEREAS: There is a critical need for increased social facilities on the campus of the University of North Carolina, and

WHEREAS: This need is particularly acute among dormitory residents, and

WHEREAS: Allowing men to have the use of dormitory rooms for private parties with mixed company will do much to alleviate the poor social conditions at the University, and

WHEREAS: The idea of permitting men to have female guests in their dormitory rooms at designated hours has proven highly successful and feasible at many other colleges and universities,

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE DIALECTIC AND PHILANTHROPIC LITERARY SOCIETY THAT:

Article I. The Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society condemns the existing lack of social facilities on this campus and urges the administration to allow men's dormitories to have visiting hours throughout the week and on weekends, during which times women will be allowed to visit men's rooms, and that steps be taken immediately by the proper authorities to achieve this goal.

ARTICLE II. Copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the Student Body, the Student Legislature, the Chancellor of the University, the editors of the DTH, the Inter-Dormitory Council, and the Student and University Parties.

ARTICLE III. The Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society urges other campus organizations to pass similar supporting resolutions.

The resolution was introduced by Charles Neely. All interested students may attend the debate.

Student Party Will Consider Resolution

Student Party will consider a resolution tonight concerning the "bad check bill," announce several legislative vacancies, and hear proposals to amend the party by-laws.

The meeting will be held at 7:30 in Howell Hall.

The resolution concerns the bill introduced last week in Student Legislature establishing the passing of bad checks as an honor offense. According to the bill, a student upon conviction by the Honor Council for "passing a 'bad check' of more than $25 or upon conviction of repeatedly passing 'bad checks' in a school year" would receive "as minimum penalty a council reprimand, and as maximum penalty indefinite or definite probation."

Christmas Dinner Scarce In Village

By PAUL COOLER

"When the boys go, we go," says Pete Spero Dorton, owner of the Goody Shop. And this about sums it up for Harry's, the N. C. Cafeteria, Carolina Coffee Shop, and the Zoom - Zoom during the Christmas holidays.

If you plan to eat in downtown Chapel Hill during the Christmas holidays, you'll have to look around.

"Harry's will be closed to give us a good long rest," says Mrs. Harry Macklin, "since we cater almost entirely to college students."

The N. C. Cafeteria follows the school schedule, says the owner, so closely that the Cafeteria closes after summer school and reopens with the first of registration.

The Carolina Coffee Shop and Byron's will be closed to give the workers a much-needed vacation, since Byron's is open 24 hours a day, says Byron Freeman.

A Few Stay Open

"And we get the rest," says Max Yarborough of the College Cafe, when most of the students go home and many of the other eating-places close. "We get a few fraternity boys, students who live too far away to go home, foreign students, and some chem students. You know, some of those chem students are so dedicated they never leave," he says.

You may also celebrate the holidays at the Rathskeller. It will celebrate this New Year's with wine, says the manager. The Rathskeller is planning to have many visitors from Durham and Raleigh to help them celebrate — so many, in fact, that they expect a normal business.

The Village Cafeteria will also be open. The owner says it would not be fair to the customers to close during the holidays.

The Porthole will be open except for Dec. 24, 25, and 26. And with decorations this year, says M. M. Timmons, the owner. Last Christmas, Mr. Timmons' wife didn't like the decorations he put up, so she made him take them down and he never got a chance to put up any more.

Goodies

If you're planning to set a festive table in Chapel Hill, red and green loaf bread or any other type bread, cookie or cake made to your exact specifications can be yours. "If we can't decorate it to suit you, we'll hand you the tube and let you do it," says Mrs. Shelbey Huitt of Thell's Bakery. Breads and pastries ranging from party sandwiches to fruit cakes will flow from the tiny shop during the holiday season. "This is the best place I have ever worked, especially during Christmas and the other holidays," said Mrs. Huitt with a gleam in her eye.

FACULTY NEWS:

Artist, Psychiatrist Cited

3 RECEIVE HONORS

Two UNC members of the Department of Art and a member of the UNC Department of Psychiatry were recognized for their leadership and talents in art at meetings in Raleigh this week.

Dr. Joseph C. Sloane, professor and chairman of the Department of Art and director of the Ackland Memorial Art Center, was one of five North Carolinians honored for his distinguished service to art in the State by Associated Artists of North Carolina.

Robert A. Howard, associate professor of art, was one of five receiving $100 awards in the 1962 N. C. Artists Exhibition for a painted steel sculpture titled "Landscape XIII." The exhibition awards were announced by the N. C. State Art Society. Prof. Howard is a previous award winner of this annual exhibition.

Miss Ruth Faison Shaw, training consultant in the art of Fingerpainting in the UNC Department of Psychiatry of the School of Medicine, was cited by the State Art Society for her outstanding contributions to the visual arts in North Carolina for her work in using her techniques in psychotherapy.

RESEARCH GRANT

Prof. R. C. Bose of UNC's Statistical Department has just been awarded an $81,124 grant for continued research on a mathematical theory that may someday enable engineers to design computers which can "think for themselves."

The grant, awarded by the United States Air Force Office of Aerospace Research, will enable the UNC Department of Statistics to undertake research in the Statistical and Mathematical Theory of Communication and Automata.

Prof Bose and his associates will be working with the theory of finite fields, finite geometries, combinatorial analysis, abstract algebra and mathematical logic.

HISTORY BRIEFS PUBLISHED

Frank W. Kingberg, professor of history, is the editor of a new paperback volume containing documents of American history ranging from the reconstruction era up through President Kennedy's March 2, 1962 announcement of America's plans to resume nuclear testing.

Entitled "A History of the United States from 1865 to the Present," the compendium has been published for Meridian Books by the World Publishing Company of Cleveland and New York. The book is one of the multivolume Meridian Documents of American History of which George F. Scheer of Chapel Hill is the editor.

FACULTY ASSIGNMENTS

New Administrative assignments of two senior faculty members of the Department of Public Health Administration of the School of Public Health were announced recently by Dr. E. G. McGavran, Dean of the School.

Dr. R. E. Coker Jr., Professor of Public Health Administration, has been named as head of the Department succeeding Dr. John J. Wright, Professor and Head, who will serve as director of a recently established Continued Education Service, Dr. McGavran said.

Dr. Wright, who has been Departmental Chairman since 1947, will continue in the Department as Professor of Public Health Administration while serving as the director of a continued education service which will provide short courses and educational experiences for public health physicians and other health personnel throughout the southeastern United States.

This activity is financed by a grant in excess of $300,000 made to the department by the U. S. Public Health Service.

COE ELECTED

Joffre L. Coe, associate professor of anthropology and director of the Research Laboratories of Anthropology at the University of North Carolina, was re-elected president of the Eastern States Archeological Federation at its recent meeting in Athens, Ga.

Faculty Pay Hikes... Necessarily, Hopefully

Without skirting the endless debate, and while stating only the obvious, we would nevertheless like to applaud any action which the Advisory Budget Committee undertook to insure substantial pay raises for university faculty members.

The South continues to suffer from rapidly expanding student bodies and rapidly disappearing professional resources. It seems that everyone would like to pay teachers more, but would not like to do anything that makes more pay available.

However, North Carolina is rolling out of the rut. There has been and continues to be legislative concern for increasing college faculty salaries. And with the concern comes eventual commendable action.

Indeed, if the state is earnestly considering any expansion or improvement of the present system, it had certainly better consider the necessity for faculty pay hikes; not just pay hikes to give those now teaching what they've long been due, but pay hikes which will encourage present students to give consideration to the teaching prospects in a state widely known for both its fine universities and its low salaries.

Almost miraculously, North Carolina has been able to attract some of the nation's top teaching talent to its colleges and universities. But this is no growing trend, and there is no assurance that we will continue to do so or that we will retain those who are new here.

We must not, in the excitement of expanding physical facilities, overlook the necessity and value of filling those new buildings with highly qualified teaching talent. This demand is never forgotten by chancellors and presidents, and hopefully it will never be overlooked by the legislature. For they must give the chancellors and presidents fiscal resources with which to supply sought after talent . . . hopefully. (CW)

The Freedom Wailers

We would take issue with those students who raise their united wail over the supposed implications of the administration's action on the "Beat Duke" episode.

We do not think that the administration chooses to get involved in every pettey little students affair. Indeed, they would rest easier, no doubt, if students could manage their own affairs. There are innumerable headaches that stem from the regular day-to-day chores of university administration, and they need not be supplemented with special student irregularities, at least not with those organized annual affairs.

Granted, the matter belongs in the hands of the sponsoring student organization, but in past years, "sponsoring" student organizations have not always been "responsible" student organizations. And that is why we have administrative control of matters involving student tastes; we just can't seem to legislate our own affairs.

Certainly, the students have responded to the need for sharp censorship. But the response came, we must not forget, as a result of insufficient student responsibility prior to the event; and even to a larger extent, the response has come as a reaction to the involvement of the administration, rather than as a response to the actual need for extensive censorship of an out-of-control display.

Indeed, we doubt seriously that the student legislature would have ever concerned itself with the affair, had not the administration stepped in to clean up some things. This is evidenced by the very nature of the legislature's bill, which speaks out for that sacred student right of self-government—that essential privilege, freedom.

Student self-government is a wonderful conecept. But we must readily admit that the realization of that concept has not always been a wonderful event. Perhaps we should stop screaming for "freedom," and endeavor to earn "responsibility." (CW)

Education

Adulthood brings many obligations. Not the least of these is the obligation to break into intermittent paroxysms of silliness.

In later life the paroxysms take form in Odd Fellows meetings, Shriners parades, and business conventions.

At the collegiate stage of adulthood, students practice up for Adult Silliness with such efforts as — (1) groups of students being forced to stand in front of Silent Sam screaming "Hail to Silent Sam, protector of all Carolina womanhood; (2) pledges being sent up to the darkest recesses of second floor, Graham Memorial to ask for signatures on little pieces of paper; (3) initiations, both big-time and little, complete with masks, gongs, and, similar rigamorole.

More power to these aspiring young adults. They are getting something out of college which will be useful in later life. (JC)

Letters To The Editors

On 'State College' And Pete Seeger

Lose Name– Individuality

To the Editors,

Knowing about the controversial issue raging over the proposed name change for certain colleges in North Carolina, in which different colleges would possess the name The University of North Carolina at . . . , I feel compelled to present to you a viewpoint which you may not have thought of before.

For many years the University of North Carolina has been known by the people of North Carolina and by the people of the South, if not of the United States, as a leader in the Liberal Arts field. The University has been building its reputation over the years, and has been recognized for certain accomplishments and achievements which only it can claim since these achievements belong to no other institution. In other words, no institution has a right to accept credit for the accomplishments of another, no matter how closely related. It is this that makes up the so-called "Traditions" and "Heritage" of a university and it is only right that each educational institution develop its own "Traditions" and "Heritage" so it can be proud of the name it has built for itself.

The name Carolina, or University of North Carolina, means many things to many different people, but all these meanings are associated with the institute of higher learning located in Chapel Hill. Who in North Carolina has not heard of The School of Mediine, The School of Pharmacy, The Institute of Government, The School of Business Administration, Kenan Stadium, The Arboretum, The Morehead Planetarium, Charlie "Choo-Choo" Justice, and who in the nation doesn't remember the basketball team that was first in the nation in 1957?

Now I ask a question for which I am unable to find an answer. Do the students, alumni, and faculty at the University of North Carolina want to share their good name, which they have been building over the last 167 years with other colleges and universities which have done nothing to further develop the fields of study for which the University of North Carolina has been so renown?

I cannot see how this could strengthen the state university system, which under different names for each institution, has already developed a closely knit friendship or union for the teaching of the youth of North Carolina and other states; but rather, the University, which once was only identified as that institution in Chapel Hill, would now be split into large and small colleges and universities all bearing the name that the school in Chapel Hill has borne for these many years. This is not fair to all concerned. I ask if the names are changed, as is proposed, how much individuality will there be among the different colleges and universities possessing the name The University of North Carolina?

Is this the way you want your name and all it connotes used: The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, The University of North Carolina at Raleigh, The University of North Carolina at Greensboro, The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, and The University of North Carolina at . . . , where the omitted world would be any town that had a college and enough political pull to get its college included in the university system? I ask, if this proposal is carried out, and it will be carried out unless immediate measures are taken to stop it, how much honor and prestige will go along with saying, "I go to the University of North Carolina"????

Students at Carolina ACT NOW, as those of us at North Carolina State have, by writing your parents, faculty, and other persons of authority in this matter before you lose forever what has been built and established for many generations.

How much does it mean for you to keep your individual identity?

Seeger Sings Propaganda

To the Editors,

Your editorial on Pete Seeger and his critics, as usual, skillfully circumvents the point.

You ask: "What does Pete Seeger's politics have to do with his performance? What are we talking about—politics or folk-singing?"

Obviously politics had everything to do with his performance because it was politics and not folk-singing. Seeger, not those who opposed his appearance here, made politics the issue.

Folk music is something which rises spontaneously from universal human experience and deals with the things that William Faulkner called the age - old verities of the human heart. It cannot deal with week-old half-truths of political dogma and still be a folk music.

The notion that Liberals somehow have a magical monopoly over folk music is a stupid and shallow one. Any group can use "folk music" for political purposes. The Nazis did.

Our rural American forebears, who created the genuine folk music of America, of course, have not the slightest relationship to the self-conscious manipulators of the Seeger stripe. (Imagine the spontaneous creation of a song called "Bourgeois Town".)

Folk artists who pervert their art to political purposes end up as mere masqueraders like Seeger. Or if they have talent enough to pull it off and an innocent enough approach (like Joan Baez) they survive but their image is tarnished.

Art mixed with the shallow purposes of politics is prostitution.

Conservatives: My, How Pseudo!

To the Editors:

Not all conservatives are "pseudo."

Of course one might easily get the impression they are. For while conservativism grows increasingly popular on this campus, it's interesting to note how liberal the conservatives become with their name-calling and label-pinning.

Any stable, level-headed image implied by the name conservative is betrayed by some wild (indeed wooly) thinking.

I am sick to death of people like Spencer Everett attacking groups like the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee as "left-wing, un-American causes" without telling me anything definite. We're all tired, I hope, of people equating socialism with Communism, implying both in a quite meaningless term, "liberalism."

If you know some facts, say them. But if you only know cliches, keep that misfortune to yourself.

Patriotism is obviously not conservatism. Most of the campus conservatives seem incapable of reflective or original thought about our way of life, or any motivation toward intelligent action. Popular accusations and cliches . . . the easy way. . . .

Patriotism wells up naturally when we see the good in our way of life; it doesn't thrive on hate or fear. It doesn't blind us to similar feelings other men have about their ways of life. And it doesn't blind us to better possibilities for ourselves.

Liberal or conservative, it doesn't take a brave man to sneer at the right time and place.

In conclusion, just because conservativism is popular, don't think all conservatives are pseudo. That's not true at all.

Seeger–Art Breaks Down

To the Editors,

The confusion and sheer rancor surrounding Pete Seeger's appearance on campus last Wednesday evening obscures what should have been the central concern of those attending the concert: that is, what kind of artist is Seeger? Is he good, or is he not so good?

It seems obvious that he is a very poor artist; and the reasons for this derive from the very conditions that cloud a proper assessment of his talent. Mr. Seeger is intent upon pushing a particular — albeit vague — approach to what he believes are appalling social conditions in this country. His music concentrates largely on the apparent injustices of segregation, capitalism, and the activities of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Now few with any degree of sensitivity would doubt that his concerns are real ones, and his distress understandable. The difficulty arrives when he combines the militant virtues of the reformer with the necessarily aloof perspective of the artist. Unfortunately for Mr. Seeger this cannot be done. The role of the artist in society is finally not a political one, and if the artist tries to be political, he becomes instead a reformer, at best ,and at worst nothing at all.

This does not imply, of course, that all art must be a self-enclosed system removed from society; but it does mean that the artist cannot be too much a part of the world if he does not want the world to distort that which he creates. The distinction is one of emphasis, but the emphasis is significant; it is the difference between someone like Richard Wright and James Baldwin. Unfortunately, Mr. Seeger falls into the sorry category of Richard Wright.

Some will argue that Mr. Seeger's music by its nature is closely associated with social protest, and this is partially correct. But in a larger sense folk music is linked with the plight of man; and the plight of man is not confined to those special problems that have caught Mr. Seeger's attention. Nor is the tragedy of the human condition going to suddenly be alleviated with Mr. Seeger's socialist panacea. And here — in a very special sense — is the point at which Mr. Seeger's artistry breaks down, for doctrine always translates the terrifying pluralism of life into simple causes and effects, and art instead tries to truly portray this pluralism as it is. Mr. Seeger's sense of justice is clear, his categories of right and wrong are distinct and appealing, his solutions sure and powerful; but in this sense he has ceased to be the protesting artist, and has become instead the leader of a cause.

What is paradoxical in this situation is that this criticism of Mr. Seeger's artistic effectiveness will probably be lauded by the campus right-wing, for the wrong reasons, and castigated by the Campus left-wing — again for the wrong reasons. Perhaps the frightening thing is that so few can see Mr. Seeger clearly, including Mr. Seeger himself. Ideology has a curious way of rendering events and individuals unintelligible. In a way, one is struck by the absurdity of the far left and the far right, both advocating doctrines that have little meaning — if any — for the ambiguous, complex, and truly tragic position of humanity between them.

—Fred Frohock

More Afraid Of J Birchers

To the Editors,

All I know about the Communist cells on the campus is what I read in the papers. And all I have to say about it is — I am much more afraid of the John Birchers and the Maj. General Walkers than I am of the communists. I think the latter are more dangerous to the country than the communists for we know the communist game and we can be on guard against them and fight them. But dogged if I know what the Birchers and the General Walkers stand for. It strikes me they are a lot of re-actionary crackpots. When this country ever reaches the point where it is afraid of new ideas and afraid to let people express themselves in open and free debate, then democracy will already be dead, and waiting to be buried by the communist world. The University was criticized when Junius Scales was on the campus. But Junius Scales didn't hurt the University, he only hurt Junius Scales. And Maj. General Edwin Walker has succeeded only in bringing disgrace on his own head.

Neither Left Nor Right

To the Editors,

A poem: "Little Mind Behind His Eye".

I went to hear a fellow sing
And when I passed the strangest thing
A little man with sign held high
A little mind behind his eye.

Another fellow looked slightly pink
Was going inside the carrol clink
And smirking at the other guy
A little mind behind his eye.

Inside on stage bemoaning his fate
Of being born when people hate
He got lost in all this mire
A little mind behind his eye.

Shamed too deep a cut which left a scar
Yet flamed this hate with every bar
And tho he sang with hustle and bustle
Glowed with "You too can be controversial."

When instead of singing bout love
And presenting the classes with a dove
"Bourgeois Washington" he did fire
A little mind behind his eye.

I straddle the fence they lament
Tho my group makes up seventy-five per cent
Neither right nor left can I buy
A little mind behind my eye?

—Betty Gwinn

Don't Celebrate Pearl Harbor

To the Editors,

Once again this year on December 7, we "celebrated" the bombing of Pearl Harbor. Perhaps then we should annually celebrate similar events such as the bombardment of Ft. Sumter and Custer's adventures at the Little Big Horn.

However, on this date 175 years ago in 1787 the state legislature of Delaware voted unanimously to accept the constitution proposed by the Constitutional Convention and to enter the union as the first state. Within two weeks the states of Pennsylvania and New Jersey followed Delaware's lead.

Here is an event worth celebrating! The beginning of our country and of the faith that we put in our federal government is not worthy to take second place to one battle in one American war.

—Jim McDonald

"You're About All Played Out—ch"

REFLECTIONS

Our choice for most over-used word in America:

"Sophisticated."

Until last week we figured President Kennedy had used the word to describe evry conceivable kind of action and thought. But speaking at the University of Michigan, Fulton Lewis III has coined a new phrase, referring to Communist activities in the U. S.—"The Communists are a Fifth Column group which performs underground acts of sophisticated treason to aid the Soviet Union."

Anyone for sophisticated vomiting?

Time's 'Objectivity'

Chastising TV's Howard K. Smith for his Nixon "obituary," Time magazine attributes to Mr. Smith an "unconquerable tendency to over-editorialize."

Coming from Time, the choice of words is revealing—not "editorialize" but "over-editorialize." Well might Time distinguish between the two; for it is a rare morsel of "news" in Mr. Luce's weekly that does not veer along the dim line between deft homilies and severe reproof. Time, calling itself a "newsmagazine," does not deliver its opinions as openly or boldly as a gaudily carapaced feudal knight advancing in an open field. It does so by the more cautious and tactical deployment of well-chasen descriptions. It opines by a kind of verbal infiltration.

For instance, Time once devastated India's V. K. Khrishna Menon by noting in an otherwise poker-faced account, a certain tendency on Mr. Menon's part to explore his nose with his finger. When he haunted the White House under Harry Truman, George Allen was to Time a "court jester." When he stuck around under Dwight D. Eisenhower, Allen became a "long-time companion of Presidents." It's what Sydney J. Harris calls "antics with semantics."

Time may well be right about Howard K. Smith's "unconquerable tendency to overeditorialize." Indeed, on the subject of larding the news with opinion, Time must be counted an expert witness.

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

North Carolina's unbeaten basketball team wrapped up its final Atlantic Coast Conference victory of the year Saturday against South Carolina.

Intersectional contests with strong Indiana and Kentucky, following Wednesday's Alumni game, will complete the 1962 schedule. 1963 will bring games with Yale and Notre Dame, then twelve conference battles—and if South Carolina's surprising showing is any indication every ACC game will be a battle.

Dean Smith's men do not meet another ACC opponent until January 9 when they play at Wake Forest. The Tar Heels don't play host to a league foe until January 16 when North Carolina State furnishes the opposition.

The Tar Heels will have to play those 12 league games within 45 days, but this should be to their advantage. The four non-conference contests which precede the remainder of the ACC schedule should well prepare them for the always interesting ACC race.

The four outside foes are among the strongest in their respective league and area. Indiana in the Big Ten, Kentucky in the Southeastern, Yale in the Ivy League and Notre Dame in the midwest—sort of reminds you of the UNC 1962 football schedule.

It's a colorful schedule which will give UNC's team the opportunity to make a name for the school and conference against formidable opposition.

UNC's Academic All-Stars

UNC's fodotball team dominated the All-ACC Academic football team announced last week with co-captain Joe Craver repeating from last year.

Ken Willard—the only sophomore to qualify for the team—and junior Gene Sigmon joined Craver, giving UNC three selections. Duke and N. C. State followed with two selections.

Two team captains and five dean's list students were on the 10th annual selection announced by Commissioner Jim Weaver. The 11 players on the team will be nominated for the All-American Academic team sponsored by the College Sports Information Directors of America.

Craver is the honor team's center with a B average in pre-med. Willard, the fullback, also had a B average in pre-med. Sigmon, a tackle, compiled a B average in political science.

Gary Cuozzo, Virginia's quarterback who broke all school passing records, topped the grades with a 3.7 average out of a possible 4.0 in his senior pre-medical year. Cuozzo is one of the eight scholar-athletes chosen by the National Football Foundation for a $500 Earl Blaik Fellowship, and the Cavalier quarterback will use it at Yale medical school next fall.

Other members of the team are ends Ken Lester of South Carolina and Oscar Thorsland of Clemson; tackle Dick Havens of Duke; guards Skip Matthews of State and Bill Shendow of Wake Forest; and halfbacks Joe Scarpati of State and Bill Futrell of Duke.

McSweeney's Luck

Bryan McSweeney, UNC's 6-5 junior forward who had been counted on for possible first-string duty, is Carolina's hard-luck basketballer. The New Yorker, who has a 3.76 academic average, injured an ankle on opening day of practice and was in a cast for five weeks. He returned to action a week ago. Just when it seemed he was rounding into shape, he was down again. This time he sprained the other ankle. . . .

By beating N. C. State Saturday, Wake Forest maintained possession of the newest traditional trophy in the ACC—the "Old Wicker Chair."

The "Chair" goes to the winner of the long rivalry and came into being when Wake coach Bones McKinney "destroyed" one of the Reynolds Coliseum chairs in the heat of his Deacons 99-91 loss to the Wolkpack in the 1960 Dixie Classic.

Rather than pay cost for the chair, when presented a bill by State Coach Everett Case, McKinney had the chair repaired and Painted Black and Gold (Wake colors) at the top and Red and White (State colors) at the bottom and stated, "We'll play for the chair and let the winner keep it until the other wins it back."

Wake has won four straight times since the "Chair" became a part of the rivalry.

Lennie Rosenbluth:

'I Think We'll Give Them A Battle'

"I think we'll give them a battle—but jumping is the big thing in a tough basketball game and I'm afraid the legs of us old-timers might not quite be up to matching them."

Lennie Rosenbluth talking. Lennie, one of the slickest shotmakers in modern basketball history, was discussing the Varsity - Alumni game set for Woollen Gym Wednesday night.

"It will be good to watch," predicted Rosenbluth, everybody's All-America choice from the unbeaten 1957 National Championship team at UNC. "Four of us who started against Kansas in the NCAA title game will be here."

The lads in mind are guard Tommy Kearns, center Joe Quigg and forward Pete Brennan. The fifth starter, guard Bobby Cunningham, is residing in Mississippi and won't be able to attend.

Tomorrow night will be a special one on campus. Besides the annual Varsity-Alumni contest, a reunion of past monogram winners is slated and more than 70 are expected to attend.

Such Carolina hardwood names as John (Hook) Dillon, Jim McCachren, Earl Ruth, Bob Paxton, Coy Carson, Nemo Nearman, Al Long, Billy Harrison and others will display their post-college talents.

"The response for the evening has been terrific," said Coach Dean Smith of the Tar Heels. "We're not taking the game lightly. My kids know they'll have to play their best or take a good licking."

Activity begins at 7:30 p.m., when the returning oldtimers have a game of their own—with two minute quarters. At 8:30, the Varsity takes the floor against the Alumni.

Cincy, Duke Pace Top 20

NEW YORK (UPI) — Cincinnati, which has overwhelmed four straight opponents, was a near-unanimous choice as the nation's No. 1 major college basketball team Monday in the United Press International's second weekly ratings.

The Bearcats, who defeated Virginia, Miami of Ohio and George Washington last week, received 34 first-place votes from the 35 coaches who comprise the UPI board. Duke, which maintained its hold on second place, drew the other first-place vote.

Cincinnati, the two-time NCAA champion and pre-season pick by the coaches as the No. 1 team, continued its strong hold on the top spot by receiving 349 points—one short of a perfect score.

Loyola of Chicago remained in the No. 3 spot while Ohio State showed the biggest jump by vaulting from 17th a week ago to fourth place. Completing the top 10 in order were Mississippi State, Oregon State, Stanford, Illinois, Bowling Green and West Virginia.

Colorado headed the second 10 followed by Wisconsin, Arizona State, Drake, Kentucky, Minnesota, New York University, St. Bonaventure, and Seattle. Texas and Iowa State were tied for 20th place.

Kansas State and West Virginia suffered most by losses last week. Kansas State, ninth a week ago, dropped completely out of sight, not gathering a single point. West Virginia slipped from fourth to 10th.

Mississippi State moved up a notch from a week ago to fifth; Oregon State, despite losing its opener to Seattle, fell only one place to sixth; Stanford advanced from 11th to seventh; Illinois slipped one notch to eighth; Wisconsin dropped from eighth to 12th and Bowling Green moved up from 10th to ninth place.

Eight of the top 10 teams are undefeated, with Oregon State and West Virginia showing blemishes. Cincinnati and Ohio State head the unbeaten list with 4-0 records.

Ohio State, unranked in the preseason ratings because of the loss of All-Americans Jerry Lucas and John Havlicek, has knocked off Utah State, St. Louis, Virginia and West Virginia to enhance its national ranking.

FREE TICKETS

Free tickets for the Student Theatre Workshop-Petite Dramatique production of "The Miracle Worker" must be picked up in advance at the GM Information Desk. This is necessary because of very limited seating space for the in-the-round drama which will be presented at 8:00 p.m., Friday thru Saturday, on stage in Memorial Hall.

Each student may jick up no more than two tickets at the GM desk. ID cards are not required.

The shoes worn by American astronauts in spacecraft are made of nylon.

Monogram Club Holds Open House

The Monogram Club will hold an Open House for all members and their dates Wednesday night, in its club room in Woollen Gym, immediately following the Varsity-Alumni basketball game. Carolina's varsity cagers of 1962-63 as well as past basketball greats will be special guests. There will be dancing and refreshments will be served.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: TANNER GARLAND

Recently, Tanner Garland (B.S., 1959) was promoted to Staff Accountant in the Charleston office of The Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company of West Virginia.

Tanner earned this promotion through an outstanding performance on previous assignments. On his first job as Management Assistant in the Accounting Department, he advanced many sound ideas which were accepted and put into use.

As a result, Tanner was sent to the company's Staff Headquarters in Washington to organize a special accounting group. His performance there as an administrative supervisor earned him his promotion to Staff Accountant.

Tanner Garland and other young men like him in Bell Telephone Companies throughout the country help bring the finest communications service in the world to the homes and businesses of a growing America.

NSA Meeting Will Be Held Here Friday

Student leaders from 33 colleges and universities in North Carolina and Virginia will assemble here Friday for a regional conference of the National Student Association.

Because UNC is the host school, the meetings will be open to all interested Carolina students. Applications are in the Student Government Offices.

A banquet in the Carolina Inn will begin the two day conference Friday evening. Al Lowenstein, past NSA President, will give the keynote address.

Curtis Gans, past vice president of NSA, will speak at a seminar Saturday on "The Role of Southern Schools in NSA resolutions and Policies."

Mike Lawler, vice president of the UNC Student Government, will speak on "The Southern Universities Student Government Association and its challenge to NSA." Other seminars includes a discussion led by Duke Marston, NSA regional chairman, on "NSA's Value to Student Governments."

Wake Forest College, a non-member school, will have observers at the meeting. According to Marston, Wake Forest has been interested in NSA for several years, and may join the Association this year.

The University of Virginia and Washington and Lee University have also been invited to send observers.

"Students who wish to attend the region should come to the Student Government Offices in Graham Memorial today or Thursday," said Harry DeLung, NSA Coordinator. "The registration fee is $5, which includes the banquet. I would encourage all interested students to take advantage of this NSA meeting at Carolina, since the conferences are held here only at four or five year intervals," he added.

The official delegates from UNC will be Inman Allen, Mike Lawler, Lynda Calvard, Bob Spearman, Ford Rowan, and Harry DeLung.

"Chez Hickory," off-campus organization, will be entertaining all participating students at a party on Friday night. The group held a similar function for the Toronto Exchange.

A general plenary session will be held at the end of the conference Saturday afternoon. No resolutions or elections are anticipated, according to DeLung.

GM Forms Group To Publicize Current Affairs

Graham Memorial announced yesterday the formation of Current Affairs Committee. Its chairman will be Ford Rowan.

The new committee "offers great potential in exciting an awareness among students of current happenings both in the community and beyond," Rowan said.

"We plan to sponsor immediate programs of faculty speakers, discussions, and debates on newsworthy topics; we also plan to publish a leaflet from time to time presenting an analysis of current events as developed by student and faculty writers."

Bob Rearden, President of Graham Memorial, said yesterday that this committee will sponsor discussions featuring students, faculty, and administrators primarily from this campus, "because one of the objectives of the committee is to broaden the informal educational contact between students and faculty at Carolina."

Rearden added that "it is not the objective of this committee to bring outside speakers to this campus, for this is excellently done by other organizations with this as their purpose."

Interviews will be held today from 2 to 4 p.m. in the Grail Room and tomorrow from 2 to 4 p.m. in the Woodhouse conference room at Graham Memrial.

'Forgotten Village' Closes Film Series

The movie "The Forgotten Village" will be presented tonight as the third and final film in the series "A Trilogy on Latin America."

"The Forgotten Village," by John Steinbeck, is the story of a small Mexican village and the struggle of one of its dozens to do away with the "wise women" and import modern medical aid.

The program will be held at 7 p.m. in Carroll Hall and is open to the faculty, their families, and townspeople, in addition to students.

Two-Party System Has Not Arrived, Congressman Says

Third District Congressman David N. Henderson said Monday night the results of the November election cannot be interpreted as proof of the beginning of a two-party system in North Carolina.

Speaking to the University of North Carolina's Young Democrats Club, Henderson said most of the successful Tar Heel GOP candidates either soft pedaled their Republican label or ignored it altogether.

Republicans also openly acknowledged their dependency on Democrat votes, he said, citing the action of Guilford County Republicans in saying they would keep Democrat workers in county government because they need their votes.

Asked his prediction on the outcome of the 1964 gubernatorial contest Henderson said "He'll be a good Democrat and he'll be elected."

He blamed the religious issue tied in with the 1960 national election for the fact that GOP gubernatorial candidate Robert L. Gavin of Sanford polled 46 per cent of the vote. He said Tar Heel Democratic congressmen were also hurt by the religious isesue.

But, he said, President Kennedy's bold action in the Berlin and Cuban crises has solidified the nation behind him and the national ticket will not be a hindrance to the State ticket in 1964.

Speaking about recent Republican gains in the State, Henderson said, "Some people regard Republican membership as a status symbol. They believe a GOP bumper sticker on an old Ford puts it into the Cadillac class."

He said those who accept Republicanism as a status symbol "will find it hard to digest when forced to swallow all of it in its entirety."

"My feeling on the UN is not too much one way or the other," said Congressman Henderson.

"Where we can use it and get some good out of it, I think we ought to, but I think Kennedy's action in Cuba is typical of what our stand should be.

"It very decidedly proved that strong action is the answer," the Congressman said.

"Those who charged that the Democrats are soft on Communism were soundly defeated in the last election. This shows that the voters are solidly behind the President and the Democratic Party. The President has taken action, starting in Berlin and culminating in Cuba.

"The international Communist conspiracy has been stopped dead in its tracks," Henderson continued. "Pro-U.S. sentiment is highest that it has been in the past decade.

"Khrushchev is too busy digging out of his own difficulties to bury anyone else," the Congressman said.

"I have been asked to explain the withdrawal of the Russians from Cuba. My opinion is perhaps not worth very much, but I have a very strong opinion.

"It is that the military might of the U. S. was great enough to make the Russian forces back out, and was capable of unleashing the force of power on the Russian sailors and ships."

French Demand Independent Force

De Gaulle Blocks Rusk's Drive To Restore Unity Among Allies

PARIS (UPI)—Secretary of State Dean Rusk began an intensive drive Tuesday to restore the shaken unity of NATO. But almost at once he ran headlong into an uncompromising demand by President Charles de Gaulle for an independent French nuclear force.

Rusk will head the American delegation at a three-day session of the NATO council Thursday, Friday and Saturday. In an airport statement he appealed to other NATO members to sink their differences and bolster the strength of the alliance.

But in a message to the French National Assembly later, De Gaulle said it was "inconceivable" that France should not have its own nuclear striking force, something the United States has opposed.

De Gaulle also declared that "at the moment" NATO is indispensable for the defense of the free world. The statement appeared to NATO only a temporary institution.

Rusk was host at a dinner Tuesday night to British Foreign Secretary Lord Home at a time of another brewing crisis in Anglo-American relations over reported U. S. plans to scrap the Skybolt air-to-ground missile under development for the British Royal Air Force.

Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara was in London conferring with British Defense Minister Peter Thorneycroft over the Skybolt plans. The issue has touched off a furor in Britain which fears scrapping the project would cripple its independent nuclear power—an issue that could basically affect NATO.

Both Rusk and McNamara are expected to tell America's European allies bluntly during the Paris NATO talks that the United States believes they should make a greater contribution in conventional forces to the alliance.

In addition, Rusk will confer Wednesday with De Gaulle and possibly with Premier Georges Pompidou. He was expected to try to iron out some of the differences which have made France the odd-man-out in the Western alliance.

Parking Problems May Grow Deeper In Coming Years

Will student and faculty parking on the UNC campus become a major problem in the next two years as the number of students and staff members increases?

Bill Harris of the Dean of Men's Office says no.

But other members of the faculty and Chapel Hill residents seem to feel differently.

Kai Jergeson walked into his 9 a.m. class yesterday and said, "I'd like you all to know that things are fine this morning in Elizabeth City . . . that's where I'm parked".

Lucien Foust, of the staff of the Chapel Hill Planning Board, when asked about future parking problems, said that "the lack of parking facilities on the University campus presents a problem now which can only get worse as enrollment increases."

But Harris maintains that the student parking problem will be resolved as it is created.

As new dormitories are built, he said, new parking lots will also be built, causing no real change in the parking situation.

He also said that sophomores will have their parking permits restricted to the parking lots which are listed on the Bell Tower sticker. These are the Ram Varsity Bell Tower, and Craige Dorm parking lots.

As the number of faculty members increases, staff parking will present a problem, Harris said, but it is not recognized as a problem now. He said that it will probably be under discussion in the future by the University's Traffic and Safety Committee.

Lucien Foust of the staff of the Chapel Hill Planning Board said that the lack of parking facilities on the University campus presents a problem now which can only get worse as enrollment increases.

The Planning Board, he said, is concerned with problems generated by both the town and campus, but works directly only with solutions which take place in the town itself.

Foust added, however, that if the parking facilities on the campus are not increased, and the number of cars does increase, the problem will directly concern the Planning Board, because student and faculty cars overspread into Chapel Hill residential areas.

The fraternity zoning question is much a result of parking congestion, Foust said. The high ratio of cars per student creates a parking problem which has been of concern to the residents of Chapel Hill.

The Chapel Hill Planning Board, he said ,is now working on a 20- he said, is now working on a 20- problem.

Aid To India Committee Is Formed Here

An ad hoc Aid to India committee has been formed in Chapel Hill to secure funds for "humanitarian aid" for Indian casualties of the Indian-Chinese War and their families.

The committee was organized in response to a statement appealing for public financial support of such aid to India issued this week by various prominent Chapel Hillians.

The local committee pointed out that the group not only represented a symbol of American support of India in its struggle with the Chinese Communists, but also a means by which the local community can demonstrate its sympathy and support.

Signatories to the statement by local "friends of India" include Paul Green, playwright; J. H. Blackman professor of economics, UNC; R. C. Bose, professor of statistics; Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye, co-editors, DTH; Edward G. Danziger, businessman; Werner P. Friederich, professor of comparative literature and president, UNC Rabindranath Tagore Society; J. N. Couch, professor of botany; Charles Henderson, Jr., dean of students; Donald Hayman, assistant director, Institute of Government; Rev. Charles Jones, minister, Community Church; W. G. Long, dean of men; Jerold Orne, librarian; Edward McGavran, dean, School of Public Health; C. E. Philbrook, professor of economics; Anne Queen of the YWCA; A. M. Scott, professor of political science; F. C. Shepard, foreign student advisor.

The statement stressed that "the cause of democracy on the Asian continent stands or falls with India." It said that the recent invasion of India by the Chinese Communists has not only "caused a belated realization, on the part of the Indian people, of what is really at stake in the present world struggle; it also brings to the American people an awareness of their abiding interest in, and increasing concern for, the future welfare and success of this the vastest democracy in Asia."

Contributions should be addressed to Aid to India Committee, Prof. R. C. Bose, 340 Phillips Hall, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Chancellor Asks New Appellation For Cow College

State College Chancellor John Caldwell met with his students Monday night in an attempt to convince them of the merits of the proposed name change of the school.

Caldwell, who requested the meeting, said he would have "suggested a neutral presiding officer, but I quickly realized no such person exists around here." He added with a grin, "I did request a body guard down the center aisle."

He then presented his views on the proposed name change and defended the move as being in the interests of symmetery, uniformity, and unity.

He pointed out that the legal name of the college at present is North Carolina State College of the University of North Carolina, and said the UNCR proposal came about because of changes that have been proposed within the University.

Under these proposals, State College would be allowed to award liberal arts degrees, and male undergraduates would be admitted to Woman's College.

Caldwell said that this necessarily means that the name of Woman's College must be changed. In addition, there is the problem of what to name any future branches of the University.

It was only natural, he said, that in the interests of symmetry and unity, the educators turned to the idea of using the UNC designation with the city in which the branch is located.

He said that the picketing of the chancellor's house was a legitimate enterprise. "I would simply ask that if you picket anymore in the full view of the public, please spell all the words right".

Caldwell said that there is absolutely no political motive behind the proposed name change and said that the proposal did "not originate with the partisans of UNC at Chapel Hill."

He added "They don't want this much either."

Communists Finally Go On Trial

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Attorneys agreed Tuesday on a jury of eight women and four men to hear the government's charge against the Communist party of the United States that it defied a federal order to register as an agent of the Soviet Union.

Federal District Judge Alexander Holtzoff recessed the case until Wednesday afternoon immediately after the selection of the jury.

Only about 50 spectators were on hand to witness the start of the trial, the latest round in the government's 12-year legal fight against the party.

Prospective jurors were questioned about membership in various organizations, or subscriptions to extremist publications of the left or right.

U.S. attorneys complained about two men, later identified as party members, who stood in the halls of the court building outside the trial chamber handing out literature attacking the registration law. Judge Holtzoff later ordered U.S. marshals to arrest anyone who continued to distribute literature in the building.

Women For Peace Refuse To Reply At HUAC Hearing

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A House hearing on possible Communist infiltration of American peace movements was punctuated Tuesday by a series of angry episodes, including the forcible ejection of a former FBI agent.

The one-time agent, Jack Levine, was hustled from the room by three Capitol police when he interrupted the hearing by the House Committee on un-American Activities to denounce the inquiry as "just disgraceful."

Levine, who served 11 months with the FBI in 1960 and 1961, resigned and recently wrote an article hotly criticizing FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover.

In the midst of the hearing, Levine leaped to his feet, demanding that the investigation stop. "I just became so aroused," he told newsmen later.

Three women witnesses balked at answering a number of the committee's questions.

They were:

—Mrs. Blance Posner of Scarsdale, N. Y., who invoked the Fifth Amendment 44 times during her appearance. She refused to say whether she had ever been a Communist or whether she was an official of the Women's Strike for Peace Movement.

—Mrs. Ruth E. Meyers of Roslyn, N. Y., who cited the First and Fifth Amendments in refusing to say whether she was a Communist party member. Outside the hearing room, she told newsmen she had never been a Communist but on the witness stand she termed the questions "insults to an American citizen."

—Mrs. Lyla Hoffman of Great Neck, N. Y., who represents Nassau County on the peace group's central coordinating committee. She refused under the First Amendment to say whether she had been a Communist party member in Brooklyn in 1944. She commented, however, that she was not now a Communist nor had been for the past five years.

Mrs. Hoffman said she was active in the peace group "under no discipline or direction other than my own conscience."

In advance of the hearing, Rep. William F. Ryan, D-N.Y., criticized the inquiry.

"The hearings apparently are intended to discredit the Women's Strike for Peace and to cast doubt upon the loyalty of those active in it," Ryan said in a statement. "The action of the committee induces conformity of thought and action and intimidates citizens who are seeking to express their concern for peace."

The Strike for Peace members have protested nuclear tesing by both the United States and the Soviet Union. They have picketed both the White House and the Russian embassy here.

The first witness was Richard Flink, a young New York attorney, who worked in cooperation with the FBI after Soviet agents offered him money to help in his campaign as Republican candidate for the state assembly.

Flink testified that the Soviet officials had urged him to speak on behalf of trade with the Soviet bloc and support of peace groups. He did not directly link any group with the Russian offer.

'Strike' Member Points To Waterloo Of House Group

Lauraine Gordon, a spokesman for the "National Women Strike for Peace," said yesterday that the House Committee on Un-American Activities may have "met its Waterloo" at its first series of hearings yesterday morning.

In a telephone interview, Mrs. Gordon said that three women were called to testify before the committee in open hearings and two more were before the committee in closed procedings at prsstime.

The committee, under acting Chairman Doyle of California, is holding an investigation to determine if the Communists have infiltrated the American peace movements.

According to Mrs. Gordon, the only evidence the committee was able to obtain from its morning hearings is that Women Strike for Peace is a "grass roots organization of American mothers who are acting as their conscience dictates."

No Loyalty Oath

The Women Strikers demand no oath of loyalty," said the spokesman, "only that its members want immediate total disarmament with proper U.N. safeguards, an end to the nuclear menace, and world cooperation with the United Nations to secure a permanent peace."

When asked whether any of the women called before the committee refused to answer any questions, Mrs. Gordon said that some of them did not believe that the committee had any right to investigate them.

She said that she does not anticipate that any of the women will be charged with contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions "because Rep. Doyle has told us that he would not bring any charges against the Women Strikers."

Orderly Hearings

She said that the open hearings were orderly, but that over three hundred women were sitting in during the investigation and applauded "when they felt the women testifying had given a particularly good answer." "They also applauded when the women left the stand," said Mrs. Gordon.

Asked what the significance of the hearings would be, both for the Women Strikers and for the HUAC, Mrs. Gordon said that she felt the hearing would certainly strengthen the Women Strike for Peace, because they have already received enormous support from all over the country, including many Congressmen and the U.S. National Student Association.

She said that she felt, because of the support the group has gotten, that HUAC might not get its appropriation from Congress again.

A Brave Nation Won't Outlaw Opposition

The United States government brought an organization to trial yesterday in Washington, and in effect, asked it to declare itself out of existence.

The Communist Party U. S. A. goes on trial on a charge of failing to register with the attorney general as an agent of the Soviet Union, a provision of the 1950 Internal Security Act.

If the party is found guilty by the jury which hears its case, the government will have it in an inescapable and unbearable position. The CP faces a maximum penalty of a $120,000 fine — if it agrees to pay, the party still has to register as agents of a foreign power. If it refuses to pay the fine, the government can move in and seize its tangible assets, such as office furniture, filing cabinets and all other office equipment — which would close the party's public operations.

This isn't all with which the 8,500-member CP has to contend. If the party and party officials register as agents of a foreign power (agents who wish to overthrow the nation by violent means), then they probably can be prosecuted under the Smith Act. The 1940 Smith Act prohibits advocating violent overthrow.

In short, the party is given the choice—register, and open yourselves to further prosecution, or don't register and have all party offices sacked and confiscated—putting the party out of operation either way.

* * *

With this means of legal power amassed against the American Communists, no one would say the U.S. government and people did not have the POWER to put the party out of existence. All it would take is one "stroke of the pen" by the president, a couple of judicial decisions, another law or so—and you could have every major American Communist behind bars, on one charge or another.

The question is, Does America want to proscribe membership in the Communist party and do away with the party altogether?

Do we want to outlaw political beliefs? (No one is talking about overt acts of subversion—for such, there is a multitude of laws, so many that the attorney general isn't sure which to implement first.)

Do we want to punish by legislation those who disagree with legislation? Do we want to hound that small band of "disciplined Marxists, disgruntled workers and FBI informers" (as UPI described the CP today) until they are no longer able to operate as a political unit?

Is dissent really that dangerous—does America really fear the Communist dogma that much? Has the land of the free and home of the brave finally come to this?

* * *

These are the issues brought into conflict in the Washington trial. The government has carried its natural right to protect itself from subversion to an extreme, where it is protecting itself from criticism as well.

In the act of suppression of opposition, the government cannot be followed blindly. The words "national security" cannot be distorted in defense of the abridgment of basic constitutional rights.

Any government which is given unlimited powers to control any opposition will assume that control and wield it with as much strength as it is allowed—unless halted by the people, who must be the final protector of American liberties.

The people have an opportunity to stand up for the tradition of American freedom of speech, press and association. They must take that opportunity to renounce the cowardly view that America must suppress the freedom of its opposition in order to remain free. (JC)

Me and Man at Yale

Posturing, scratching William (Me and Man at Yale) Buckley, after soaking the Carolina Forum for a cool $450 for a basso profundo reading of his recent Playboy article here last night, has returned, we hope, to Olympus, where he is currently rewriting his autobiography. (The Prince).

Don't be mistaken, we have long admired William. We just wonder when he is going to exchange roles seriously with John Wayne. His voice is good, his inflection stirring, his nuances startling (Forget about Cuba, invade Harvard).

However, since it appears Charming Billy let slide so drastically the gossamer mantle of logic with which he usually cloaks his Chauvinistic mummery, let him take note of several points the next time he equates dynamic foreign policy with bedroom prowess, the Negro problem with Hitler's genocide and flagwaving with success abroad:

1) The phallus is not an instrument of foreign policy.

2) Negroes don't want retribution, a cup of coffee will do.

3) Coffins draped in Red, White and Blue still contain bodies.

—Wayne King

* * *

More notes on Bill Buckley:

Mr. Buckley's gay speech Monday night was highly entertaining, but we noted a seeming hesitancy on the great man's part to choose between his two distinct and alternating personalities:

—On one hand, he was the cynical wise man, carrying the burden of all ages, all man's experiences on his strong shoulders. In this character he ridiculed the tendency of liberals to think there is good in all men, that a moral foreign policy can succeed, that some people can be trusted some times, that something can be done about the Southern segregation situation . . .

—On the other hand, Buckley was a highly self-righteous individual. He attacked those nonpatriotic liberals as believing that, "I only have one life to give for my country, and my country's not worth it"—and modestly proclaimed that his own political beliefs rested upon Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. (JC)

That unheralded prophet, exuding modest wisdom and immodest bars to drop upon the unwilling heads of everyone from fallout-shelter owners to Mom—the bright new prophet for the Sick, Sick world, Jules Feiffer, will appear regularly in the Tar Heel beginning tomorrow, and weekly thereafter. On this page are four examples of his craft.

With appropriate boast and swagger, we claim to be the only newspaper in the South to carry Feiffer.

Three Famous One Act Plays To Be Presented By Wesleys

"An evening of three famous one acts" will be presented by the Wesley Players of Duke on December 16, 17, and 18 at 8:15 p.m.

The plays will be presented in the arena at the Methodist Student Center on the Duke campus. The presentation is being made through the combined efforts of students from Duke, Carolina and North Carolina College.

James Gillikin, a Carolina grad student in drama will direct one of the plays, The Bold Soprano, by Eugene Ionesco, which features Sandy Moffett, another Carolina grad student.

Also featured on the program will be "It Shouldn't Happen to a Dog", a Yiddish satire by Wolf Mankowitz, and "The Respectful Prostitute" (La Putain Respecteuse) by Jean-Paul Sartre. The Sartre work will be directed by Buck Roberts, a UNC grad student in drama and TV.

The Methodist Student Center is located between the east and west Campuses just off Myrtle Drive on Oregon Street.

1957 National Champs Lead Alumni Against Carolina's Varsity Cagers

North Carolina's basketball stars —past and present—will match talents tonight in the annual Alumni-Varsity basketball contest. Game time is 8:30 with preliminaries set for 6:00 and 7:30.

Four of the starters on the 1957 national championship team will be playing for the Alumni. Lennie Rosenbluth, Tommy Kearns, Pete Brennan and Joe Quigg make up the illustrious quartet.

Danny Lotz, also a member of the 1957 team and now in UNC's Dental School, will probably be the fifth starter tonight.

Varsity Coach Dean Smith will counter with five men, all averaging in double figures: guards Yogi Poteet and Larry Brown, center Billy Cunningham, and forwards Ray Respess and Charlie Shaffer.

The UNC freshmen will play N.C. State at 6 o'clock and an old-timers game will follow at 7:30.

UNC business manager Vernon Crook said yesterday that about 3,500 tickets are still available for the game. Students, faculty members, and UNC employees can pick up tickets at the ticket office this morning and afternoon—or wait in line at game time. Athletic pass card holders will be charged 50 cents—all others a dollar. No seats are reserved.

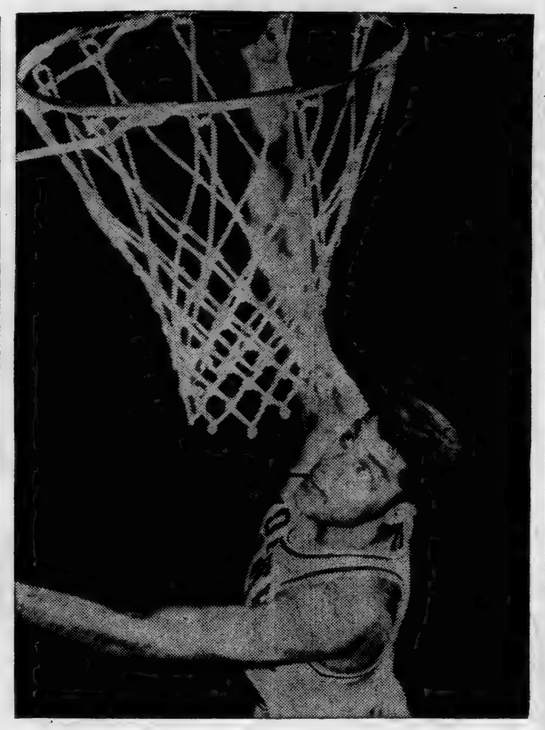
Eight Teams Battle For Hardwood Title

By STUART BALL

Chi Psi, Manly, Parker, and Old East reached the quarter finals of the Grail Mural Basketball Festival as they all recorded wins in Monday's play.



In the Chi Psi-Stacy contest John Angell's 20 points and the rebounding strength of Tommy Neely added up to a 38-25 victory over the Stacy Stars. Top scorer for the Stars was Dale Johnson with nine points.

It took an overtime for the Manly Riverrats to top the Law Solicitors. Mike McLaughlan sank two free throws in the extra period to give the Riverrats a 26-24 victory.

In the Parker-ATO game the Plummers showed their mettle when they were under pressure and widened a one-point lead with a little over four minutes remaining to the final margin of seven in the 21-14.

Old East took a 33-27 victory from the Aycock Aardvarks largely on the shooting of Walt Honour. Honour accounted for 13 points.

In other games, the Mangum Mavericks rolled over Joyner, 51-13. Charles Rhyne was the day's top scorer by virtue of his 24 points for the Mavericks.

Blue Dolphins Face Duke's Blue Devils

Carolina's Blue Dolphins go after their fifth straight win of the season this afternoon in Durham as they encounter Duke's varsity swimmers. This will be the final tune-up for Pat Earey's men before they battle perrenial powers Princeton and Navy early next week.

The varsity has scored successive wins over VMI, East Carolina, Clemson and South Carolina prior to today's meet, compiling 34 of a possible 44 first places.

Duke, coached by Jack Parsons in his 31st year with the Blue Devils, has nine returning lettermen on his squad which has had only one meet to date.

Freestyle sprinter Dick Woodrow again heads UNC's heavily favored squad into today's meet. Other starters include distance freestyler Frank Lea, backstroker Thompson Mann, sprinter Barry King and butterfly artist Willie Bloom.

N. C. State Frosh Play Tar Babies

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC's freshmen enter Big Four competition for the first time this season tonight when the Tar Babies face North Carolina State at 6 in Woollen Gym.

The frosh, winners of three straight—the latest a 56-39 victory over South Carolina last Saturday —will be out to extend their all-winning record against State over the last two years.

Last season, the two schools' freshman teams met three times with UNC winning all of them.

Ken Rosemond's cagers had quite a time of it in Columbia last Saturday before finally running away from the Baby Chicks.

UNC trailed 14-16 at halftime, but came on strong after intermission to pile up its 17-point game margin. The frosh held South Carolina scoreless for the last five minutes of the game.

Bob Bennett, Carolina's 6-8 center, led all scorers with 15 points. Bennett now is Rosemond's top production man with a total of 41 for the three games.

Mark Mirken is right behind his forecourt running mate with a 37-point season total. Mirken scored nine points against South Carolina.

Johnny Yokley, the quick guard from Mount Airy, and 6-3 forward Bill Harrison added eight and six points, respectively, to the Carolina score on Saturday. The two are now 3-4 in seasonal scoring with Yokley having 26 and Harrison, 25 points.

Ray Hassell, the probable fifth starter tonight, got seven markers against USC, while Earl Johnson, Rosemond's valuable sixth man, racked up nine points in a relief role.

The contest tonight will be the last of the year for the Tar Babies.

They face the Elon Jayvees on Wednesday, Jan. 2, in a preliminary to the UNC-Yale game here before traveling to Durham for a big date with the Duke Blue Imps on Jan. 8.

Senior Cabinet Picks Klingberg

Teacher Of The Month

Dr. Frank W. Klingberg, a member of the UNC History Department, was selected as Teacher of the Month at a recent meeting of the Senior Class Cabinet.

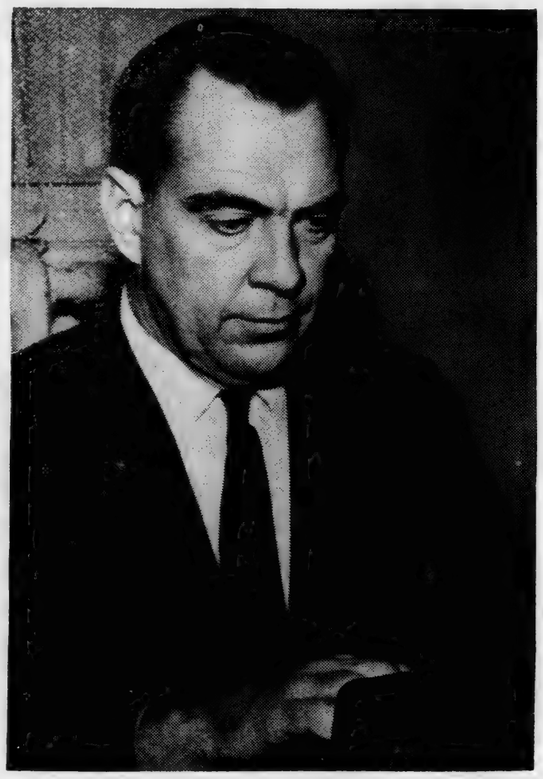
Th Cabinet, speaking for the Class, made this nomination to recognize Dr. Klingberg's "outstanding qualities as a teacher and as an advisor to students." The cabinet cited Dr. Klingberg for his "very imaginative presentation and flare for communicating with students even in a large class.

"All of his students agree that he is a frendly person; it is perhaps his attitude toward his students that accounts for his success in communicating with them."

Dr. Klingberg himself, asked what he liked to see in his students, replied "intellectual curiousity," which he believes can be stimulated by the approach taken by the teacher.

In teaching history he says it is necessary to weave some thought into the subject matter in order to induce the student "to become involved" in his study.

He feels that it is unfortunate that students "must bother themselves with taking notes because it detracts from classroom discussion."



Revealing a familarity with sports, Dr. Klingberg expressed his views on intercollegiate athletics and de-emphasis. "Athletics will be de-emphasized by events as much as by a certain course policy," he said, explaining that the current de-emphasis programs are a part o fa general trend and are certainly not isolated to this university community. He continued by saying that this inevitable trend is due in part to the rising standards and the fact that "students are more sophisticated in their attitude." He said he believes athletics in the South and the rest of the country will very likely follow the same patterns evolved in the Ivy League schools.

Dr. Klingberg is a staunch defender of the Honor System and personal integrity. "The Honor System works," he says; but "it works best if the faculty are committed to it as a principle." He recogizes the difficulty arising from the ever increasing number of students in classes.

He pointed out, however, illustrating from hs own experience at a much larger university, that dishonesty may be practiced right under the noses of the most elaborate proctor-check system. He concluded by saying that the Honor System "breeds integrity" in a way that is impossible to duplicate under the proctor system.

On the subject of education, Dr. Klingberg said he believes that classes ideally should be limited in size and that instructors should grade all their own papers, but he says "this is a democratic society and we must accommodate all who are qualified."

Raised in California, Dr. Klingberg received his undergraduate degree from U.C.L.A. He did graduate work in American History, studying at Stanford University and the University of North Carolina, finally receiving his Ph.D. from U.C.L.A. in 1948. He came to U.N.C. in 1948 where he has remained ever since. He is married and has two children aged 9 and 13.

80-250 Students Plan Cuba Trip

From DTH Wire Reports

NEW YORK—An estimated 80 to 250 American college students, including three from UNC, are preparing to defy the U. S. government ban on travel to Cuba and accept a Fidel Castro offer of an all-expense-paid Christmas vacation there, it was learned here Wednesday.

The students, mobilized by Anatol Isaac Schlosser, 25, a graduate New York University student identified as a Castro sympathizer, plan to slip out of the U. S. to Canada and take Cuban government air transportation from Montreal to Havana either Dec. 22 or Dec. 23.

Their expenses during 12 days in Havana will be paid by the Castro regime, according to reliable sources.

Schlosser told UPI he expected at least 80 students from the east, west, midwest and Canada to make the junket. However, Joseph A. Diodata, 21, a student at the state university of Buffalo, N. Y., said 62 students were planning to go from there alone and predicted as many as 250 students would eventually make the trip.

Larry Phelps, head of the delegation of UNC students planning to go to Cuba over the Christmas vacation, announced yesterday that "at the present time I can only disclose the names of two students, besides myself, who will definitely be going. They are John Salter and Dennis King."

Phelps said that the UNC group is firm in its plans to go to Cuba, despite the State Department's denial of permission to make the trip.

He said a meeting of all those interested in going to Cuba will be held tonight at 8 p.m. in Roland Parker III of G.M.

To Exercise 'Travel Rights'

Schlosser said the students recruited for the trip were from the New York City area, including City College of New York; the universities of Wisconsin, Chicago, North Carolina, California and Toronto, Boston University, Harvard, Oberline and others.

The trip organizer said the junket would be carried out "cognizant of the fact that the U. S. government has denied us permission and does not want us to go." He said the Castro regime was not footing the bill for the tour, but the Cuban University Students Federation in Havana, which, however, is Castro-controlled.

In Buffalo, Schlosser's trip organizer there, Cameron A. Ross, 23, said the local group had not yet received satisfactory replies from Schlosser to several "important" questions about where the money was coming from for the trip. Ross said Schlosser had agreed to furnish the necessary answers "in a couple of days."

Canadian View Uncertain

In Montreal, a Canadian government source indicated there would be no official interference with the trip. However, he said Cuban government planes must have prior authorization to carry passengers from Canada to Cuba and indicated there might be some reluctance to grant permission for such a flight if the passengers were American.

An Oberlin College Spokesman said he "doubted" any of the school's students would join the free tour to Cuba.

Schlosser, who was identified by Havana radio Nov. 29 as "organizer" of the tour to Cuba said in New York he was "only a spokesman" for the organization. He said the trip was "less of a protest than a matter of exercising our right to travel."

Witness Accuses HUAC Questioner Of Badgering Her

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Four women witnesses Wednesday defied House investigators looking into alleged Communist infiltration of peace movements and one accused them of "throwing stones" instead of asking questions.

For the second day in a row, female witnesses called by the House Committee on Un-American Activities refused to tell the panel whether they ever were members of the Community party.

A Westport, Conn., housewife, Mrs. Anna Mackenzie, heatedly objected to the questioning about her associations 25 years ago. She accused the committee of "throwing stones" instead of questions at her.

The witnesses invoked the Fifth Amendment repeatedly against possible self-incrimination. The four called to testify were the seventh witnesses in two days to balk at such questioning.

The committee, under acting Chairman Clyde Doyle, D-Calif., is seeking to determine if the Women's Strike for Peace and other such groups are Communist infiltrated.

The peace groups have charged that the House inquiry is an attempt to "smear" their members and discourage their peaceful picketing and other activities. Witnesses have challenged the panel's right to question their past affiliations.

Doyle told reporters it would be up to the committee later to review the record and determine whether any witnesses should be cited for contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions.

The Committee, meanwhile, announced the main witness for the resumption of hearings Thursday will be Mrs. Damar Wilson, a local housewife and originator of the Women's Strike for Peace organization.

The hearings Wednesday were relatively orderly. Only a small crowd was on hand, compared with hundreds of women—some with babies—who enlivened the scene Tuesday with clapping and much hugging and kissing of the star witnesses.

IDC Proposes Check On Advisor Action

'Bad Check' Bill, Finances To Be Aired In SL Tonight

The controversial bill to establish bad checks as an offense against the student body will be considered by Student Legislature in its session tonight. Also to be acted upon are six bills, with a total outlay of $2,651.60, which were passed favorably out of the Finance Committee in its meeting Tuesday night.

The "bad check" bill, as introduced by Ford Rowan (SP), is designed to restrict the large amount of checks which return because of insufficient funds and to protect those students who now enjoy the privilege of cashing personal checks in the Chapel Hill area.

Provisions Of The Bill

According to this bill if a student refuses to reimburse a merchant for a bad check he has violated the Honor Code and will be treated accordingly. If a student cashes a bad check he is immediately liable to student government action. Hopefully this will make a student think twice about bouncing a check and hopefully it will improve student-merchant relations.

This bill provides that a merchant can report those violators who he wishes to charge with passing bad checks to the Student Credit Commission, a branch of SG which notifies students that they owe money on bad checks.

For a bad check, if it is less than $25, a student only gets a written warning from the SCC. This provision allows for honest mathematical mistakes. For repeated or serious offenses a person is brought before his honor council by the Attorney General.

The first offense is punishable by a written warning which will be received through the mail. On the second offense the council is empowered by this bill to give a "council reprimand" which is a verbal reprimand long used in the Women's Council for other types of offenses.

In order to punish chronic violators, the council has the power to give an official reprimand, which goes on the student's record, or probation.

Money Bills Approved

Approved by the Finance Committee were the following bills: (1)—a bill to supplement the Yack Budget with $951.60 from the General Surplus; (2) — a bill to appropriate $600 from the unappropriated balance to the Carolina Forum; (3)—a bill to give $555 from the unappropriated balance to the State Affairs Committee to encourage the State Legislature to allot funds for a College Union here and an addition to Woollen Gym; (4) — a bill to appropriate $530 from the General Surplus for the purchase of one steno-mask and one autograph machine in in order to insure better recohds for Men's and Women's Honor Councils; (5)— a bill to appropriate $15 from the unappropriated balance for the lithographing of lists (name, address, phone number, etc.) of all the SL members which would be posted around the campus; and (6)—a bill to repeal an earlier bill which requested money for the purchase of additional bulletin boards.

Student Control Desired

An amendment to the I.D.C. Court By-Laws was introduced last night which would allow dorm residents to appeal administrative disciplinary action to the student court.

Ford Rowan, who introduced the amendment, said that the purpose of the measure was in no way an attempt to intimidate any member of the administration, but rather "to insure that student government handles discipline, in fact . . . not just in word."

The Amendment would give a dorm resident the right to appeal "any dormitory discipline action by the university administration" to the I.D.C. Court. Specifically, the I.D.C. feared the growing power of the Resident Adviser, who has the power to remove a student from the dormitory arbitrarily, without a hearing or trial.

Rowan said that the I.D.C. Court could already hear student appeals on damage adjustments of the Dormitory Managers, and that "there was no reason the administration should object unless the resident advisers are doing more than just their official counseling duties."

Rowan said he doubted that an appeal would be accepted by the court unless the case involved "should obviously have gone first to the court anyway".

When questioned later Rowan said that he was not trying "to institute the principle of student review of administrative decisions, only to insure students their traditional rights."

Party Contends It Did Not Dodge Law

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An attorney for the U. S. Communist party told a U. S. District Court jury Wednesday that he would try to prove the party did not willfully refuse to register with the attorney general.

The party is on trial under the 1950 Subversive Activities Control Act charged with defying a government order to register as a Communist-action organization.

John Abt, one of two attorneys representing the party, told the jury of eight women and four men that the party agreed with the government position that there was no attempt to register after being ordered to do so by the Subversive Activities Control Board.

The board's order became final on Oct. 20, 1961, and the party was indicted on Dec. 1, 1961, on 12 counts of failing to register. If convicted the party can be fined up to $120,000. Two officers of the party, Gus Hall and Benjamin Davis, have been indicted for failure to register but no date has been set for their trial.

The board has defined a Communist-action organization as one dominated and controlled by the world wide Communist movement based in the Soviet Union.

Kirk Maddrix, a Justice Department attorney, said the government would attempt to prove that the party was guilty simply by failing to register after the board had ordered it to do so. He told the jury that after the party was ordered to register and the Supreme Court had upheld the order, party officers called a press conference in New York on June 5, 1961, and explained their reasons for not complying.

He said Hall, general chairman of the party, and other officers told newsmen at that time that they would not cooperate with the government and "we would rather spend the rest of our lives in prison than to do that."

The board first ordered the party to register as a communist action organization in 1953, but it was delayed due to lengthy appeals.

Novelist McKenna Analyzes Education At Faculty Club

Richard McKenna, who's recent novel won the $10,000 Harper Award and is the Book-of-the-Month Club selection for January, spoke Tuesday to the Faculty Club on his personal "quest for education".

McKenna, who came to UNC after retirement from the Navy, told of his long experience in reading books and how he emerged on a new plateau of understanding after his years in Chapel Hill.

In spite of his determination to get an education through extensive reading on his own, McKenna finally had to admit his failure in self-education because there was so much that was hard to understand. "I was forced to conclude that for me, at least, there was no substitute for a college education."

He came to UNC, and made all A's and Phi Beta Kappa in a wide range of courses in the sciences, English, and psychology.

"I found the University of North Carolina abundantly able to supply what I lacked."

"I can now read almost any book in English that I wish to read. In addition I can tell quite soon whether any particular book is worth reading. I no longer assume that anything difficult is good for me in direct proportion to its turgid impenetrability . . ."

Even More

But McKenna found even more at Chapel Hill, he told the faculty. "I discovered other lacks of mine which I had not realized until I knew them being supplied to me . . . Each new thing I learned seemed to fit between two things I already knew. I had brought to the university a great, chaotic rat hoard of miscellaneous information."

"As my studies progressed, I could appreciate how it was all being subtly rearranged into some kind of form and order. It was being made more useful and available to me and charged with renewed interest . . . From the moment I began my studies the appearance of the world began to alter for me. I mean that quite literally."

Although he himself derived much from his experiences at UNC, McKenna added that he must say something more on "the current controversy in American education."

He said while he was in Chapel Hill, he noticed that "many of the youngsters in the classes I attended were not finding it anything like the enthralling experience it was to me." Many of the students, said McKenna, were conspicious for their "passiveness".

CURRENT AFFAIRS

Anyone interested in joining the new GM Current Affairs Committee should drop by GM this afternoon between 2 and 4 p.m.

YACK PAYMENT

Payment for Yack space is due this week.

ATTENTION

A coat was taken Tuesday night from Lenoir Hall. The person who took it was seen doing so and has been identified. This indivdual has 36 hours to return the coat to the Director's Office of Lenoir Hall. If this is done, no further action will be taken: if it is not returned within 36 hours, the individual will be turned into the proper authority. The coat was a brown, herringbone top coat.

WESLEY FOUNDATION

There will be a supper at the Wesley House Friday night at 6 Call 94-2152 by 2 p.m. Friday for reservations.

LOST

A gold dinner ring has been lost. Call Ray Lanier, 548 Ehringhaus. There is a reward for its return.

A ring with the initials R.L.E. has been lost. A reward is offered. Contact Robert Engler, 308 Graham.

VOTE OF THANKS

A resolution was passed at a recent meeting of the Indian Nationals on the campus of UNC in appreciation of the fund drive now under way for "humanitarian aid" to India.

The resolution reads:

"We, the Indian Nationals on the campus of UNC, have noted with appreciation the appeal made by some residents of Chapel Hill for contributions to a humanitarian fund meant for the Indian casualties in the un-declared Indian-China war and their dependents, to be used by the government of India for non-political, non-combatant purposes. We express our grateful appreciation to these residents for such an effort to help India."

HILLEL HOUSE

Special services will be held Friday at 8 p.m. at Hillel House, in observation of the Holiday of Chanukh.

FLU SHOTS

The Infirmary urges all students who have not had flu shots to get them before the Christmas holidays. The hours are 9-11 a.m. and 2-5 p.m., Monday-Friday. There is a charge of $1 per injection.

CAMPUS CHEST INTERVIEWS

Campus Chest interviews for committee co-chairmen are being held every day this week from 4-6 and 7-9 p.m. in the Campus Chest office, upstairs in the YMCA building.

YACK PROOFS

Friday is the final day for approving Yak picture proofs or ordering copies. Proofs may be seen in the basement of GM from 1-5 p.m. each day through Friday.

CHEZ HICKORY

Chez Hickory will be at home this Saturday night after 9 to celebrate the Christmas Holidays.

AMERICAN FIELD SERVICE

There will be a meeting of the American Field Service today at 5:30 p.m. in upstairs Lenoir.

ALPHA EPSILON DELTA MEETING

Dr. George D. Penick, associate professor of Pathology at the UNC Medical School, will speak on "Pathology as a Medical Specialty" at the Alpha Epsilon Delta meeting which has been rescheduled for Monday evening, December 17, at 8 p.m. in room 226 of the UNC Medical School. All persons interested in careers in medicine or dentistry are invited to attend.

ORIENTATION INTERVIEWS

Interviews for chairman of the 1963 Fall Orientation will be held Monday from 2-4:30 p.m. Interviews will last 15 minutes. Students must sign up in advance with Miss Staples in the Student Government Offices.

FANTASTIKS

The "Fantastiks," presented by the Duke Players and the Duke Muisc department will be continued tonight thru Saturday night at Duke University. The shows will be at 8:15 p.m. in Branson Building, East Campus.

Call for reservations 681-0111, ext. 3181, from 2-5 p.m.

JUMPING GEMINIDS

It was announced today from The Morehead Planetarium that the annual shower of meteors known as the Geminids will reach its annual peak activity tonight. The "shower" will be observed as flashes of light in the sky. This astronomical phenomenon will continue for six days after December 13, rising to its peak and then fading away.

Meteors explained A. F. Jenzano, Director of The Morehead Planetarium, appear as streaks of light against the dark sky and background of stars, and are commonly called "Shooting Stars." The December 13 shower is called the Geminid shower because the meteors appear to radiate from constellation of Gemini.

An observer will normally be able to see an average of 50 meteors per hour, although visability may be hampered this year due to the light of a concurrent full moon.

Some meteors can be seen at any time during the night but the greatest number of meteors per hour is seen after midnight because then the observer is on the part of the earth that is moving toward the meteors and so "runs into them."

Conservatism And Compost, Criticism From A Distance

Any comment, regardless of its limited nature, on the conservative "position" must be prefaced with an apology of sorts. This apology must rise from the realization that to speak about the nature of conservatism without residing within that tradition is not unlike claiming to be an expert on some rare topic . . . say like fertilizer . . . without ever having dealt extensively in the matter . . . say like mixing compost.

As an outsider, how can an individual claim sufficient familiarity with the subject to justify talking about it, or, for that matter, even talking around it? In a strict sense, he cannot. And yet, if one has sampled any of the subject matter at all, he is immediately bound to form some opinion about that with which he has come into contact . . . especially when the contact has been unpleasant . . . say like the odor of compost.

The analogy seems to carry a bit further. That is, one would like to know more about the subject, yet finds any initial encounter so distasteful that he is reluctant to look into the matter any deeper, and therefore, must apologetically criticize from a distance . . . Like commenting on the texture of compost from outside the barn.

Yet such a criticism would seem to merit some consideration, in so far as it arises from a legitimate degree of contact, though the "contact" may be no more than odorous. We might also add that on occasion one is confronted with the supposed real stuff. Or at least he has the opportunity to listen to those who apparently deal in the real stuff, and thereby possibly gain insights into the matter, without actually participating in the context of the position itself.

Such "contact" might be likened to the insights gained into the nature of varying brands of fertilizer through observation of the flowers grown after different fertilizers had been used. This is sometimes the best avenue of insight; although such observation does not give direct contact with the texture and substance of a particular compost, it certainly makes comment upon the nature of the productive aspect of said fertilizer, and it would seem to provide adequate grounds for rejection or acceptance of the particular compost itself. (CW)

(This is the first of a series of editorials undertaking a discussion of conservatism . . . from a distance)

Four Years Of Whims

There is no longer a place in the world for the happy-go-lucky, I had-one-hell-of-a-good-time, college graduate.

As do all students, almost every fraternity man realizes this when he thinks about his future. But then he, as do most Carolina students, gets so bogged down in the particulars of day-to-day life, that he loses sight of his noble goal of getting an education. He goes out to the ABC store in the afternoon and swears at the interfering administration at night.

(One point should be clear. It is NOT just the fraternity man that does this . . . in fact, there is no reason to assume that he does it any more often than the non-fraternity student. The only difference is that in many fraternities it is done on a massive, organized scale.)

A fraternity, as an organized body with rules and leaders, has the inherent ability to govern itself in accordance with its broad general desires rather than being subject to the whims of a particular moment.

Think about that for a second, and then ask yourself: What would happen if each fraternity governed its activities by using its organizational "conscience" as a guide rather than the particular desires of a specific instance? What if a fraternity ran itself in accordance with the realization that each member was at school to get an education first . . . a good time second? What if the IFC governed fraternities with this in mind? What if it tried to control fraternities rather than trying to counter faculty control?

A fraternity system such as the one suggested by the above questions is hard to imagine. The contrast between it and the present system would be striking.

As the spokesman for such a system, the IFC might, on its own initiative, even pass a rule stating that if a particular fraternity failed to make a scholastic average deemed acceptable to its fellow fraternities, it would be publicly censured . . . perhaps just prior to rush.

Think about that for a second . . . and then go out to the ABC store and get that fifth . . . and then sit down and swear at the interfering faculty committee . . . get good and drunk, for what the hell, one night is nothing in relation to your life as a whole. At fifty you probably won't even remember any particular night, for by then you'll be thinking in broader, more general terms . . . you'll just remember the four years you wasted at college.

Toward A Limited Peace

Future Of U.S.-Soviet Relations?

The New Republic

Soviet behavior in Cuba and in the India-China dispute adds weight to the judgment of Louis J. Halle in The New Republic a year ago when he wrote that: "On the whole (Khruschev's) policy seems to have been one of relative moderation, and of achieving Soviet objectives by a process of growth, however forced, rather than by the dangerous shocks of war." Halle concluded that the "true interest of the United States and Russia, as represented by the responsible leadership in each country, include substantial, if unacknowledged common interests."

The over-riding common interest which "transcends, even though it does not eliminate, the divisions based on traditional differences of ideology or national interest" is the prevention of a third world war "that neither side can accept as a tolerable prospect." What highlights that common interest of Washington and Moscow is the militancy of the Chinese Communists. Belligerancy makes strange bed-fellows, as Hitler proved when he drove the Russians and the Americans into an alliance of expediency two decades ago.

* * *

IN THE 1920's "Asianism" and "anti-Asianism" had a certain vogue. Among the most eloquent advocates of the latter was Henri Massis, a French critic who, in a book called Defense of the Occident, argued that Western civilization was gravely menaced by what he called un-certain-asiatisme. Massis was barking up the wrong tree, considering as he did that the spread of such Eastern mystical creeds as Zen Buddhism was a manifestation of the coming of a new Genghis Khan. Yet some of his ideas got into the intellectual bloodstream of the West.

When Gen. DeGaulle talks about Europe—to the Urals, "more than faint traces of Massis are detectable. "Doubtless," DeGaulle has said, "although she helped implant Communism in China, Soviet Russia sees that in spite of everything, she is Russia, a white nation of Europe, conquerer of part of Asia, and after all very well off in land, mines, factories and resorces, confronted with the yellow multitude which is China—China innumerable and wretched, indestructible and ambitious, building by sheer sacrifice a power which cannot be measured and casting her eye on expenses around her over which she will one day have to spread."

* * *

SUCH VIEWS might seem old-fashioned, not to say bizarre, but for the appearance of new converts in ths USSR. Several months ago in a long essay, Ivan Maisky, former Soviet Ambassador to London, expressed the opinion that there was no good reason to celebrate Genghis Khan as a progressive hero. The anti-Genghis Khan theme was sounded again last month with the publication in the Central Soviet press of long indictments against one Tumur Ochir, a high Communist official of the Mongolian Republic who had recently been desposed. Ochir was accused, among other things, of having made a great affair in Ulan Bator of Genghis Khan's 800th birthday last June; there were mass meetings to commemorate the event, exhibitions and even postage stamps. The Chinese Communist press, on the other hand, has written at length in recent months on the positive role of that great conqueror—discredited by Mr. Maisky for having caused so much suffering. The Genghis Khan controversy is minor, but it is another sign of the ever-widening dispute.

"Thanks, Boys"

As the Albanian serve as the whipping boy of the Russian faction, the Yugoslavs serve the same purpose for the Chinese and their satellites. These accusations by proxy sometimes border on the ridiculous, such as the Chinese rebuking the "Tito Clique" for supporting India. In fact, Belgrade has been extremely cagey. Instead of backing their neutralist ally Nehru, they implicitly condemned India for not accepting the Chinese conditions. But then the Chinese could not care less about the Yugoslavs. They are speaking about the Russians, and they are speaking to Asians and Africans and Latin Americans. And with some effect.

PEKING IS emerging from its conflict with India less isolated than many observers expected. The Chinese have had on their side not only the Far Eastern Communist Parties (Viet Minh, North Korea, Indonesia) but also some of the other Asian parties (Ceylon, Iraq, Burma), some of the Latin American groups, and even certain voices in Europe. In Britian, the Communist leader Palme Dutt (himself of Indian origin) has been an enemy of Mr. Nehru for a great many years. Pro-Peking sentiment has appeared in Communist circles in Sweden and Belgium. These gains cannot be shrugged off by Moscow, for if they multiply the Russians may find that their direct influence has been effectively confined to Europe, the Middle East and North Africa. Yet what can Khrushchev do about it?

The simple truth is that a nation like China, with over 700 million people, is bound to be powerful. The Chinese Communist will, of course, carry weight with parties geographically near, who are afraid, or with countries that have been slighted by Russian (Albania), or with parties that feel they get insufficient Soviet assistance. (Cuba and other Latin American Parties may come to belong to this category.) The Chinese blood-and-thunder language is for obvious reasons more appealing to many Communists in newly-emergent have-not countries than Khrushchev's comparatively cautious line. Not because they are purer "Marxist-Leninists," but because they are more easily excited by nationalist passions. It is not surprising that the "new Communists" around Fidel Castro who are replacing the Moscow-oriented "Old Guard" Communists in Cuba are attracted by militant Chinese rhetoric.

* * *

EVEN IF the Russian leaders are very patient men, even if they know that an open break with Peking would be a disaster, there is a limit to the provocations they will be able to stand. The Chinese may for a time refrain from aggravating the conflict further, yet in the last resort their aspirations to lead an Afro-Asian-Latin American Communist bloc cannot be concealed. In these circumstances the "proletarian internationalism" of the Soviet leaders is sorely tired; they must ask themselves how much they still have in common with parties and men who pay lip service to Lenin but who, in practice, would dangerously upset the delicate East-West balance of power; who are strongly motivated by nationalist or pan-Asian considerations; and who seem more interested in the establishment of an ex-Colonial International than in building a Communist society as the Russians envisage it. The Russians can make some political and ideological concessions to the militants, but they cannot change the color of their skin, nor can they easily adapt themselves to the psychology of ex-Colonials. A change of leadership in Moscow may temporarily delay an open rupture, but hardly for long; the conflict was not caused by personal antagonism between Mao and Khrushchev and cannot be expected to disappear under their successors.

To what extent can Western policy in this 'climactic period" anticipate and profit from these developments? This is surely one of the questions that the President had very much on his mind during his talk last week with Mr. Mikoyan. The President is aware that the Soviet leaders have shown a higher level of maturity and political realism than the Castros and the Moas ("reason, a sense of responsibility and flexibility," as Khrushchev put it to Ambassador Foy Kohler).

A DECADE or two may pass before the world will have to face the Chinese problem in all its gravity; yet it should be possible, in anticipation, to start now to remove some of the main obstacles in the way of a limited Soviet-American understanding. New Western initiatives to overcome the neurotic Soviet resistance to inspection and control of disarmament might not succeed, but the West can afford to be quite generous in its proposals. The balance of nuclear power being what it is, the US can afford to take certain risks in the first stages of unclear disarmament. So long as it is allowed to preserve an invulnerable second-strike force of submarines and hardened ICBM's, the US does not need a "foolproof" inspection system guaranteed to ferret out every last Soviet missile. That can wait until later stages of disarmament when the success of the first stages will, presumably, have increased confidence in the operation. Agreement on Berlin seems far from promising at present, but by 1964 some of the more inflexible gentlemen on the West German side who are afraid of any change at all will have retired. Ulbricht, too, one may hope, will be swept away by one of the recurrent waves of de-Stalinization in Eastern Europe. A reapprochement may then be easier.

There ought to be no illusions; even a limited understanding between Russia and the West will presuppose a change in Soviet thinking: the West cannot continue to be the enemy par excellence. Nevertheless, there are straws in the wind—over and above Soviet repudiation of Genghis Khan as a "progressive figure." More and more often Soviet spokesmen are arguing that regardless of social and political differences, Russia is part of the mainstream of Europe's cultural tradition. The last number of the monthly "Problems of History" contains what is a fairly typical article: a bitter polemic against German and emigre Russian writers (of the Eurasian school) who have juxtaposed Russia to Europe in their theoretical constructions and who claim that Russia really has belonged to Asia all along. We do not know to what extent the leaders in the Kremlin are influenced by such considerations: but most members of the younger generation in Russia are. It is with that generation in mind that one can speak with guarded hope of a limited peace.

REFLECTIONS

Reflections on name changes for University branches:

—Cow College is trying to become Moo U.

—Why not a "University of North Carolina at Fuquay-Varina" or a "University of North Carolina at Kannapolis" while we're at this game of name-changing and university-beginning'.

"Khrushchev clearly does not want to die and neither do we, and thus we have something very important in common."—Max Frankel in Reporter magazine

The Most Unforgettable.... Fire Trucks And Pearl Harbor

(Subtitled, "Character Study of a Nut—Who May Not Be Such a Nut.")

By EUSTACE MILLER

You've probably never heard of Dave Brady; you probably never will; but then again you might. He is a frustrated young journalist with a dream, a wild fantastic dream. He wants to change the world. His route to the realization of this dream is poorly-plotted; his every move is nourished on sheer drive, a super-salesman gift of gab, and an intense desire to prove to the world that it needs Dave Brady.

Dave Brady is an angry young man, a nut, perhaps even a madman—but he has an emotion-stirring nervous sincerity that wins even the most dubious hearts. He is a talker par excellence; spouting forth foolish plans and dreams with such unwavering confidence that the listener (though aware that without some miraculous stroke of luck Dave Brady will end up as most dreamers, sweeping up the pieces of one and building another) feels a touch of admiration or perhaps even envy for the skinny bundle of nerves with the lightning tongue, for the weird non-conformist who at least has a dream, a cause, even if he falls flat on his face in pursuit of it.

Among the ingredients of his dream is a desire (probably fostered by incessant rejection slips) to prove that experience is not a vital criterion for an effective journalist. Dave Brady's by-word is "hustle" and for him this is a quality far more necessary than experience; it is basically THE quality that makes Dave Brady go—the drive, the sincerity, the confident taking of one foolish step from small-time journalist to nation-wide reformer (or fool).

In the past week he has swept through Chapel Hill, momentarily the day-to-day lives of several people altered and has distributed the peace of mind of a great many more people, including the editors of twenty-three state newspapers, University President Friday and a good portion of the United States Navy.

* * *

FOLLOWING is a somewhat chronological, somewhat logical presentation of thoughts and facts about this Brady fellow, for the information of anyone who might in the future come within the broad sweep of his careening path.

For instance, he made mention of a rival wire service and of his ultimate dream—a publishing house to publish anything and everything; a publishing house without rejection slips. Admittedly both ideas are foolish; not thought out, but Dave Brady never stops to think; he writes, talks, and acts with the same reckless abandon; and it is not really so much in his dream as in Dave Brady the person that the interest lies. He has always managed to do unusual things. While serving in the army at Fort Jackson, S. C., he and a friend were responsible for killing a large holly tree.

To cover up the accident, Brady periodically sprayed the tree with green paint until discharged from the army about a month later. If you have recently lost a fire engine, you might contact Mr. Brady; he collects them. He is a skilled rebuilder of cars and was for several years a NASCAR driver. In Columbia, S. C., last year Brady ran a service station, flanked on one side by his collection of cars to be rebuilt and on the other by his collection of fire engines. However, Brady seldom had any gas at the station to sell.

And on and off student at UNC for the past 8 years, Dave Brady returned to the campus Sunday night and bombarded several people with his far-fetched proposals. Talking to some of those who lent their ear to Brady's dream, I was amazed by their complete enthusiasm for Brady; they were completely overwhelmed by his scheme, his enthusiasm, his personality but neither of them could convey a coherent impression of just exactly what Brady intends to do or what he wanted them to do for him. In general it seems that Brady has concocted a series of publicity stunts designed to allow him to scoop national wire services and to make Dave Brady a big name in the field of journalism.

* * *

THE FIRST of these proposed stunts has character and is the only one which is even half sensible. A feature article under his name appeared in the Sunday Dec. 9th edition of the Gastonia Gazette. The feature was a patriotic, flag-waving bit of journalism, but it has possibilities. It seems that recently a memorial has been erected at Pearl Harbor in honor of those slain there during the Japanese attack on Dec. 7, 1941. Brady points out (and he is probably not the first to do so) that due to a technicality the names of 54 crew members of the target ship Utah have been omitted from the memorial. Here is a moving little story, filled with human interest, romantic and sentimental touches. It has even been conjectured that the lowly Utah may have been torpeded and sunk only because the Japs mistook her for the mighty carrier, Saratoga. Such points make the story of the Utah journalistically valuable and interesting. Brady purportedly offered his Utah feature to the national wire services and received only another in a long line of rejections. Having finally published the story in the Gastonia Gazette (complete with a green headline on the front page,) Brady decided to elaborate on it a bit.

He made plans to go to Honolulu and personally paint (in green) the 54 names on the hull of the Utah (a pretty good stunt, considering that the Utah is probably still under water). Actually, he hopes that he will be prevented from painting the names so that he can vehemently protest and be seen as patriotic and persecuted Dave Brady, martyr for honesty.

If stopped he proposes to leave the country, professing loudly as he goes his undying patriotism, planning to run his organization from abroad. Not a bad stunt. (personally, I think it would be better to try to paint the names on the new memorial.) There are other minor facets to the stunt, but in general that is the gist of giant step No. 1 in the rise of Dave Brady.

During his Sunday night jaunt through Chapel Hill he hoped to convince one student in particular to sell the campus on Dave Brady and the UTAH mission. This student was assigned the task of having 300 or 4000 students send one 3c postcard each to the Gastonia Gazette saying "jam-up (on the Dave Brady article.)" Not convinced that this would prove to the world that his old alma mater was behind him, he attempted to sell a co-editor of the DTH. The editor, not being thoroughly sold, decided to sit back and wait for "instructions." So far Brady has been silent. Apparently he wanted the DTH to promote his trek to Honolulu for which the newspaper would receive political cartoons and occasional articles—all for free.

STILL NOT sure that UNC was behind him, Dave Brady called President Friday at 4 a.m. Monday morning in a last minute effort to gain support. President Friday remained unimpressed. Still no one understood.

Other schemes proposed by Mr. Brady include such things as a press conference with Richard Nixon to prove that the press can be kind, and an interview with ex-President Harry Truman in his library at Independence, Mo., as part of a series on Library's Knowledge for everyone. (His theme is the little man. Brady has supposedly purchased an airplane to be used in an subsequent invasion of Cuba. The fact that he knows nothing about flying a plane seemed immaterial. He plans simply to write "experimental" on the side of the plane and fly it anyway.

He has driven all over the country in a blue T-bird with an illegal license plate, and a personal photographer-friend to snap pictures of all the policemen who look at the plate and fail to question its validity. (just what Brady hopes to prove by this little gem has thus far eluded my comprehension).

Other facets of his character include T-birds with phones for each of his staff members. His staff consists of some ten or more people he has purportedly influenced to leave their jobs and join his new-born dynasty.

In conjunction with the phone-equipped T-birds, Brady plans to buy five planes on his way through Texas to Honolulu to do the paint job. These will be used to speed up his wire service operation. As for money, Brady said he would establish a reputation as being so honest that he would merely walk into any bank and order the cash, period. He believed he could do it, and was almost convincing in his belief. He also proposed to humiliate a leading state official by (as he phrased it with a gleam in his eye) "leaving him at the alter." What he intends to do is still uncertain but it seems to revolve around the UTAH mission.

HIS DEFIANT audacity is amazing; in addition to phoning the President of the Consolidated University at 4 a.m., Brady has re-

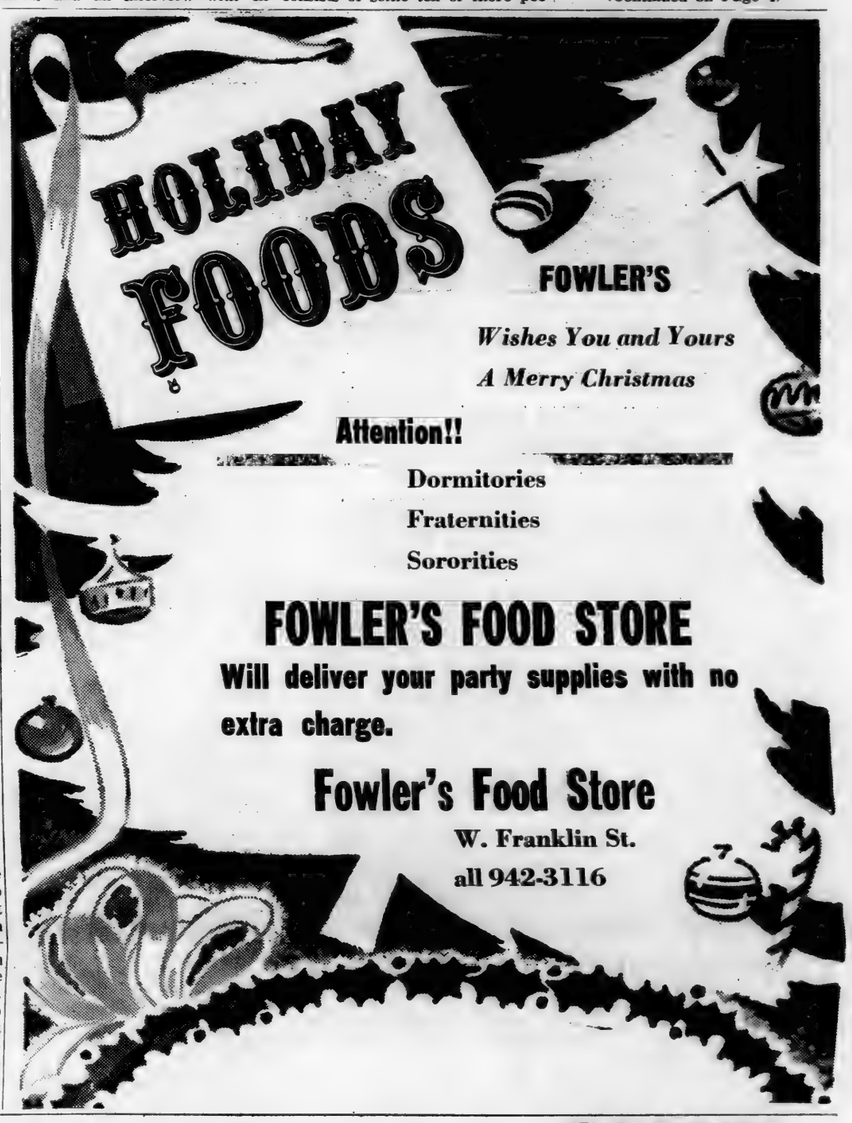
Human Mind Is Explored In 'Year'

(Last Year at Marienbad is now playing at the Rialto "Art" Theater in Durham. Today is the last day.)



By JOE WILLIMAN

"A stranger wanders from one salon to another — alternately full of elegant guests, or empty — open doors, bumps into mirrors, follows endless corridors. His ears register snatches of phrases, chance words. His eyes shift from one nameless face to another. But he keeps returning to the face of a young woman, a beautiful perhaps still living prisoner of this golden cage. And so he offers her the impossible, what seems most impossible in this labyrinth where time is apparently abolished: he offers her a past, a future and freedom. He tells her that he and she have already met the year before, that they have fallen in love, that he has now come to a rendezvous she herself had arranged, and that he is going to take her away with him."

With this brief sketch, Alain Robbe-Grillet outlines the 'story' which occurs in his film-play "Last Year at Marienbad". Almost universally acclaimed as an incalculable advance in the film, "Last Year" suffers at the basic level of the individual viewer who is experientially predisposed to a horrifying extent by the American film tradition. Often this Viewer is lost at the first alteration of the 'present-action' chronology. When one of the characters imagines or remembers a scene, this Viewer is not prepared to be presented with what is, in effect, one of the most basic and natural, and thus most miraculous, of the functions of the human mind: imagination, memory, the faculty of transcending the immediate.

It is somewhat less surprising that European audiences have welcomed, imitated, and intensively reviewed this film. It is a marvelously executed and brilliantly conceived work of art, whose creators, 'new novelist' Alan Robbe-Grillet and director Alain Resnais, have had the vision and directness to proceed in directions not often touched. These resources, such as the graphic presentation of the situation in psychological terms, or the analysis of 'interior chronolgy', have scarcely ever been used so extensively or so well. But despite this tremendous advance, the film is not nearly as cerebral as the American Viewer may brush it off as being. The shock, and thus the point of departure for him, is not the complexity, as he believes, but the undisguised, lyric presentation.

Jean-Paul Sartre has made an observation on the artist-audience relationship in his "What is Literature?" which is apropos: "If the author existed he would be able to write as much as he liked; the work as object would never see the light of day and he would either have to put down his pen or despair. But the operation of writing implies that of reading as its dialetical correlative and these two connected acts necessitate two distinct agents. It is the conjoint effort of author and reader which brings upon the scene that concrete and imaginary object which is the work of the mind. There is no art except by and for others. . . . You are perfectly free to leave that book on the table. But if you open it, you assume responsibility for it." I hope that the same is true for the film as an art form.

LAUNDERNAUT

A Vanderbilt University freshman, David Olive, proclaimed himself the "world's top laundernaut" after 430 revolutions inside an automatic laundry dryer.

"As far as I know I hold the highest orbit total in the nation," the 18-year-old Memphis student said, noting that he eclipsed the previous known record of 301 claimed by a student at Lehigh University.

RE-ENTER NDEA

Oberlin and Colby Colleges have re-entered the National Defense Education Act student loan program.

Both schools had steadfastly refused to participate in the old program, which required non-Communist affidavits and disclaimer oaths of students applying for loans.

The 87th Congress removed the disclaimer and revised the entire act in one of its last actions before adjournment.

POWDER PUFF BOWL

The second annual "Powder Puff' bowl recently was held at LSU between Zeta Tau Alpha and Sigma Kappa who won 7-0.

Before the game most of the girls seemed to be afraid of the contact they anticipated, but they lost this attitude once the game got under way. In fact many of the plays ended with the girls being tackled rather than touched.

One girl sustained a very bad bite on her right index finger. Another stepped into a chuck hole and sprained her ankle.

RIOT CHARGES DISMISSED

Eleven students, charged with illegal assembly in the October 13th riots after the Notre Dame-Wisconsin football game, had charges against them dismissed last week in Dane County Court.

Originally the university students had been suspended from school, pending action by Dane County Court and Student Court. The suspension had been lifted.

The disturbances involved a panty raid at one dormitory and an attempted break-in at another.

Two of the students were arrested while trying to open the door of the paddy wagon which picked up the arrested students.

His dream cannot be formulated, but what dream can? It rolls from his mouth in bits and snatches, brought forth by emotion, specifically anger—that anger peculiar to those who are told they are not good enough in what they try to do. Whether his dream is really only a private semi-disguised attempt to strike back at the journalistic world for failing to recognize what Dave Brady considers true talent (and even he would admit that it is this in part) or whether he sincerely wants to provide opportunities for young struggling writers which were unavailable to him is a question that only Dave Brady can answer in the pursuit of his "dream."

ADOPT ANTI-BIAS RESOLUTION

The Interfraternity Council of Union College last week adopted a resolution offered by Phi Delta Theta recommending that the school prohibit further initiations by social groups with written discriminatory clauses, after December, 1964.

Phi Delta Theta is the only group on the campus with such a clause.

Carolina-Duke Tag Champs To Hold Game

Carolina and Duke intramural football champions will meet in Duke Stadium Saturday in a contest sponsored by the Campus Chest organizations on the two campuses.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Carolina champions, will be matched against the Duke champions, Phi Delta Theta. Half of the game will be played by Duke's intramural rules and half by Carolina's.

Each team will be coached by two members of the regular coaching staff of the schools. The coaches' names have not yet been announced.

Gametime will be 3 p.m. There will be an admission charge of 50 cents at the main gate of the stadium, proceeds from which will be divided between the two Campus Chests.

Van Oatts, co-chairman of Campus Chest, said that a similar contest between the intramural basketball champions may be held later in the year.

Students Call Buckley 'Funny', 'Dynamic', 'Awful'

By PATTI PERRIN

Reactions to Conservative magazine editor William Buckley's speech here Monday night ran the gamut from "dynamic" to "funny."

Campus controversy shifted from liberal subjects to the conservative William Buckley, editor of National Review, who spoke to a crowd of 900 Monday night.

Virginia Carnes interviewed Buckley and found him "a very dynamic speaker."

Bob Rearden, president of Graham Memorial, said, "I thought he was one of the most articulate speakers I have ever heard. I admire, very much his keen mind. I was disappointed that he changed the topic of his speech but the question and answer period was most beneficial. His views have a sound basis."

Mickey Simmons, chairman of the Toronto Exchange, commented, "I thought he was awful. You will find the best expression of my views in Wayne King's editorial."

Daily Tar Heel Photographer Jim Wallace hadn't heard the speech but, "I'm going to buy PLAYBOY MAGAZINE so I can read it."

Patti Perrin, Carolina Forum member, thought there had been an unballanced majority of liberal speakers. "I am glad to see the ballance being redressed."

Daily Tar Heel Editor Jim Clotfelter smiled and said, "I enjoyed him. I always enjoy people who say funny things."

NSA coordinator Harry DeLung, who also writes for the DTH commented on the expenditures, "I think we should have taken the $450 spent on Buckley and buy PLAYBOY for those who attended his speech."

Walter Dellinger, chairman of Men's Honor Council, commented, "Most of my conservative friends were disappointed. I think there is a positive Conservative position, but I don't think Buckley's expressing it."

Diane Hile, a journalism student, felt that he "didn't give enough of the conservative views and that he took too many pot shots at Mailer. Too many of his views were negative rather than positive."

Paul Smith, owner of the Intimate Bookstore, said that a conservative was "just the thing the campus needs to pull it together."

Business Fraternity Initiates 4

Beta Gamma Sigma, National honor society for students in business administration, initiated four members in evening ceremonies Tuesday.

Those students receiving this scholastic honor were Sherril M. Capps Main Street, Clayton, N. C., Allan V. Palmer, Savanna Illinois, Carol D. Vinson, Murfreesboro, N. C., and Ben S. Willis, Jr., 916 Kenleigh Cr., Winston Salem, N. C.

For eligibility in Beta Gamma Sigma, a student in Business Administration must have achieved an average as a Junior of 3.5 under the new quality point system or an average as a senior of 3.3 under the new quality point system. In terms of past student bodies, about three per cent of the Junior class is eligible for election to the society.

Dean Carlyle J. Sitterson addressed the initiates and current members of the society at a banquet held at the Carolina Inn immediately after the initiation ceremonies.

Current officers of the society of Beta Gamma Sigma are Scott Newton Brown — Student President, David L. Cohen — Student Secretary, Robert Roark — Student Treasurer, Prof. I. N. Reynolds — Faculty President, and Prof. Richard Levin — Faculty Secretary.

The national organization of Beta Gamma Sigma had its origin on Feb. 26, 1913, at the Univ. of Wisconsin. Membership is limited to those students who demonstrate superiority in those traits which a college education in business should develop. The purpose of the association is to encourage and reward scholarship and accomplishment in the field of business studies among students and graduates of collegiate schools of business; to promote the advancement and spread of education in the science of business and to foster principles of honesty and integrity in business practice.

PAYROLLS UP

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Nov. farm payroll employment set a November record and average hourly earnings of factory workers crept up by a penny to another new high, the Labor Department reported Tuesday.

Its monthly survey of the employment picture found the work week lengthening in November, a month in which it usually grows shorter.

Developments reported by the department were pretty much in line with normal seasonal changes and indicated no particular strength or weakness in the economy.

The number of persons on nonfarm payrolls fell by exactly 100,000 as the onset of cold weather curtailed outdoor work, such as lumber and construction, and food processing.

There were 56.2 million presons in non-farm wage and salary jobs last month, a record for any November and a solid 1.1 million more than in November, 1961.

Morehead To Give Organ Concerts

A series of free organ concerts will be presented at the Morehead Plantarium Dec. 15-19.

The program, which is being presented by the planetarium in cooperation with the W. R. Murray Co. of Durham, will be by Donald S. Hall, Planetarium staff member and musician.

His selections will include popular and Christmas music.

The concerts will start promptly at 7:45 each evening and end in time to seat those members of the audience who will want to attend the Planetarium program, "Star of Bethlehem."

Mr. Hall recently joined the Morehead staff after his graduation from Stetson University of DeLand, Fla., where he received his degree in education.

Prof Aids Congress

The Joint Economic Committee of the Congress has just released a paper prepared for the Committee by Professor James C. Ingram of the Department of Economics here. This paper, "A Proposal for Financial Integration in the Atlantic Community," is one of a series to be discussed December 12-14 in Hearings before the Subcommittee on International Exchange and Payments. Professor Ingram is one of fifteen economists who were invited to prepare papers for this Hearing.

Professor Ingram teaches courses in international economics at the University and is also Managing Editor of the Southern Economic Journal. He is the author of two books and numerous articles in professional journals.

WALLACE AT WASHINGTON

Dr. Wesley H. Wallace of UNC is completing a special two-week course at the Foreign Service Institute in Washington, D. C.

Dr. Wallace is acting chairman of the Department of Radio, Television, and Motion Pictures and acting director of the Communications Center at UNC.

A Lieutenant-Colonel in the Army Active Reserve, Dr. Wallace teaches special courses on tours of duty with the Army and has been an instructor at the Command and General Staff School. He is receiving special orientation on foreign affairs as they affect military deployment and instruction.

SEYMOUR APPOINTED

Benjamin D. Seymour has been appointed as the assistant director of the Office of Records and Registration of the University of North Carolina as of October 1.

Seymour graduated from UNC in July, 1962, with a B.S. in Business Administration. He majored in personnel management.

RESERVE UNIT HONORED

James E. Wadsworth, commanding officer of the U. S. Naval Reserve Research Co. 6-6 here, received a first place award on behalf of the reserve unit's general excellence in district wide competition in the sixth Naval district.

Commander Wadsworth, who is the director of housing at the University of North Carolina, received a plaque at exercises here this week from Commander R. N. Jennings of the Office of Naval Research, Washington, D. C. The local reserve unit comprises the Chapel Hill-Durham area with headquarters in Chapel Hill.

The plaque is inscribed to Cmdr. Wadsworth and reads: "Award for first place and general excellence in district wide competition sixth Naval district."

NAME CHANGE

To keep pace with trends in environmental health and to better describe the nature of educational, research and service programs offered by it, the Department of Sanitary Engineering in the School of Public Health has been changed to the "Department of Environmental Sciences and Engineering."

In announcing the name change, Dr. Daniel A. Okun, head of the department, explained that the term "Sanitary Engineering" had become far to restrictive for the broadened program, which includes work in air pollution, radiation, and a number of new fields beyond the early, conventional work of the department. It was particularly inapt, he said, for those who enter the field from a professional background other than engineering.

Faculty members of the English Department have published ten books during 1962.

Since 1959, this prolific faculty's publications number twenty-five. Ten of these publications are credited to Dr. C. Hugh Holman, Kenan Professor of English, who has recently been named Dean of the Gradaute School.

Other faculty members of the English Department who have published are: Assistant Professor Samuel G. Barnes, Kenan Professor Richmond P. Bond, Acting Assistant Professor William A. Coles, Prof. Norman E. Eliason, Associate Professor O. B. Hardison, Professor and Chairman of the faculty George M. Harper, Kenan Professor Dougald MacMillan, Assistant Professor James B. Meriwether, Lecturer Jessie Rehder, Prof. Robert B. Sharpe, Prof. Ernest W. Talbert, and Associate Professor Robert B. Voitle.

How Bad Is A Bad Check?

Student Opinion Varies

By PETE WALES

"My God, I've done it myself."

This was a student's reaction to the bill before student legislature tonight that would make passing bad checks an honor code offense.

Under it, a student who bounces two bad checks in a school year for any reason would be tried by the Honor Council.

How do students feel about this?

Walter Dellinger, Chairman of the Men's Honor Council, said, "I don't when the council would have time to try every student who cashes two bad checks. We are having to split in half, and on occasion meet two nights a week, to try major Honor Code and Campus Code offenses as it is. I would like to see this handled by the bad check committee."

"I'm not in favor of it," said another student. "You can very easily cash two checks in one day without knowing you haven't any money in the bank. It would certainly be unjust."

"I'm definitely in favor of it," said a freshman football player. "If it is consciously a bad check, this has to be taken into consideration."

"Who's To Determine?"

George Bensch, a member of the Men's Honor Council, said that "Immediately there comes to light obvious fallacies which are present in such an enactment. For instance, who is to determine at what value a bad check must be to warrant a student's classification as either an honest or dishonest man?

Tar Heels Wrestle The Citadel Tonight

By JOEL BULKLEY

"Four matches could have gone either way Monday night and they did, consequently we suffered a one-sided 23-5 defeat at the hands of the Citadel," so lamented varsity wrestling coach Sam Barnes yesterday.

The varsity will end its pre-hristmas season tonight at 8 o'clock in Woollen Gym in a match with the grapplers from Davidson. Carolina will be seeking its first win of the campaign after two successive setbacks.

Jerry Cabe, who pinned his opponent in the unlimited division in the last match Monday, was the only Tar Heel to win against the Citadel. The 5-10, 195-pound junior from Brevard, N. C. also recorded one of UNC's two wins in its season opener, as Washington & Lee humbled the varsity, 19-8.

Coach Barnes commented that the team is still developing and will certainly be a good one by the time the ACC tournament rolls around in March. He noted that acting-captain Willis Johnson, in the 147-pound class, and Elliott Dworin, in the 167-pound division, both turned in creditable performances Monday night.

Barnes added that take-downs hurt him the most against the Citadel. They had six, while UNC collected only two during the course of the whole match, thus giving them the necessary points to win individual matches—which in turn added three points to their team score. Only one Carolina man was pinned.

Well, "three" may or may not be the lucky number tonight for the personable professor and wrestling coach. Barnes will try something different—he plans to use the same starting combination that he has in the past two matches, something he has never done before in his 13 years at the helm of the wrestling team.

Tonight's starters include: 123—Joel Fishman; 130—John Moser; 137—Henry Foscue; 147—Willis Johnson; 157—Bill Woodall; 167—Elliott Dworin; 177—Gene Record and Unlimited—Jerry Cabe.

Lacey Sparks Parker Victory In Tournament

By STUART BALL

Old East and Parker rolled over their respective opponents in Grail Mural basketball play Tuesday to advance to the semi-final round of the tournament.

For Old East, a balanced attack led by Rusty Hodges's 10 points subdued a Manly crew, 50-37. Dick Prindle, also scoring 10 points, was high man for Manly.

In the Parker contest Bob Lacey, George Boutselis, and Gene Sigmon all hit double figures and led a trounce of the Chi Psi Blues, 55-29. Lacey stuffed in 19 points and Boutsellis and Sigmon each accounted for 13. John Angell was high man for Chi Psi with 13 points.

Old East and Parker will square off against each other next Monday evening at 7 o'clock in Woollen Gym for the semi-final round, and the upper bracket championship. The winner of the upper bracket will meet the winner of the lower bracket in the championship round on Tuesday night.

In the lower bracket Kappa Sig, Beta, Phi Delt, and Teague all advanced to the quarterfinals by virtue of their Tuesday wins.

Kappa Sig nipped the Craige B-1 team, 27-23, as Clayton Burns led the way with 10 points. John Jones was top man for Craige with 7 points. In the Teague-Chi Phi contest, Junior Edge and Charlie Price each accounted for 11 points and led the way to a 29-26 Teague win. Tom Clark scored 12 points in the losing cause.

Beta and Phi Kappa Sigma combined to give the day's lowest scoring game and a 19-13 Beta win. John Currie led the winners with 8 points.

Phi Delt-2 and SAE Blue fought a nip and tuck battle with the Phi Delts finally coming out on the top end of a 26-20 score. Butch Winstead paced the Phi Delt scorers with 14 points. Frank Martin was high man on the SAE team with 10.

Baker Named Top Player

NEW YORK (UPI)—Terry Baker, who came to Oregon State on a basketball scholarship and stayed to rewrite school football records, Wednesday climaxed a season of success and honors by being named "Player of the Year" for 1962 by United Press International.

The lefthanded quarterback was an overwhelming choice for this coveted title, receiving 152 votes in the nationwide balloting of sportscasters. Tackle Bobby Bell of Minnesota was the distant runnerup with 40 votes.

Baker, a 21-year-old senior from Portland, Ore., didn't play freshman football but wasted little time in retouching the record books once he suited up in 1960.

Students Demonstrate, Want McGuire For Athletic Head

By ED DUPREE

Carolina students demonstrated again last night—but this time the demonstration was not against segregation or folk singers.

A group of UNC students picketed for a new athletic director during the Alumni-Varsity basketball game last night. Leaders of the group have Frank McGuire in mind for the job, replacing Charles P. (Chuck) Erickson.

Erickson has been connected with athletics at UNC in one way or another for more than 30 years. He was a star halfback on Carolina football teams that were noted for fine backs and also lettered in track.

Mr. Erickson graduated from Carolina with a B.S. degree in 1931 and has worked in the athletic department since then, except for two years in business and a brief tour with the Navy.

In 1952 he succeeded Bob Fetzer as Director of Athletics and has held the position since.

Leaders of the "McGuire for Athletic Director" group are Bubba Fountain, a junior, and Turner Bunn, a senior.

Fountain said yesterday, "I think the whole athletic department is on the downgrade. A man like McGuire, who can recruit and is respected by athletes and everyone, is what we and the interested alumni are looking for to accelerate our athletic program."

The spokesman for the group, which numbers better than 300 students, pointed out that they are not looking for a new basketball coach.

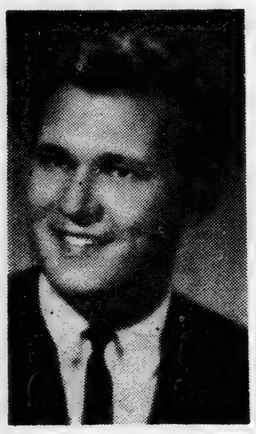
"Dean Smith is more than capable of handling the job" was the opinion expressed by Fountain.

"Most of us are behind McGuire because he is a gentleman. He's never conducted himself in a way other than that of a gentleman.

"His good name would put him in a position to get things done at Carolina."

McGuire came to UNC in 1953 and had only one losing season in eight years. His 1957 team won 32 straight games and the NCAA championship.

He left Carolina in 1961 to coach the Philadelphia Warriors of the National Basketball Association, but left that position earlier this year. Since then his name has been linked with rumors concerning coaching positions at South Carolina and East Carolina.



Former UNC Grid Star

Ed Sutton To Be Doctor

Ed Sutton, who soared to athletic fame as "The Cullowhee Comet" during the past decade, becomes Doctor Sutton next Sunday, December 16, when the Medical College of the University of Tennessee at Memphis awards him a doctor of medicine degree.

His name became something of a legend in North Carolina, especially in his native mountain region, while he was still a student at the University of North Carolina. He enrolled there as a freshman in the fall of 1953 under a Morehead Scholarship, one of the first group of eleven undergraduates to win this coveted honor.

Sutton had played football at Sylva High School during his senior year (the Cullowhee school does not have a football team), and went out for sports at UNC as a freshman. In his sophomore year, he made headlines all over the state with three touchdowns against Wake Forest, and from then on, Sutton was the man to look for at a UNC game. In his University career, he lettered in football, baseball, basketball, and track, and served as team captain in football.

ED SUTTON

Not once did Sutton let up in his academic endeavors, even during his strenuous football career. He received the M. T. Blassingham Trophy, presented to him following the 1955 Oyster Bowl Game, in recognition of his scholastic as well as athletic prowess. He was no stranger to the Dean's List at UNC, and earned honors too numerous to mention in citizenship, scholarship, and athletics.

In his last year at UNC, he won both the E. Carrington Smith "most valuable player" award and the William F. Prouty Memorial Trophy for "general excellence in athletics and all phases of campus life." He was also tapped for the Order of the Golden Fleece, and was named permanent vice-president of the Class of 1957.

Newspapers and magazines all over the nation have chronicled Sutton's impressive career in professional football: with the Washington Redskins in 1957, 1958, and 1959, New York Giants in 1960, and Green Bay Packers in 1961. In off-seasons, he attended UT Medical School, where he has followed his established pattern of excellence. Immediately following graduation there, he will go to Cottage Hospital in Santa Barbara, Calif., for his internship.

Now 27, he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph C. Sutton of Cullowhee, and is married to the former Miss Carol Mazuzan of Crown Point, N. Y.

Ed Sutton's entire career to date can best be expressed by using the words of the citation when he was tapped for the Golden Fleece: ". . . exhibitor of high excellence in scholarship, athletics, and sportsmanship. An athlete and a gentleman in whom all Carolina takes pride."

- How Bad -

Or how many bad checks must be cashed before the council can declare that malice was intended? In addition, some students are just naturally poor mathematicians, and since when is an inability in math a travesty of honor?"

"It is awfully hard to determine what is a bad check," said one senior. "But the bill has possibilities."

Kemp Battle Nye, a leading merchant, offered another definition of bad checks. "If a student has money in the bank but not enough to cover the check, this is not a bad check.

"If he doesn't even have an account with the bank, it's a bad check and it's a crime.

"I think some one who passes a bad check should be kicked out of school, prosecuted and run out of town."

On checks that bounce because of "insufficient funds," Kemp charges the offender an extra $2 no matter what the size of the check.

Many students feel that the Honor Councils should not be required to handle the cases.

"I'm in favor of the idea, but not in favor of making it an honor code offense," said one student leader. "The Honor Council would get too many bad check cases."

"I dont want us to have it," said a member of the Women's Honor Council. "If it's a really tremendous offense, then we should have it, but there will be too many little cases that will make us look petty."

"If it's in the hands of the students," said one coed, "then I'm in favor of it. But I don't want it in the hands of the administration."

Red Trial Reaches Jury As Acquittal Is Denied

Party's Pleas Turned Down By U.S. Judge

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A federal judge denied a defense motion for acquittal Thursday after both sides rested their cases in the trial of the Communist party of the United States on charges of failing to register with the government.

District Judge Alexander Holtzoff rejected the party's contention that it would be incriminating itself if it registered as an agent of the Sovet Union.

The judge then excused the jury until 10 a.m. EST Monday, when it will return to begin deliberations. Holtzoff said he would decide at that time what legal questions would be submitted to the panel.

Termination of testimony, on this third day of the trial, came as a surprise.

Justice Department attorney Kirk Maddrix had said earlier he would call a Hungarian freedom fighter to help build his case against the party. But he said during a brief recess that no further testimony was needed, due to the fact that party attorneys had agreed to several facts.

One of these facts, entered Thursday, was that the party at no time made any effort to register under orders of the subversive activities control board.

The government rested after cross-examining Will Lissner, a reporter for the New York Times. During Thursday's one-hour session the witness produced a notebook in which he said he took down verbatim a press conference held by party Chairman Gus Hall in 1961.

Lissner testified Wednesday that Hall told newsmen the organization had no intention of complying with the registration order, contending this would be "suicide."

For 'Vulgarity, Poor Taste'

Di-Phi Censures Buckley

By HUBERT HAWKINS

The Dialectic-Philanthropic Literary Society took action Tuesday night to censure visiting speaker William Buckley for comments of "poor taste" in his recent address at Memorial Hall.

The Society voted to table the bill of the evening, a resolution for the admission of women students to men's dormitory rooms during specified hours. This bill had been introduced by Conditional Representative Chuck Neely.

Four speakers against the bill cited the moral and mechanical impracticality of allowing girls into the dorm rooms at UNC. Neely supported the proposal, emphasizing the need for student maturity and freedom, and for better social conditions on campus.

Following debate on the bill of the evening, Rep. Glenn Johnson made a motion to censure all members of the Society who participated in a standing ovation at the close of William Buckley's speech the night before.

Strong debate then ensued. After much amendment the body voted for the motion, drafted as follows:

A RESOLUTION TO CENSURE WILLIAM BUCKLEY:

BE IT RESOLVED by the Dialectic-Philanthropic Literary Society of the University of North Carolina that:

ARTICLE I. This body censures Mr. William Buckley for the use of vulgarity and poor taste in his presentation to the Students of the University of North Carolina on the night of December 10, 1962.

ARTICLE II. Copies of this resolution shall be sent to the editors of the Daily Tar Heel, Mr. Buckley, the Carolina Forum, the Young Republicans Club, and the Editor of the National Review.

ACTION: Passed as amended, December 11, 1962.

VOTE: 7-1.

In a special session following the meeting, the following Conditional Representatives were inducted into the Society: Joseph McDonald of Moore County; Charles Neely of Michigan; and Wright Doyle of Florida.

Meeting Slated To Discuss YMCA Seminars Abroad

Judy Bryant, Chairman of Seminars Abroad, said today that there will be a meeting Tuesday, Dec. 18, to discuss Summer travel and study abroad. The meeting will be held in the Cabinet Room, first of the YMCA at 4 p.m.

Information will be available on a number of summer travel programs. C. C. Shotts, who attended a three day "National Workshop on Overseas Programs for Students" in New York last week will be present to report on Overseas programs and to answer questions.

Shotts stated that there has been a great increase in the number of students traveling and studying abroad during the past few years and that the State Department has expanded its personnel in Educational and Cultural Affairs because the Administration recognizes the importance of student programs abroad.

Lower Cost

Miss Bryant announced that Seminars Abroad has an expanded program at a lower cost for 1963. It will include Madrid and Prague, as well as the capital cities of Western Europe formerly on the itinerary.

The 67 days in the 1963 Seminar will also include more student meetings and other attractions in major cities such as London, Paris, Rome, Florence and Berlin. About one half the quota of 30 students for the 1963 Seminar has been filled.

It is expected that the quota will be completed early in January by students who expect to consult their parents during the holidays.

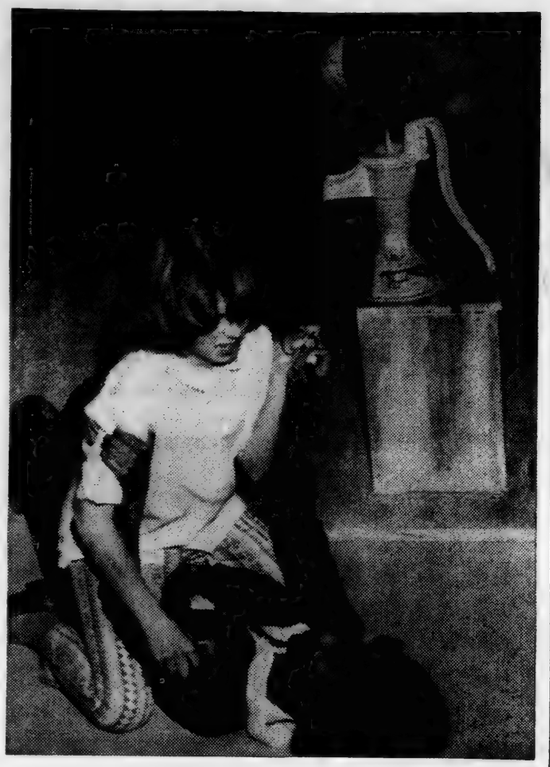
Tuesday's meeting is open to all interested students.

Vivaldi's 'Gloria' To Be Featured By Choral Group

Antonio Vivaldi's "Gloria" is the featured work to be performed by the Chapel Hill Choral Club in their Annual Christmas Concert next Tuesday evening at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall.

The 110-voice group, under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter, will be accompanied by a chamber orchestra with members of the University String Quartet as the nucleus. Soloists for the "Gloria" are Martha Gibbs, Mezzo-soprano, and Rebecca Carnes, soprano.

Other numbers of the varied program are two traditional carols, a selection from Bach's "Christmas Oratorio", "The Shepherd's Story", by Clarence Dickinson, with Rebecca Carnes, Barbara Schnorrenberg, Helen Jane Wettach, and U. T. Holmes as soloists, Vaughn-William's "Fantasia on Christmas Carols" with baritone soloist John H. Evans, and Benjamin Britten's "Festival Te Deum" for chorus and organ.



First In Chapel Hill

This performance of Vivaldi's "Gloria" will be the first heard in Chapel Hill, although its stature in the choral repertoire is fully equal to that of Vivaldi's popular "Seasons" for chamber orchestra. Vivaldi, who was an Italian contemporary of J. S. Bach, left a legacy of vocal music which has been rediscovered and published in modern editions only in the past twenty-five years.

The "Gloria" exemplifies the urbane, sophisticated, jolly good humor of its composer, nicknamed "The Red" by his friendes due to his shock of bright red hair, who was musical director of a large Venetian orphanage for illegitimate and homeless girls. Travelers through 18th century Italy recount their amazement in hearing these children performing to such a degree of perfection the music of Vivaldi, under the director of this friendly priest.

Dr. Joel Carter, director of Tuesday's program, sang baritone roles in West Coast opera productions after graduating from Stanford, and before coming to the University as head of the voice department. He has often appeared as recitalist and oratorio soloist in this area. As Vice-President of the National Association for Teachers of Singing, he has encouraged and promoted the careers of many promising young singers.

Admission to Tuesday's concert is free, and open to the public.

MIRACLE WORKER—Anne Carson as blind Helen Keller in her youth, shows her temper in this rehearsal scene from the "Miracle Worker" as she scuffles with one of the Negro children in the play while the other looks on. The play, to be presented by the Petite Dramatique and the Student Theatre Workshop tonight through Monday, will be given in the round on the Memorial Hall stage at 8. Free reserved seat passes may be picked up at GM.

Opinions Differ On 'Time' Article

The November 16th issue of Time magazine carried a story on UNC which stated, among other things, that "there is something in the air that inspires purpose."

The story, which was featured in the Education section of the magazine, made such statements as, "UNC" is the conscience of North Carolina and the most enlightened state campus in the South," UNC "values variety of opinion," and it is a "haven for writers."

A recent poll of student and faculty opinion netted the following comments:

"Something in the air that inspires purpose"

—"There is something in the air that inspires the student—but he has to be receptive and appreciative. There is a difference between the Carolina spirit and the Carolina spirits."

—"There is nothing that deters purpose for the student who comes here with a purpose. I think if you don't have a purpose when you come here, you can't catch it out of the air."

—"This is sort of a myth. What a person achieves is because he is capable. The atmosphere may help, but it's not cause and effect as Time implies."

—"For the most part academics aren't stressed at Carolina. As far as I can see, the only purpose that is inspired here is a social one.

"Values Variety of Opinion"

—"The faculty encourages variety of opinion and tolerance. I think there is a premium on conformity among students. I think most students here are moderates on the racial question."

—"There is no question. This is the greatest attribute that this campus has."

—"The difference of opinions leads a person to think before accepting a fact or argument."

—"Whatever opinion you may have, you will find someone who will listen to it a Carolina."

Writer Betty Smith said, "The Time story does not go far enough. There are reasons why this is true. We (the Chapel Hill writers) were always together, talking, reading our work with one another, and helping one another.

"We have a group—nothing formal—Paul Green, Fannie Patton, John Ehle (she named others). We all get together at one another's houses and discuss our work and books we have read. Being a woman there are many things that I can help Paul and John with that they wouldn't know. In the same way they can help me."

—"I think the campus is about equally divided on its acceptance of integration."

—"I believe that most Carolina students have accepted integration gracefully.

—"I think that the administration here would bend over backwards to prevent racial discrimination. I go to an integrated church (Binkley Memorial). We all get along well together.

Fred Anderson, Jr. Is Rhodes Finalist

Fred R. Anderson Jr., a senior here, was selected as one of two nominees to represent North Carolina before a Southern District Selection Committee for Rhodes Scholarships.

The selection of the two nominees, Anderson and David Carroll of Davidson College, was announced yesterday following an all-day session at Guilford College at which a six member state committee interviewed 10 candidates.

At the district meeting tomorrow, final selection of four Rhodes Scholarship appointments will be made from nominees chosen representing North Carolina, Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Tennessee.

The committees of selection are composed of former Rhodes Scholars, under the chairmanship of a leader in public life outside of the Rhodes group.

The 32 students through-out the nation who are finally selected for the scholarship will spend two years studying at Oxford University, England, in any field of the scholars choice.

Names of the winners will be released by the Rhodes Scholarship Trust at Swarthmore College, Pa., on Monday.

AIR GROUPS TAP

In a recent joint ceremony, seven pledges of the Jesse J. Morehead Squadron of the Arnold Air Society and seventeen Angel flight pledges were initiated into full membership.

New members of the Arnold Air Society are C. E. Stull, C. M. Tate, D. M. Williams, B. R. Matthews, F. R. Jamison, G. N. Dougherty and J. P. Hoybach. The society is a honorary service organization of selected Air Force ROTC cadets.

The Angel Flight is the Co-ed auxiliary to and sponsoree of the Arnold Air Society. New members are Kana Bray, Leslie Cloyes, Deanne Darr, Joan Fox, Susan Erichson, Mitizi Echstein, Kay Johnson, Katy Jones, Deane Lynn, Vicki Hinnant, Ann Moody, Sheila Sherrill, Kay Ledgerwood, Pat Crissman, Ann Parker, Sally Laws and Janice Moore.

Political Intern Positions Open For 5 Juniors

By MARY BREWS REGAN

The Political Science Department today announced a campus-wide competition for five "Congressional Internships" for the summer of 1963.

Students selected will be placed as staff members in the Washington offices of U. S. Senators and Representatives for ten weeks this summer. Each will receive a stipend of $500 from the Department's Political Studies Program.

The purpose of the internships is to provide an opportunity for promising students to "observe national politics at first hand and enrich their understanding of the democratic political process."

Not Tours

The internships are not "political sight-seeing tours," Dr. Donald Matthews, Director of the Political Studies Program said yesterday.

Walter Dellinger, one of last summer's interns, said, "The hours were long, the work difficult, the pressure intense, but the sum total was an informative and exciting experience."

He said the Carolina interns did everything from drafting campaign slogans for bumper stickers to drafting major addresses for the Congressmen to deliver on the floor.

Attend Meetings

They attended House Un-American Activities Committee hearings and Senator McClellan's hearing on "B-Girls and Exotic Dancing."

Starting on or about June 1, the students selected will begin work for their Congressman or Senator and will be expected to perform whatever duties their member asks them to perform.

Generally these include drafting answers to the Congressman's mail, conducting research on bills before Congress, contributing to news releases and speeches, and carrying out routine clerical tasks.

Hold Interviews

The interns also hold a number of groups interviews and conferences with persons prominent in national politics. Among those interviewed by previous interns have been John F. Kennedy, the late Speaker Sam Rayburn, Lyndon Johnson, Dean Acheson, Gordon Gray, James Reston and Everett Dirksen.

The program is primarily designed for juniors and beginning graduate students. Graduating seniors may not apply and only the most exceptional sophomores are considered. Students do not need to be political science majors, but sufficient and appropriate course work in political science is required.

Politics

Dr. Matthews said that all interns must be extremely interested in politics.

"Though we've never sent a girl, they don't necessarily have to be boys."

He said that the students should be stable people and "a pleasing personality doesn't hurt."

Competition here for the internships is pretty keen, he said. Last year there were 30 applicants. "We now have more interestd than ever before," he added.

Writing Important

Writing skill is very important. Most of the duties involved either writing or "leg-work," Matthews said.

There is a great difference between an internship and a summer job. "What you learn out of experience is the important thing in an internship. It is part of the educating process. The interns must have a desire to learn and they should feel a responsibility to try to learn."

Students interested in the program should attend a meeting to be held at 5:00 p.m. Tuesday, Dec. 18, in 207 Caldwell Hall. Those unable to attend this meeting can obtain additional information and application blanks from Dr. Donald R. Matthews, 207 Caldwell Hall.

All applications must be completed by January 11, 1963.

ATTENTION

A coat was taken Tuesday night from Lenoir Hall. The person who took it was seen doing so and has been identified. This individual has 16 hours to return the coat to the Director's Office of Lenoir Hall. If this is done, no further action will be taken: if it is not returned within 16 hours, the individual will be turned in to the proper authority. The coat was a brown, herringbone top coat.

Campus Briefs

BIG BLAST

The Junior and Senior Classes will sponsor the last "big blast" before the Christmas Holidays tonight at the American Legion Hut. The "Hot Nuts" will provide music from 8-12 for the twist, slop, mashed potato, pony, madison and even for a waltz, maybe.

Everybody is invited and the cost is a dollar, stag or drag.

NATO Lauds US Action In Cuban Crisis

PARIS (UPI)—The NATO allies approved by "massive unanimity" Thursday the tough United States handling of the Cuban crisis.

But America's NATO partners, opening an Atlantic Council ministers meeting, split over the wisdom of approaching the Soviet Union now to reopen negotiations on Berlin.

U. S. Secretary of State Dean Rusk told the 15-nation council the United States will not negotiate with the Soviets on any other East-West issues until the Cuban crisis is fully resolved.

His no negotiations stand won firm backing from Britain, France, West German, Denmark, Greece, the Netherlands and Turkey. Italy gave milder support. But Belgium, Canada and Norway urged that no opportunity be lost to hold negotiations with the Russians on Berlin and other issues.

Speaker after speaker hailed President Kennedy's firm stand that forced the Russians to withdraw their missiles and bombers from Castro Cuba.

Handling "Perfect"

West German Foreign Minister Gerhard Schroeder said the U. S. handling of the crisis was "perfect."

France's foreign minister, Maurice Couve De Murville, hailed the "massive unanimity" with which the NATO alliance supported American action over Cuba. He said the Cuban crisis brought NATO "back to realities."

NEW YORK NON-STOP

Eastern Air Lines has announced the addition of non-stop air coach service between Raleigh-Durham and New York and a 15 per cent round trip fare discount on excursion flights.

New afternoon coach service will also be established to Washington with return flights from both points.

Flight 74, offering both Golden Falcon and economy air coach service, will originate Raleigh-Durham at 6:30 p.m., terminating at Newark Airport at 8:13 p.m. Southbound flight 75 will depart Newark at 4:00 p.m., arriving Raleigh-Durham at 5:57 p.m.

Flight 24, offering both first class and economy air coach service, will originate Raleigh-Durham at 5:45 pm., arriving Washington National Airport at 6:45 p.m. The new return flight 25 will leave Washington at 4:05 p.m., arriving Raleigh-Durham at 5:13 p.m.

Tito Blasts Out Against China On Cuba Policy

MOSCOW (UPI) — Yugoslav President Tito lashed out Thursday at Chinese Communist critics of Soviet Premier Nikita S. Krushchev's Cuban crisis policy in a speech before a cheering Supreme Soviet parliament that could only widen the breach between Moscow and Peking.

Tito was only one of a parade of speakers, including Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, to denounce Khrushchev's critics.

But speechmaking appearances by a foreign guest before parliament are rare and the fact that Tito was so honored was an added slap at China.

Gromyko hailed the peaceful settlement of the Cuban crisis as a "victory of reason over folly" and called for restoration of wartime Soviet-American cooperation. The foreign minister also urged resumption of negotiations on the German and Berlin issues but set no deadlines.

In Paris, Secretary of State Dean Rusk told the opening session of the NATO ministerial conference that the United States will not negotiate with the Soviet Union on other issues until the Cuban crisis is fully settled.

None of the speakers mentioned Communist China by name in their attacks. But the implications were clear — just as they were in Khrushchev's speech Wednesday.

Tito, who spoke for 15 minutes in fluent Russian, praised Khrushchev for his bold and statesmanlike decision on Cuba and said that those who interpreted it as a sign of weakness were "short-sighted."

BULLETIN

At press time last night Student Legislature had taken no final action on a bill to establish "bad checks" as an offense against the student body."

According to the "bad check" bill, as it now stands, if a student neglects to reimburse the merchant within 30 days for a bad check, he has violated the honor code and will be dealt with accordingly.

"We Reserve The Right To Refuse Service To Anyone"

Two news stories last week threw a little light on the complex economic, social and political issues involved in the opposition of Southern states and property-owners to serving Negro customers.

The stories become timely because of their proximity to the recent Supreme Court hearings on sit-ins. Last month the high court heard defense pleas to throw out North Carolina state convictions of Negro students who sat-in at restaurant and drug store counters. The court has not yet rendered a judgment.

In one of the two stories, a North Carolina attorney, who had argued the state's case before the Supreme Court, told a state audience the "only" issue involved in the sit-in hassle was private property rights —nothing else.

In another story, the Howard Johnson Co. put itself on record against racial segregation in its far-flung chain of restaurants. The company said it was integrating all company-owned restaurants and urging each action in Howard Johnson restaurants run by local proprietors under license agreements. The company said it joined CORE and the NAACP in "deploring" arrests made of student sit-inners at Howard Johnsons in the South. (There have been demonstrations at the Howard Johnson restaurant on the road to Durham, and at those in Statesville and elsewhere in the state.)

* * *

Both stories underline the major contention of the "We Reserve the Right to Refuse Service to Anyone" ideological camp. This group feels it is merely a question of free enterprise and private property, (and probably, God, Mother and the flag.) This view says property owners have the right to refuse service to anyone — and, in the South, that means Negroes. And if these unwanted people refuse to leave their property, then the view is that any charge is good enough to level at them — whatever is expedient in that locale (disturbing the peace, inciting to riot, trespassing, desecration of public morals, etc.)

The two news stories revolve around this view, but don't touch on the central issue—what all this fuss is about, what everybody knows it's about, but few in the South will admit.

Sit-ins, and pickets at restaurants and lunch counters, and demostrations and all that, are a request (which is rapidly becoming more of a demand) for admission to first-class American citizenship. The demonstrations only touch private property and private enterprise in a physical way, but do not concern them in any broader sense.

The restaurant owners know what the squabbles are about — they know that no restaurant is going to refuse to serve ANYONE, unless he is Negro. It's a basic principle of private enterprise — make money — and you make money by serving customers and not by turning them away. The restauranteer sees a secondary profit-loss if white customers are offended by the presence of Negroes — but the number of such persons is much less than the wide spectrum of potential customers presently excluded.

* * *

The Negro students whose sit-in convictions are being reviewed by the Supreme Court, will have a long fight before them. Even if their convictions are overturned and the Court makes it more difficult for future student demonstrators to be found guilty, private properteers will find new ways to keep the Negro out, new ways to "show him his place." But the ways are becoming fewer, and the path of escape from the national desire is becoming narrower.

The South has been forced to recognize the bravery and intelligence of these students, and others like them throughout the region and nation. They will not be stayed long from their goal.

The efforts to end discrimination in restaurants and lunch counters are minor steps in the overall picture of racial equality. But they are important because they offer avenues of action for the discontented younger generation of "second-class citizens", who will not wait any longer . . . who are asking the nation to live up to its own ideals and fulfill its long-overdue promises. Jesse Helms & The DTH

'Not only does the Daily Tar Heel slant news, but it prints Communist advertisements as well.'

This was the gist of WRAL-TV's Jesse Helms Wednesday night. Mr. Helms hit the DTH editors (1) for allegedly giving too much news coverage to folk singer Pete Seeger and the chairman of the Progressive Labor group, and too little coverage to Fulton Lewis III's impending speech; (2) for giving editorial space to comments on Seeger's talents, rather than his politics; (3) for allowing an advertisement to run from a bookseller dealing in Communist books; and (4) a general questioning of the editors' judgment.

We welcome constructive criticism, and we welcome it from Mr. Helms. But it is possible he neglected a few facts in amassing his evidence against the DTH.

* * *

Mr. Helms says the newspaper gave too much space to the Labor man and to Seeger, and too little to the conservative Lewis. (Lewis never spoke—his plane was grounded in Washington.) But what about DTH coverage of conservative William Buckley's speech—four prior announcements, plus a picture and a laudatory editorial, plus another picture and lead story after his speech.

As to our editorial on Seeger, we somehow felt comments on folk-singing would be pertinent concerning a folk-singing concert.

As to the "Red" advertisement . . . In this free enterprise country of ours, the Tar Heel is forced to rely upon advertising to pay its bills—something TV's "Voice of Free Enterprise" should understand. So anybody who's got the money can advertise in the DTH—we don't censor ads.

* * *

Anytime Mr. Helms sees fit to pass judgment on the editors' judgment, he is most welcome and even encouraged. But we would prefer more facts to enter into his "judgment" next time. (JC)

William Buckley Hit — And Hard

'Low' Comment On Tynan Virility

To the Editors,

Those who sat stoically through William F. Buckley's alliterate attack on the evidently oversexed Norman Mailer this Monday evening will not be interested in the January issue of PLAYBOY magazine. That oversexed periodical carries the full text of Buckley's speech as delivered in Memorial Hall. But PLAYBOY is a better bargain; not to mention other features; Mailer got equal time there.

For those of you who missed the show, be assured, Buckley was himself. He denounced Communism as "ray of light." He claimed "inevitably" for American conservatism. He set up a straw man, "James Baldwin, the most outstanding spokesman of his race . . ." then proceeded to blow it down. And he invoked the names of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John in behalf of the American Right Wing. I do not exaggerate

At one point, However, Buckley outdid himself. After condemning Norman Mailer for his "sexual neuroses," this guest of the University of North Carolina quoted the Englishman, Kenneth Tynan, as follows: "However I survey the future, there seems to me nothing noble (in dying). I want my wife to have another child and I want to see that child learn to walk."

Buckley's low comment was: "Those in the West of civilized mind and heart are engaged in trying to make just that possible, the birth of another child to Kenneth Tynan, always assuming he has left the virility to procreate one."

I only submit myself to these diatributes infrequently — to get a glimpse of the Faithful, en masse — the New McCarthyites at the boots of their New Messiah. And as usual, Monday night gave me heart. The quality of the Right-Wing is little improved since I last experienced a session of their Rites.

On Buckley's Stomach Itches

To the Editors:

Having listened Monday to the eloquent Mr. Buckley, I must certainly complement him on his tremendous ability in the art of words and his evasion of answers on most general affairs. Not only did he occasionally draw a few cheers from the campus minority of reactionaries, but he also managed to entertain the audience by means of articulate massage of his belly and his other itches. But this is not all from this grand old chap of the 18th century. Not only did he fail to speak on the announced subject matter "The Welfare State", but instead he managed a dull repetition to the exact words of his recent PLAYBOY article on the Right Wing. Yes, besides having come unprepared for his planned speech, he also managed to point his lengthy finger at Kennedy, Harvard University, professors in general, and almost everything and everybody else that he had envy for; but is this not the usual manner for reactionary and paranoid personalities? I cannot however deny his possibilities in the future for a career in the teaching of poetry in some rural high school; however, I would certainly attempt to avoid such a school of malevolence for any of my children. I must say nevertheless, I hope the YAF enjoyed it heartily, for such an eloquent speech as Mr. Buckley's must certainly have given them a deep emotional stimulus, and I hope their emotional deprivations were thus totally saturated.

WFB Revival Called Obscene

To the Editors,

William F. Buckley is many things. He is a good and dramatic reader, a fair comic, and a man with a better than average vocabulary. He says he is a conservative. He has tremendous foresight, shown by his ability to see the numerous mistakes made in the past by the Truman, Eisenhower, and Kennedy administrations. He is also amazingly capable of evading and missing issues.

Before Monday night I had held Mr. Buckley in respect, if only because he is editor of a national magazine, a position which I assumed carried with it some intellectual requirements and some responsibility. I had been told by numerous conservative acquaintances that "Bill Buckley is well worth hearing, even if you don't agree with him." Thus, I went to Memorial Hall Monday night with an open mind. I was not going to prejudge.

Because I had never heard Mr. Buckley before, I thought he would perhaps step to the podium and state in a logical manner those things in which he believed. I expected something along the lines of, "I am a conservative because . . . and therefore I feel that conservatism is best both for me and the country." In short, I had hoped to here a deductively and empirically true argument, or at least an attempt at one.

Instead, I heard a 20 minute (comic??) reading concerning Norman Mailer's obsession with sex and his "subpoena envy." This dramatic reading was interspersed with violent clapping by wild-eyed YAF members and the whole scene was much like an "old time revival," with Mailer substituted for sin and Buckley for Billy Graham, or perhaps Elmer Gantry. This "revival" segment of Buckley's (lecture??) was climaxed by the accusation that a here-unnamed critic was impotent and that we should vote for Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John for president.

In my opinion, not as a liberal but as a human being, the whole "revival" segment was more obscene than Mailer could ever hope to be.

However, the basic point at issue is this, that Buckley obviously attempted to associate all liberals with Mailer and by the same token, all conservatives with God, mother, and good old apple pie. From a man of Buckley's supposed stature, this was quite disappointing.

When I left Memorial Hall Monday night, I had formed one irrevocable conclusion—I would rather be either red or dead than vote for Mr. Buckley for president.

—William N. Hicks III

Speaker Wasn't Constructive

To the Editors,

In other halls I have listened to the oratory of Mr. Buckley. His eloquence has always called up to me the vision of a kaleidoscope: Myriad in color, but fleeting in pattern. By this comparison I applaud Mr. Buckley's position as to the proper business of government, his insistence on a positive approach to foreign policy, his concern for the welfare of Constitutionalism, his regard for human value and dignity, and his plea that in confrontation with Communism, the protection of freedom is just cause to risk nuclear war.

But it is not enough to plead, albeit passionately, for Conservatism, nor is it sufficient only to decry Liberalism, however accurate that criticism may be. There must also be brought forward a constructive and practicable alternative to that which Conservatism is opposed.

In formal debate, such presentation is not mandatory, but when consequences involve the possibility of immediate reality, it is not unreasonable to expect a workable and meaningful course of action.

(A constructive conservative)
—John H. Atkins

View From The Hill

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

The inimitable wit of National Review's Bill Buckley was in full flower Monday night. The following incident is a prime example:

Buckley made the statement that Conservatives were dedicated to certain "absolute thruths." This prompted one cynic in the audience to send a note to the stage during the questioning period. "What is the Absolute Truth?" it read. A titter ran through the audience . . . a titter that broke into a roar when the editor replied, "It costs eight dollars a year."

* * *

The latest device for selling the New Frontier to the American people is ingenious to say the least . . . a domestic Peace Corps. Heading the study committee named by President Kennedy is (but, of course) Robert Kennedy. Other members are Secretary of the Interior Stewart Udall, Sargent Shriver, Welfare Secretary Anthony J. Celebrezze, Labor Secretary W. Willard Wirtz and Housing Administrator Robert C. Weaver.

There is, of course, no public demand for a domestic Peace Corps, but it is not surprising that the administration has taken unto itself the task of generating interest in such an organization. The crystallization of every efficient superstate requires the mobilization of youth. The Nazis were intensely proud of their pick and shovel brigades for young people. The Young Pioneers of the Soviet Union are invaluable to the Communist cause. And a domestic Peace Corps would be yet another collectivist approach to problems that plague a central government seeking unlimited control over its member states.

Granted, the Corps would be handy. Whenever the President designated a "trouble spot", an army of youth workers could be dispatched immediately with a program of planned reconstruction. And, if the area proved particularly obstinate, U. S. Marshalls could give the "social programs" more substance.

The solution to America's social problems lies in the hands of private and local agencies. Where slums and juvenile delinquency flourish, citizens committees, churches, and other enterprises can (as they have in the past) effectively execute programs to remedy the problem.

No state in America need be regarded as a Tanganyika or an India in dire need of a regiment of Federal youth workers.

NAACP Lists Segregated Restaurants

To the Editors,

The UNC chapter of the N.A.A.-C.P. would like to make known to the University community the following facts concerning eating facilities in the Chapel Hill area. The following eating places refuse to serve certain members of our community because of race:

Education: Face Of The Future

By RALPH McGILL

Governor Terry Sanford, of North Carolina, speaks of a friend who says he is glad to be alive in the present, rather than dead in the past, but he sure does like the past better.

This sentiment is entertained by many. The past, since it is the past, seems to have been a time of peace and certitude. The present is filled with alarms, the need of decisions, with confusions and complexities. And, worse, the unknown future is coming toward us.

We cannot, any more than past generations, see the face of the future. But we know that written across it is the word education.

Somehow the average American has not translated the meaning of the gathering momentum of population increases into the needs of the future — especially of education.

Here and there concerned persons are at work with the problem of how to communicate the urgency of the future to the people of the present. In traveling about America one encounters them. One of the most cogent approaches to communicating the problem to the persons concerned is in Ohio. The Ohio Education Association obtained the services of an independent agency. When the report was in, Dr. Martin L. Essex, Akron's school superintendent, and past president of the National Association of School Administration said:

"If Ohioans, really knew what is happening to their state they would want to change it. They have been lulled into a sense of false security by past prosperity." He buttressed his statement with the findings.

During the present decade the number of high school pupils in the state will increase twice as fast as Ohio's total population.

Only 53.3 per cent of elections for bond issues in Ohio school districts carried in 1961.

As a result, almost 27,000 Ohio children are attending school on half-day sessions.

In the past 10 years the number of high school teachers temporarily certified in Ohio has almost tripled.

Dr. Essex gave concluding emphasis to a key feature of the independent survey:

"Evidence continues to mount in impressive volume that education is a decisive factor in the location of new factory plants and research laboratories: in acquiring government contracts, in improved business, and in increased earning levels . . . Negative evidence stemming from inadquate education shows up alarmingly in studies of unemployment, automation and crime. . . ."

This finding is obvious. What sensible company would want to locate where schools are poor — and getting poorer? What corporation would care to invest where research is nonexistent?

Speaking recently in Dallas, Texas, Dr. Rufus Harris, president of Mercer University (Macon, Ga.) warned that the future shortly will present problems so grave that church-related schools will have difficulty surviving. He mentioned the worsening crisis of teacher shortages, the higher salaries paid teachers elsewhere, the larger enrollments, the desperate need for liberal arts education such as church-related colleges can offer — and the lack of money.

Governor Sanford, in looking at the South's needs, has called for an emancipation proclamation by Southerners themselves. The South's educational problem is in critical balance. Compared with the high-income, industrialized states, where education long has been given priorities, the Southern states are grievously burdened by inadequacies.

About half the South's pupils do not even finish high school.

Not half of them are able to go to college or technical schools.

The South has too few teachers, the lowest pay, the lowest average of teaching qualification, too little respect for the profession of teaching, and not enough understanding of the problem. It is a sad fact—but it is a fact — that large numbers of Southern legislature are not really interested in education beyond the lip service point. Those that are too often do not have the information they need to comprehend the urgency of it. The future, whatever it may dmand, assuredly will be based on education.

Lithographs On Display

Representational lithographs by Benton Spruance, one of America's best graphic artists, are now on exhibit at Paintings Upstairs Gallery. Mr. Spruance chooses such subjects as Bird Shapes, Odyesus, Sea of Galilee, and Pieta, for his color lithographs.

Jack Bilander of New York is a newcomer to the line of regular artists in the Paintings Upstairs Gallery collection. Mr. Bilander's black, white, and color etchings have become some of the most significant graphic work of our time. He was recently described in The New York Times as ". . . an excellent printmaker with a good eye—it's some time since an artist looked at the city as something more than a subject for a formal photographer."

Ogden Deal of Greensboro is represented by his typically long thin figures, still lifes, and landscapes created in oil and wood sculpture. Also on exhibit are works by George Kachergis, Ray French, and Robert Shannon.

During the pre-Christmas season the regular gallery hours have been extended to 9 P.M. beginning Friday, Dec. 14 through Dec. 21.

Varsity Tops Alumni, 88-67

Poteet Paces Victors; Rosenbluth, Moe Shine

By ED DUPREE

UNC's varsity basketball team jumped off to a 20-point halftime lead and defeated an out-conditioned Alumni team, 88-67, Wednesday night.

Yogi Poteet's magic touch paced the unbeaten Tar Heels in the annual contest. Poteet, hitting consistently with his soft jump shot, sank 10 of 15 shots for 20 points and high-scoring honors for the night.

The Alumni, led by Lennie Rosenbluth and Doug Moe, a pair of former All-Americans, made a contest out of it during the final half. Dean Smith's varsity outscored the older men, 45-44, in the last 20 minutes.

Frank McGuire, who coached Carolina to a 32-0 record and the national championship in 1957, piloted the Alumni and started five of the greatest Tar Heels of the past decade — Rosenbluth, Pete Brennan, Tommy Kearns, and Joe Quigg from the title team and Moe, the youngster in the quintet.

Rosenbluth led the Alumni with 17 points—14 coming in the second half. Moe was the only other Alumni member to hit double figures—sinking six of 11 field goals and one foul shot for 13 points.

Three field goals by Moe kept the older Tar Heels close during the first eight minutes—at 13-9. But Charlie Shaffer and Poteet hit jumpers, Ray Respess hit a lay-up and Poteet connected again to make it 21-9.

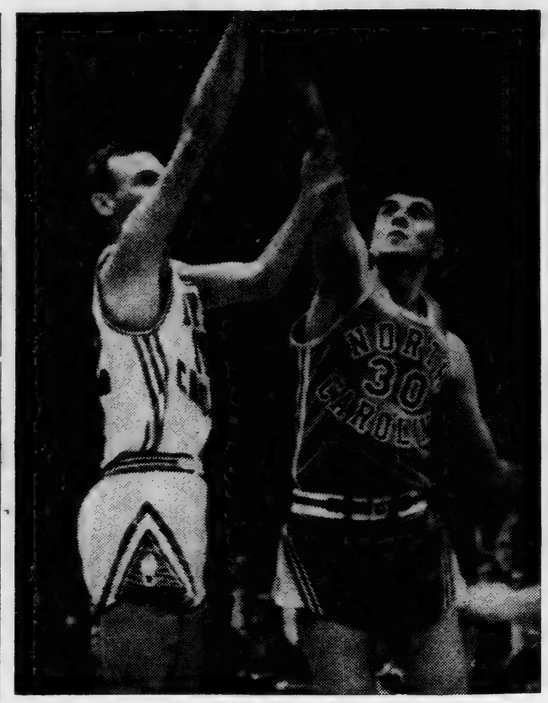
With 10:59 remaining in the half, sophomore center Billy Cunningham drew his third foul and the varsity played the final portion of the half without their ace rebounder. The lead moved to 30-15, then Coach Smith substituted freely for the last seven minutes.

The subs continued to pour it on with Peppy Callahan hitting two jumpers and Dick Vinroot, Art Katz and Dieter Krause chipping in with baskets. The lead was 43-23 when the starters came back at the start of the second period.

The starters made it 57-31 in about six minutes—the biggest lead of the night. The Alumni, still pairing off against the starters, cut the lead to 73-56 at the 10-minute mark, but didn't have enough steam to keep it going.

The subs moved in again and continued to score with ease. This time Billy Taylor, a near look-alike for the Alumni's Brennan, had a hot hand and hit two nifty jump shots. Krause, Katz and Vinroot hit buckets and Bryan McSweeney added a foul shot, pushing the score to 88-67.

Gehrmann Holland, a valuable reserve on the 1957 team, had the hottest scoring streak in the game, hitting for nine points in the last eight minutes. He finished as third high scorer behind Rosenbluth and Moe.



Shaffer, hitting six of seven shots and Larry Brown, connecting on five of 10, shared second-high honors for the varsity with 12.

The game ball was presented to Mrs. Robert Lindsey, a polio victim and one of UNC's most ardent sports fans, by Co-Captains Poteet and Brown.

The scoring:

Varsity: Poteet 20, L. Brown 12, Shaffer 12, Respess 9, Cunningham 6, Cooke 6, Krause 5, Taylor 4, Vinroot 4, Callahan 4, Katz 4, McSweeney 1, Galantai 1, Burns 0, B. Brown 0, Bowers 0.

Alumni: Rosenbluth 17, Moe 13, Holland 9, Walsh 8, Quigg 4, Lotz 3, Jones 3, Brennan 2, Radovich 2, Carter 2, Kearns 1, Long 1, Hudock 1, Searcy 0, Winstead 0, Poole 0.

Track Coaches Not Optimistic

By LOTS BIRINYI JR.

Although coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton have 15 returning lettermen, among them several ACC champions, they are not too optimistic about this year's indoor track team.

Coach Ranson said, "We are encouraged over the progress of our squad this year. But, as usual in working with a large group, we have only slightly over one-half of our boys attending regularly.

"We could, with the full cooperation of our entire varsity squad, be capable of matching any team in the ACC. The answer is day-by-day work and gradual development."

Coach Ranson also encouraged all interested boys to participate in indoor track because, "the sport provides a splendid opportunity for anyone who is willing to work. No experience is necessary."

Ranson cited Larry Henry, this year's ACC cross-country Champion, as a boy who had no previous track experience before coming to Carolina.

The coaches are anxious to have all team members participate in the time trials this Friday and Saturday. On Friday, shot put trials will be held at 2:00; broad jump, pole vault and high hurdles at 3:00; low hurdles at 4:00; and the 60-yard dash at 4:30.

In addition, there will be a special two-mile time trial at 3 o'clock with John Gutknecht, who finished second in the AAU cross-country championship.

Saturday trials will be held at 3 for the high jump and mile, 3:10 for the 600 yard run, 3:25 for the 880, and 3:40 for the 440. These time trials will be for both varsity and freshmen.

To date there have been several encouraging notes.

Tommy Clark, who holds the ACC indoor high jump record of 6-7 3/4 has already jumped 6-4 and close behind him is Reinard Harkema with 6-2.

In the 600, Bob Hart has already run 1:13.4 which is within .4 of a second of his last year's winning ACC time. He has also run the 800 in 1:58.8.

SAE, Manly, Law School Lead All-Campus Teams

Manly, SAE, and Law School-I led the balloting in their respective divisions on the 1962 All-Campus Tag Football teams announced yesterday.

In the dormitory division the Manly Riverrats, winners of seven straight games before bowing to SAE in the finals, took three positions on the squad. Lineman Bob Cox and back Jim Clark and Gale Edison were the Riverrat entries.

Right behind Manly in total balloting were Mangum and Ruffin who placed two men each on the team. Len Dellolio and P. W. Swing represented Mangum, and George Lockhart and Ted Hoehn of Ruffin gave the upper quad seven of the nine possible places on the squad.

Last year's champion Alexander Playboys and runner-up Joyner Jocks each placed a man on this year's team. Alexander center George Stretcher and Joyner lineman rounded out the dormitory squad.

SAE ran away with the Fraternity voting, placing five men on the team. Linemen Jon Commander, Bob Segrest, and Keith Stoneman, and backs Ned Martin and Scott Trotter, who paced the SAE's to the All-Campus championship, all placed on the squad.

Wade Farrior and Clayton Burns of Kappa Sig, Gene Barrior of Chi Psi, and Charlie Jonas of Phi Delta Theta completed the fraternity balloting.

In the Grad School Division six teams placed players on the squad with Law-1 placing three. Bill Dickson, Henry Pharr, and Bob Watkins were selected by the team managers and officials who participated in the voting as Law-1 representatives. Law-3 placed Bill Merriman and Marshall Happer and Med-1, Med-2, Peacocks and Dental School Sophs placed Bill Hubbard, Ben Hammett, Red Murr, and Don Lineberry respectively on the squad.

In Wednesday's Grail Mural basketball action only one game was scheduled and Teague edged Phi Delt-2, 46-43, behind the shooting of Junior Edge and Jim Gallagher. Edge and Gallagher each pushed in 12 points in a victory that put Teague in the lower bracket finals.

Two point-system volleyball games were played Wednesday and Chi Psi came out on top in both. The Chi Psi Blues topped the Beta Blues, 2-1, and the Chi Psi Psychos (W) defeated the Phi Delt Candies (W) by an identical 2-1 score.

Tar Babies Rip State By 74-57

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina's freshman basketball team will enter the new year undefeated on a spotless 4-0 record.

The Tar Babies put the finishing touches on their pre-holidays season Wednesday night by trouncing the State College frosh in a game which almost turned into a brawl.

The score was 74-57, but the lop-sided count does not reflect the excitement generated by the game.

The referees handed out 37 fouls with State being called 19 times. UNC's Bob Bennett fouled out as did the Wolflets' Ray Hodgdon and Bill Moffitt.

In addition to those departing by the foul route, State's Kurt Dunstan was also eliminated. The 6-6 New Jersey center was thrown out with about five minutes left after being repeatedly warned for his rough play.

State surprised the Tar Babies by jumpng off to an early 13-5 lead. With 6:20 gone in the game, however, Carolina made its move.

Don Walsh, subbing for Coach Ken Rosemond, saw his boys roll up 16 points in the next six minutes while the Wolflets could manage only Hal Blondeau's jumper.

Bennett started the rally on a tap-in of a Mark Mirken-missed shot. Fouled on the play, the 6-8 Pennsylvania boy sunk his free throw for the three-point play.

Bill Harrison hit another foul shot, Johnny Yokley fired in a jumper and Earl Johnson tallied on a fast break to tie the score at 13.

Carolina increased its lead to 35-24 by halftime and was never threatened thereafter.

Holding a 12-point lead at 54-42 midway through the second half, UNC did not appear satisfied.

The Tar Babies proceeded to roll up eight straight points on two free throws by Johnson, a push by Yokley and two back-to-back jumpers by Jimmy Smithwick and Bennett.

On the latter play, State's Dunstan committed another one of his rough-house tactics and immediately was banished from the contest.

This action brought the biggest roar of the evening from the west stands, whose occupants had been riding Dunstan much of the night.

Carolina's Bennett led all scorers with 17 points. The slender forecourt start also pulled down 15 rebounds, also a game high.

Yokley and Smithwick followed Bennett in double figures with 14 and 12, respectively. Smithwick, just returning to the lineup from a thigh injury which has kept him sidelined, hit on a phenomenal five of six 20-foot jump shots and added two of two from the free throw line.

Moffitt and Hodgdon, the two Wolflets who fouled out, each scored 11 points while Blondeau contributed 10 to the State attack. Blondeau also was State's best rebounder with nine.

Tar Heel Swimmers Coast Past Blue Devils, 57-30

Sophomore swimming whiz Harrison Merrill returned to the varsity lineup Wednesday and posted two first places to pace the unbeaten Blue Dolphins to a 57-30 triumph over Duke's varsity tankmen. This was the fifth straight win for Carolina's swimmers.

Merrill, who had been out for a week with an injured hand, swam with the doctor's okay and scored firsts in both the 200-yard individual medley and 500-yard freestyle events as the varsity compited its tuning up for next week's tests at Princeton and Navy.

Freestyle sprinter Dick Woodrow also chalked up two firsts. He scored a first in the 50-yard freestyle and then later in the afternoon returned to take the 100-yard freestyle race.

Other UNC winners were Joe Mummaw in the butterfly, Thompson Mann in the backstroke, and Tate Kemper in the breaststroke. Duke took firsts in the two relay events, the diving and the 200-freestyle.

Coach Pat Earey reported that he was very happy with Merrill's effort against Duke and that apparently the layoff hadn't bothered him too much. He added that Merrill, Woodrow, Mann and Kemper deserved special credit for their performances Wednesday.

Old-Timers Thrill Fans In Classy Hoop Contest

By ED DUPREE

Pot-bellies and shaky legs were numerous in the first UNC old-timers game played Wednesday night, but the former Tar Heel stars still showed signs of their once awesome talents.

The oldsters, dating as far back as the 1920's suited up in white and blue uniforms and played a 10-minute contest which everyone enjoyed.

The white team had an unusual starting lineup, Hook Dillon and the four McCachren brothers — Jim, Dave, George and Bill. The Whites built up a 10-4 halftime lead and won hands down, but players on both teams thrilled the crowd with shots they had used effectively many years ago.

Dillon hooked one in from 15-feet away early in the contest and was encouraged by fans to keep hooking them for the remainder of the game.

But he had plenty of help from the McCachrens, all former UNC captains. (Dave captained the 1934 team which won 18, lost 4. Jim's 1936 team posted a 21-4 mark. Bill was captain in 1939 and George a co-captain in 1943.)

Bob Paxton of the 1948 team swished two long two-handed set shots, the kind seldom used in basketball today. Earl Ruth did the same, accounting for the White team's six second-half points.

Honors held by the participating old-timers include: Dillon — All-American in 1946. Ruth — All-Southern Conference in 1937. Paxton—All Southern Conference in 1947 and 1948. Carson — All Southern Conference in 1949. Skippy Winstead — UNC's first All-ACC tournament selection in 1954.

UN Assembly Of Students To Be Here

UNC will play host to 300 students from a wide range of colleges and universities at the UN Model General Assembly to be held here February 20-24.

Edward P. Morgan, ABC news commentator, and William W. Jordan, UN Director of Political Affairs, will be special speakers for the event. Their speeches will be opn to delegates, students, and townspeople.

The Model General Assembly held here represents the area of th Middle South. The groups will carry out a serious presentation of rules and procedures of the United Nations.

UNC Represents US

Countries in the UN will be represented by delegations from the various schools. The United States delegation comes from UNC; the Air Force Academy is sending the U.S.S.R. delegation.

Character of the represented country must be depicted in the procedures of the college delegation.

The assembly is sponsored by the Collegiate Council for the United Nations and the UNC Y.M.C.A. Its purpose is to awaken more international consciousness in the student body and to make known the workings of the United Nations.

Five committees will function during the event in addition to the Assembly itself. These will propose resolutions and discuss them for presentation in the General Assembly.

Secretary-General of the MGA is Hugo Spechar, a UNC economics major from Bolivia; Duke Marston of Duke University is President of the General Assembly; Judy Alexander of UNC is head of the Secretariat; and Kellis Parker is chairman of the CCUN on this campus.

Planning for the event has been in progress here since last spring. A large mural will hang as a backdrop for the Assembly meeting in Carroll Hall. It is being painted and donated by John McCurdy of UNC.

Volunteers Needed

Volunteer help from interested students here will be needed during the event, officials have announced. Also needed will be housing for the visiting delegates. John Mullis is in charge of finding housing for these students.

Persons interested in helping in these areas should contact the UN-MGA office, 2nd floor, Y-Court.

Yoder Takes First Place For Editorial

Edwin M. Yoder, a Greensboro Daily News editorial writer and former DTH co-editor, has won first prize in the Greenville Clark Editorial Page Award contest for his editorial, "'Total Victory' in the Cold War."

He was co-editor of the 1955-56 DTH and winner of the Abernathy Award for student publications here. He also attended the University of Oxford, England.

The award is for the "best newspaper editorial page article in the United States in 1961 interpreting the international scene."

Presentation to Be Here

State Sen. Robert Lee Humber of Greenville, a member of the United World Federalist advisory board, will present the award to Yoder Monday night at a dinner here. He will receive $500 and a plaque.

Another of his editoirials, "The Mind of Fanaticism," won third honorable mention.

The judges for the contest were John Hersey, a Pulitzer prize winner; Howard K. Smith, ABC-TV news analyst; Gilbert Seldes, dean of the Annenberg School of Communications at the University of Pennsylvania: James Wadsworth, former ambassador to the UN; the Rev. Phillip S. Moore, vice president of academic affairs, Notre Dame University; and Murray Lincoln, president of the Nationwide Insurance Co.

ORIENTATION INTERVIEWS

Interviews for chairman of the 1963 Fall Orientation will be held Monday from 2-4:3 p.m. Interviews will last 15 minutes. Students must sign up in advance with Miss Staples in the Student Government Offices.

MIRACLE WORKER HOLDOVER

The "Miracle Worker" will be held over Tuesday night. Free tickets are available at GM.

Allen Raps Student Display Against Athletic Director

Inman Allen, President of the Student Body, issued a statement to the DTH yesterday expressing his belief that the demonstrators "protesting the position that C. P. Erickson holds as Director of Athletics . . . and indicating that they would favor his replacement by Frank McGuire," did not represent the feelings of the campus as a whole.

The demonstration took place last Wednesday night in Woollen Gym at an unscheduled basketball game between the Varsity and Alumni.

Allen's Statement

Allen said in his statement:

"The right of the students to stage this demonstration and indicate their protest is unquestionably legitimate — they acted in an organized and mature manner, causing no overt instances of disorder."

However, the actions of these few students does not bind the thoughts or actions of the entire student body, and I would suggest that their feelings on the position of Director of Athletics at the University of North Carolina are not representative of the entire student body.

"I feel that, unquestionably, a large majority of the students continue their good faith in the services Coach Erickson is rendering the University and would take the initiative to reaffirm their support of him if, and when, they feel such a step need be taken."

Peace Group Joins With National

The Students For Peace, a local student group which recently announced its plans not to affiliate with any national organization, announced yesterday that it had received approval to become a chapter of the national Student Peace Union.

Pat Cusick, leader of the group said that the change of plans came about because the group will be able to obtain speakers, films, and publicity more easily if it has national recognition.

"The reason we had not planned to become a chapter originally," said Cusick, "was due to the financial burden it would place on our young chapter. However, the national has told us that they would not charge full dues until we become firmly established."

"Also," Cusick added, "We have already been the subject of criticism by some students who think we are associated with other campus groups that have been under fire recently. Because we are in no way connected with any other campus group, we think that affiliating with a national organization will exempt us from this undue slander."

Cusick said that the group had already adopted the "Statement of Purpose" of the Student Peace Union before they decided to apply for a charter, so the only technical change in the group's organization would be a name change from Students For Peace to UNC-Student Peace Union.

Asked about a "letter to the editor" which appeared in several state newspapers linking the group with unilateral disarmament and the New Left Club, Cusick said that the charges were "entirely unfounded and obviously written out of ignorance."

"The Statement of Purpose of SPU does not bind any member to a specific policy, and in our chapter the members have many different opinions and often agree only in that they are for peace and against war," said Cusick.

Big Day In Space

Mariner Reaches Mysterious Venus

WASHINGTON (UPI)—America's Mariner 2 spaceship made a historic rendezvous with Venus Friday, took an electronic look and sent back to earth signals that may determine whether life can exist beneath the planet's shroud of clouds.

Establishing a big new record in space communications, the craft obeyed a command from earth to turn on its scanners and began sending back information about the clouds and the surface of earth's nearest planetary neighbor from an unbelievable 35 million miles away.

Mariner passed its closest point to the planet at about 10 seconds before 3 p.m. EST, scientists said. They said at that time it was 21,500 to 21,600 miles from Venus.

The two key instruments aboard the craft began scanning Venus at 1:55 p.m. and continued for the allotted 42 minutes. Their reports were received at Goldstone tracking station in California and relayed via Pasadena to Washington, where the signals were played on a loudspeaker at a televised news conference.

So accurate were advance estimates of the fly-by that Mariner's speed was a mere three miles an hour off at rendezvous.

Space Agency officials said the spacecraft's observation system was working perfectly and data about the planet pouring in. An "educated guess" about what the information means may be possible by this weekend, they said, but it will be days or weeks before substantial parts of the findings are made public.

All indications are that the project is an "unqualified success," the officials said.

James E. Webb, administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration NASA, said the feat in deep space may add more to man's knowledge of Venus "than has been gained in all the thousands of years of recorded history."

He said all information gathered in the fly-by of Venus would be shared "with all men and all nations, to insure maximum progress in science not only in the United States, but throughout the world."

"The most significant and perhaps the most spectacular of our scientific efforts to date," Webb term it.

Navy Renews Contract With Statistics Dept.

The Department of Statistics has received a one year renewal of its contract with the Office of Naval Research in the amount of $41,000.

The contract is for research in probability theory. Its principal investigator is UNC Professor Walter L. Smith. The Statistics Department is now beginning its third year of the contract, of which the total value is $115,000 to date.

E. S. Page and P. P. Naor, visiting professors from Newcastle, England, and Haifa, Israel, respectively, are also working with Prof. Smith on the contract.

The contract is set up so that the investigators may engage in independent research in probability theory. The results of the research are then sent to the Navy in technical reports.

The contract also aids in supporting some of the Department's graduate students who are working on research for their dissertations. The research they do is ultimately reported to the Navy.

Cold Weather Will Be Hanging Around

Cold weather is going to be with us for a few more days, with the possibility of light snow today or Sunday.

According to the five-day forecast by the Raleigh-Durham Weather Bureau, today will be another cold day. Sunday will be a little warmer, with light precipitation totalling 1/10 inch. This will occur as rain or snow on Sunday and Sunday night and again about Tuesday.

The weather will be turning colder again on Tuesday with temperatures averaging 8 to 10 degrees below normal.

No improvement in the weather is in sight — just more of the same. In such a case, it is recommended that one curl up in front of a warm fire with a warming cup of holiday cheer and a warm companion.

Tag Team Champs To Oppose Duke

Carolina Intramural Football Champions, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, will play the Duke Champions, Phi Delta Theta, today at 3:00 p.m. in Duke Stadium, Durham. Admission is 50 cents at the main gate. Proceeds from the game go to the Campus Chest organizations of both schools.

Lewis Speech Rescheduled For Tuesday

Former research director for the House Un - American Activities Committee Fulton Lewis III will speak on "The Future of American Conservatism" at 8 p.m. next Tuesday in the Law School Court Room.

Lewis was originally scheduled to speak last Tuesday, but was detained by adverse weather conditions. Sam Jones, president of the sponsoring Young Americans for Freedom, said he hopes Lewis will have better luck getting to Chapel Hill next week.

At 26, Lewis has already established himself in politics. In addition to his HUAC work, he is on the Board of National Directors of YAF and contributes to the "National Review."

Last year at UNC, Lewis debated with Mike Harrington, liberal editor of the "Catholic World" on the Lewis - narrated film "Operation Abolition."

In the past two years, Lewis has lectured on conservatism across the nation at over a hundred colleges and universities. He graduated from the University of Virginia where he was a Kappa Sigma.

"We believe it would be advantageous for Carolina students to hear something from one of conservatism's leaders," said YAF vice-chairman Mike Jaffe.

"We hope his appearance here will attract students to YAF where they can do something to put their conservative beliefs into action."

Cullen Story Featured In Quarterly

The Winter issue of the Carolina Quarterly, the nationally recognized University literary magazine, will be on sale today at Lenoir Hall, the Free Flicks, and the bookstores in the area.

Editor Louis Bourne describes it as "a small issue but containing perhaps the finest selection of poetry in fifteen years of publication, as well as fiction by both campus—and nationally-known writers. In addition, the layout of the magazine has more visual appeal than previous issues through the use of sketches throughout."

The lead story by Robert Cullen, a frequent contributor to The Atlantic, is a deceptively simple piece relating the awakening of a small boy to the incompatability of his parents. The tone of the story is light, but there are profound undercurrents and suggestions of the emotional chaos which climaxes the story.

Henry Woodhead, a campus writer, describes the brief relationship between a salesman and a young hitchhiker who thrusts his feelings on his unwilling companion.

Lyman Andrews in his poem, "Notes From a North African Cafe," recreates the sensuous and sinister atmosphere of an African city filled with indifference, antagonism and death.

In a lighter mode, Stan Baer details the frustration of a postman who plays the trombone in his bathtub and allows his artistic ambitions to outrun his ability.

WESTMINISTER FELLOWSHIP

Westminster Fellowship will meet for supper Sunday at 5:30 p.m. The program, "A Festival of Carols" will begin at 6:30.

Forum Withholds Fee To Buckley For UNC Reading

Henry Mayer, Chairman of the Carolina Forum, said yesterday that the Forum is withholding payment of the $450 fee charged by William Buckley for his Dec. 10 appearance on this campus, pending readjustment of the fee.

Student Body President Inman Allen and Vice-Pres. Mike Lawler are backing the Forum action.

Mayer released a letter sent to The Babcock Agency, Virginia Beach, Va., Buckley's agent, stating that Buckley did not deliver a speech but only read an article that appeared in the current issue of Playboy Magazine.

Buckley originally had been contracted by the Forum to speak on the topic of "Freedom and the Welfare State," but on his arrival at Chapel Hill asked if he could speak instead on the more general subject of "The Nature of the Right Wing."

Mayer said the Forum did not object to the change in topic, but "it does object to the reading of a current magazine article virtually intact."

Text of Letter

The following is the text of the letter signed by Mayer:

"In accordance with our agreement, Mr. William F. Buckley, Jr. visited the University of North Carolina on December 10 under the sponsorship of The Carolina Forum. Although it had been agreed that he would speak on the subject, "Freedom and the Welfare State," Mr. Buckley chose instead to read to his audience of approximately 1,000 members of the academic community an article on the meaning of the right wing which is featured in the current issue of "Playboy" magazine, a publication available to students here at a price considerably less than that charged by your agency for Mr. Buckley's services. The article was read in its entirety, stylish phrase by stylish phrase, with appropriate oratorical flourishes. It was, however, the article for which Mr. Buckley received $1,000 when it was first read in Chicago and for which he received $3,500 from "Playboy" for its publication. It was not an original lecture."

"Because of this departure from our agreement, I have instructed the treasurer of The Carolina Forum to withhold payment of Mr. Buckley's fee until we receive an adjustment in rates. This reading cannot be as expensive as the lecture for which we contracted. We are of course still responsible for Mr. Buckley's travel expenses and will honor this obligation when the appropriate statement has been received.

"You are undoubtedly aware that The Forum is an agency of the UNC Student Government and is financed entirely through student funds. Our general practice is to offer our guests an honorarium of $100-$150 in addition to paying for travel and expenses. The budgeting of Mr. Buckley's $450 speaking fee represented a substantial departure from our established policy, a step which was taken after such deliberation. I can assure you that such a departure will not be made again. I think it unconscionable that the price of intellectual stimulation for a college audience must run so high, especially when the fee is for the reading of a previously published piece and not for personal and original contributions. I believe that in the future The Forum can meet its obligations to the UNC student body without indulging itself in luxuries of this sort."

Allen and Lawler Support

Allen and Lawler expressed their concurrences with the action of the Forum in withholding payment for Buckley's speech in a separate letter to the Babcock Agency.

The letter says in part: "We regret very much that Mr. Buckley diverged from the original topic to read his "Playboy" article. A divergence is justified if it is to be a lecture on another topic (e.g., Foreign Policy, the Cuban Crisis, etc.), but to read a published article is unprincipled. We officially support Mr. Mayer's position for adjustment in the fee."

Committee Gets Bad Check Bill

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature Thursday night approved bills appropriating $600 to the Carolina Forum and $555 to the State Affairs Committee.

It also adopted a resolution supporting the right of the IFC to determine the relationship between bull pledges and inactives and their fraternity.

The controversial "bad check" bill was again referred back to the Judicial Committee in order to give the legislators more time to confer with their constituents.

SL okayed a bill, introduced by Harry DeLung (UP), to appropriate $600 from the General Surplus for the Carolina Forum so that it could expand its spring program.

Henry Mayer, chairman of the Forum, indicated that it could operate on a limited basis on the remainder of its budget ($415) but that in order to get some well-known speakers fore money would would be necessary. He said that the Forum will sponsor lectures by Norman Thomas on Feb. 18 and Louis Harris on April 9.

Mayer added that this year the Carolina Forum has presented more programs than had been presented in the past three years combined.

State Affairs Bill

SL also passed a bill allocating $555 from the unappropriated balance to the Committee on State Affairs. The bill was introduced by Rufus Edmisten (SP) for Bill Hoyle, committee chairman.

Hoyle outlined the plans for his committee, which hopes to encourage the State Legislature to appropriate the necessary funds for a new College Union and an addition to Woollen Gym. He also presented an itemized account of what the committee expenditures will be.

Ford Rowan (SP), author of the bad check bill, said yesterday that "this bill, in order to be effective in safeguarding student rights and privileges, must be technical, and must still be worked on."

Christmas Was Different As Celebrated In Vienna

By BETSY BATTLE

Christmas season on Franklin Street, Chapel Hill is very busy with throngs of shoppers bustling about, but there is one shop that has a different, quieter and more serene air about it.

This store is Danziger's gift shop —"the old world gift shop." Mr. Danziger, a native of Vienna but now a successful Chapel Hill merchant, has beautiful memories of a Christmas season unlike the highly commercialized December rat-race of today.

Danziger—standing among the beautiful art objects, silver, china and various imported gifts—has a pensive expression as he muses over his earlier days in Austria.

In a soft Viennese accent he describes the Christmas shopping season, "On the last two Sundays before Christmas, Silver Sunday and Gold Sunday, all the shops were allowed to stay open."

"Christ Market" was a huge market place where parents took their children to shop for candy, gingerbread houses and decorations. "This place had a very festive yet religious atmosphere," he added with a smile as he looked out on to quite a different scene on Franklin Street.

With his thick eyebrows drawn together as he examined his clasped hands, he explained, "The attitude toward Christmas was a religious and emotional one. In the shops we sold many pictures and statues of the Saints and also candles."

He described the Christmas Eve Mass that everyone attended—"The beautiful, serene ceremony with thousands of candles illuminating the hundreds - of-years-old stained glass windows in the Gothic church.

"We don't eat turkey," he admitted with a twinkle in his unfaded dancing eyes. "Our delicacy is fish served with a hot Polish sauce.

"The modern world takes everything out of fantasy," he said with a sad smile as he explained about how excited the children were. He described the parents putting the children to bed early in the afternoon and then decorating the tree. The children would awake in the evening and attend mass and return to find their tree adorned with glittering candles and surrounded by toys.

"Why don't I go back to Vienna?" Mr. Danziger repeated, "because the most precious thing in life is memory, and one likes to remember things as they were."

Outside Danziger's Franklin St. is beginning to empty as the shoppers wind up a day of busy shopping and congratulate themselves on being through before the real rush begins.

Few Thefts Here: Beaumont

Officer Says Campus Cops Don't Try To Make Arrests

By SUSIE LEWIS

"There are always more thefts at this time of year," Officer A. J. Beaufont said, "for people need money for Christmas presents, and some are careless and leave their doors open with their wallets in plain sight."

He said, however, "That there's really been no rash of thefts this year. It has been better than in the past." He said that even though there have been fewer thefts than in the past pre-Christmas period, the ones that do occur are very distressing.

"It's very discouraging when you understand the high caliber of boys that we have here," Beaumont said. "The thefts that do occur are very annoying because we think we have an admissions office that does a good job of screening applicants."

Not the Type

Beaumont doesn't think that Carolina students are the type for thievery or malicious damage of property. He thinks Carolina is lucky because it is not in an industrialization area, and there are no really poor sections around it.

"There are more reports of stolen articles now," said Beaumont, "because students preparing to go home start looking for a sweater that mother gave them just before they came to school. They usually lost it long before but just never thought of it. Now they report it as stolen.

"Often there is very little that we can do," the policeman said. "Even when we have a good idea of who is responsible, the person who reported it chickens out, saying, 'Oh, if I had known that he had it, I wouldn't have reported it.'"

When things are reported stolen in the dorms, officers go to the dorm and ask questions, but they usually find that a door was open and a wallet in sight, so there's nothing that they can do.

IDC Checks

"We try to keep out of the dorms," Beaumont said, "because we don't want to take away the student's freedom. The IDC sometimes posts someone in the dorms and they often check to be sure doors are locked."

If the policemen sees anyone on campus they think is not a student, they make him prove who he is. In this way, they get rid of strangers.

"The campus police have the same power that the town police have," Beaumont said, "but we don't arrest anyone very often. We try to have the attitude that everybody is somebody's little brother or son, and we don't want to ruin their life by an arrest."

Beaumont said that students often don't realize that they are not eligible for the Peace Corps or a Civil Service job if they have ever been arrested—even for anything as minor as drunkenness.

"We try to help the students," he said. "If the students act like men, we treat them like men."

Officer Beaumont said that campus policemen, as a part of their effort to make as few arrests as possible, wear, white hats and when it rains, yellow raincoats, making themselves easily spotted by students. Their hope is that students will notice them and perhaps change their minds about doing something illegal.

Stevenson And JFK: Unanimity at the Top?

Adlai Stevenson's misfortune flowing from the Bartlett-Alsop article in the Saturday Evening Post is disturbing for two reasons.

One—if the President is dissatisfied with Mr. Stevenson as U.N. ambassador, it might lead to his replacement—a misfortune in itself, to lose such an able statesman.

Two—and more disquieting for the future—is that Mr. Kennedy may begin surrounding himself only with "Yes" men, with men who can be counted on to agree with and support wholeheartedly the President's wishes. The first sign of this possible trend came when Chester Bowles was demoted as a result of his opposition to the Bay of Pigs fiasco in April, 1961. It will be much more serious if Mr. Stevenson should be removed from his important and very sensitive post—removed for the "crime" of being honest and speaking his mind.

If this trend is allowed to continue indefinitely the United States could come to resemble the dictatorial nations, where only one view is heard at the top, and eventually, the "leader" is told only what he wants to hear. And where, eventually, the nation suffers. (JC)

Essays On Democracy

Entries are still being accepted in the "ideals of democracy" essay writing competition.

The competition was initiated by a political science professor in answer to a three-part column in the Tar Heel defending Fascism.

The professor will award $15 to the Poli Sci 41 student who writes the best paper on democracy and "its essential ideal of equality."

There is no requirement of length, although papers should not greatly exceed three double-spaced typed pages. Entries should be typed and double-spaced if possible, and turned into the Daily Tar Heel offices, second floor of Graham Memorial.

The competition closes Jan. 10. The editors of the Tar Heel will judge the competition.

Eastland 'Ritmitic'

More on Bill Buckley:

Introducing "Eastland Arithmetic": One cup of coffee plus one Negro equals one mixed marriage. (This stuff is very complex and should be taught only to those students whose intelligence ranks somewhere near that of the Senator from Mississippi.)

When Senator Eastland derived this formula just before the Freedom Rides he probably had no idea Norman Mailer would hear of it. Somehow Mailer did, and concluded that the sexual "superiority" of the Negro male was the true cause of Southern resistance to racial integration.

That was hardly what Senator Eastland had in mind, but nothing delights Mailer more than having someone take issue with him. And William Buckley grabbed up the bait like candy.

Not even Jimmy Eastland would have come before a college audience to correlate sex with a sit-in. Or for that matter would Norman Mailer. Not so our boy from Yale. His stooping to ridicule Mailer was an insult to the intelligence of his listeners, at least to most of them.

For his purposes Senator Eastland has discovered the sex issue to be very effective. He can yell, "Protect your women from the Black Plague (Negroes)," and have the rednecks rioting in the streets and sending him back to Washington. Mailer's purpose was equally forgivable though no more honorable. If nobody disagrees with him, his books don't sell and Mailer doesn't eat. Unfortunately the author plans to keep eating.

But we aren't rednecks and we read Norman Mailer only after Jeff runs out of Playboy. Furthermore, we don't intend to follow William Buckley as he follows Norman Mailer between the legs of the universe at $450 a peek.

Brrr . . .

Chapel Hill is known to some as the "Southern Part of Heaven." However, Wednesday and Thursday, it was more like the southern part of Eskimo land.

Chapel Hill, over 1,000 miles south of Alaska, shivered and shook Thursday with a low temperature of 6 degrees. In contrast, Nome, Alaska, "basked" in 31 degree weather.

Such mixups as this make us wonder which Kennedy is actually running the weather bureau. It may be that Bobby is trying to get back at the South for the cold shoulder he got in Mississippi last month. On the other hand, maybe Jack is trying to boost the economy by increasing the cost of citrus fruits, or maybe he is trying to reduce the surplus of fuel oil. Then too, Jackie may want to go ice skating instead of water skiing.

Whatever the reason, would someone "up there" please turn on the heat?

"There's No Secret About My Black Box Plan"

The War Games

After Cuba—What And How

By MAX ASCOLI
Reporter Magazine

It was Thanksgiving Day. The newspapers and the air waves featured two parallel items of news: The Strategic Air Command was bringing back to normal the number of bombers aloft at all times and those on fifteen-minute ground alert; Marshal Malinovsky, it was reported from Moscow, had been ordered to have "rocket troops and intercontinental rocket troops transferred from full combat alert to normal training and activity."

The war games were over. Since both Red and Blue became armed with nuclear weapons, no previous test had ever come so close to the real thing. The peace for our time the world has endured since 1945 had never been so nearly identical to war for our time. Never was the test so demanding or imposed on so many—a test of our leaders and of their leaders, of our people and of their people. We Americans, as well as our allies, have all been called upon and have given our measure. But are there people anywhere, irrespective of their alignment, who have not felt that their very existence was at stake?

Now that the war games are over, it is imperative to start reviewing the various actions and counteractions that took place. We must understand first of all how the confrontation turned out to be a game, and who was responsible for starting it, and what are the lessons to be learned. This will require a long, sustained effort, but it is not too early to attempt drawing some tentative conclusions. As in the traditional, old-fashioned war games, all conclusions cannot help being tentative. Yet the lessons learned and their cumulative impact may turn out to be decisive.

There is the question of victory and defeat. These old and elemental terms must be used in a so-to-speak way, sheltered from their literal significance with an abundant use of quote-unquote. All the basic issues on which our will and that of the Soviets was tested became manageable when their literal meaning got so diluted as to be nearly unrecognizable. "Inspection," indeed "on-site inspection," came to be an exercise in picture-taking, high above the site. "Verification" was the name adopted for a peek at the lifting of tarpaulins covering crates with something or other inside. And let's not talk about inspection and verification by the United Nations. U Thant, after a futile attempt to apply the Taft-Hartley cooling-off technique, rushed to Cuba to offer Castro reassurances about the sacredness of his sovereignty, and suggested to him that some kind of UN presence (on site, to be sure, but not inspecting) could be a guarantee against aggression. Guess who the aggressor might have been.

Yet there is no doubt that a number of these so-to-speak or let's-pretend operations had a positive, effective function, if for no other reason than that both adversaries agreed on them and therefore turned an imminent war into an exercise in gamesmanship.

Nearly everything about this Cuban affair is baffling, and there are too many mysterious and even sinister factors that must become known to make mature judgment possible. Some of the things that happened may never be known. Take what President Kennedy said at his press conference about the presence in Cuba "of a number of Soviet ground combat units" charged with the "protection of offensive weapons systems. Protection against whom? Castro's army? To what extent did Castro know about the weapons system in his country — not to speak of how to use it? Castro will never tell, nor will Mikoyan.

As to why it all happened, there can be no doubt, and no research is needed. Khrushchev's action in sneaking nuclear weapons into Cuba can in no way be offset or, even less, become forgivable because of his promptness in carting them out. Yet in some sections of opinion in allied countries, and to a minor degree in our own, there seems to be something like a tendency to nominate Khrushchev for the next Nobel Peace Prize. If war has been avoided, if ultimate destruction has turned into gamesmanship it is only and exclusively due to our President and to our country. Had not the President acted as he did at the time he did, had the Soviet atomic batteries been unveiled in Cuba, then both Soviet recklessness and despair on our side would inevitably have pulled the trigger of all those weapons that remained unfired.

With all the qualifications and the quote-unquotes the war games demand, we have won. There is enough hard reality in our victory and their retreat to give to the Cuban episode an immense exemplary significance. Total nuclear war can be avoided only if we go on winning, and don't let the fruits of victory be taken from us.

Christmas Madness In The Legislature

By ALAN GOLDSMITH

(Hark, the friendly mongoose sings — glory to the new born werewolf!)

The student legislature was about to reach an exploding point. A resolution had been introduced to abolish the formal recognition of Christmas in the United States. A young legislator was rising to his feet. (Innocence was marked with decay and decay was marked with innocence.)

"Mr. Chairman, this resolution strikes me as ridiculous! Is there anyone here who truly feels that Christmas should be abolished?"

A buz of voices rippled through the room. The editor of the school newspaper scribbled notes frantically. He was seated in the rear of the room. Was there a smile on his face? Across the room another legislator was rising to his feet. (A mad dog does not necessarily foam at the mouth.)

"Mr. Chairman, if I may answer my disturbed friend over there. There is nobody in this room who doesn't wish to celebrate Christmas, but there are those in the outside world who fall victims every year to Christmas because the state formally recognizes Christmas as a holiday. These people are subject to persecution simply because they do not wish to celebrate Christmas. My disturbed friend certainly remembers the case of a certain Mr. Ebeneezer Scrooge as told by Mr. Dickens. This is only one of millions examples of people being literally forced to believe in Christmas." The legislator paused to let the meaning of his words sink in. The editor scribbled. This was controversial. He smiled. The legislator continued.

"I say that it is the solemn duty of every legislator in this assembly to vote for this resolution. It is their duty as legislators? It is their duty as human beings!" (Christmas is commercialism! Christmas is commercialism! Christmas is commercialism!)

There was a brief silence in the room — then a burst of commotion. Several legislators were on their feet screaming — seeking recognition from the chair. A member of the fraternity party received this recognition. He held several sheets of papr in his hand making a dramatic gesture. (Mine enemy grows redder)

"Mr. Chairman, I have here in my hand something so important that it concerns not only the legislature but the safety of the United States of America!" The next sentence he shouted. "I have documented proof that there are exactly 27 card carrying communists sitting in this assembly!" (Christmas is a holiday! Christmas is a holiday! Christmas is a holiday!)

Some members of the legislature knew in the back of their minds that they had heard this speech made in a movie or somewhere not too long ago, but the room had been caught up in too much excitement for them to think. Visions of the American Legion, Algier Hiss, and Eleanor Roosevelt began to float around in the room as angry voices shouted and cursed. (If I had a hammer, I'd bash my opponents brains out!)

The editor continued to scribble. He wanted a beer, but this was controversy. He dared not leave. He smiled.

A pretty co-ed received the chair's recognition. She spoke in a sugar, sweet, southern voice which hinted of moonlight nights of untold bliss. The room became quiet again, but the visions of the American Legion, Alger Hiss, and Eleanor Roosevelt remained.

"Mr. Chairman," she drawled in her sugar, sweet, southern voice. Someone sighed in the back of the room. Was it the editor? The three visions began to disappear as the new vision of Dr. Freud began to float near the co-ed. (All the world is a Skinner box.)

"Mr. Chairman, I don't think there are any communists in this assembly," she drawled in her sugar, sweet, southern voice. "And I also think that Christmas is very, very, good for America and everybody. So let's not argue about it."

Something akin to an organic shock of satisfaction spread through the legislature like Lolita chasing Humbert Humbert or Humbert Humbert chasing Lolita. What chance did the American Legion, Alger Hiss, or Eleanor Roosevelt have? (What chance do any of us have?) None! Christmas had been saved!

The legislature adjourned, and the legislators went back to their dorms and fraternities thinking of mistletoe, a Johnny Mathis Christmas album, snow, a deserted cabin, fire, soft red lips, and warm soft flesh. And this was the way the world would end?

Controversy had been crushed. The editor frowned as he drank his beer. He thought of the American legion, Algier Hiss, Eleanor Roosevelt, and maybe even the bomb. (Bang, bang, you're dead Santa Claus!) He drank his beer and pondered these things and then he did a funny thing. He leaned over and kissed the girl with the sugar, sweet, southern voice. And this was the way the world would end — we all hoped!

Friday's Decision Correct

The Greensboro Daily News

President William Friday of the Consolidated University of North Carolina has forthrightly, and correctly, removed his name from those now under speculation as gubernatorial timber in 1964.

President Friday's educational mission in North Carolina is far too important to have it bandied about as a political football by pressure groups or used as a stalking horse for others. When Dr. Frank Porter Graham, then president of the university, stepped down from his position to accept appointment as U. S. senator by Gov. Kerr Scott, his move, unfortunately, embroiled the university in politics at a level not in its best interests.

If another university president 12 years later became an acknowledged candidate for Governor, with all the trappings of a full-blown and hard-fought campaign ahead, his action could not fail to make the university a central issue in the enveloping political struggle; and while a university should never hesitate to take on a fight when one is necessary, this would be the wrong fight at the wrong time and the wrong place.

Of course the university is already involved in the general politics of a forward-moving North Carolina. But it cannot afford to have its chief officials using their prestigious offices as stepping-stones into the active political arena.

The scurrilous and naturally anonymous literature now being distributed about a proposed Friday candidacy illuminates the vindictiveness of certain pressure groups. With all kinds of crosscurrents now flooding North Carolina — a new political competitiveness, crucial decisions in higher education and controversy on athletic policies — men of expediency and ambition will naturally try to drag good and dedicated public servants like President Friday through the political quagmire. The very fact that these current attempts are anonymous tells enough about them. The mud will end up spattering those who try to smear it on others. And even some well-intentioned citizens who have been unknowingly used to attain objectives for others will wake up to the viciousness of the political game.

In the meantime President Friday has asserted his own determination to continue using his considerable administrative and educational skill in the dedicated task to which he pledged it when he became president of the Consolidated University of North Carolina. That job is honored most when it is under attack. And the man who holds the job now, we know, understands that.

Assemblies Grant Education More

(From the Joint Office of Institutional Research, Washington.)

State legislatures across the country appropriated $1.8 billion in state tax founds for higher education in 1962-63, a gain of 24.5 percent over a two-year period, according to a recent report.

This compares with an increase of 22.7 percent in the previous two-year period, 1959-61. State tax appropriations must be compared on a two-year basis, since most state legislatures make bi-annual appropriations.

The report was prepared by Visiting Professor M. M. Chambers of the University of Michigan and published by the Joint Office of Institutional Research, Washington, D. C.

The 50-state figure provided for teaching programs, organized research, agricultural and engineering experiment stations, hospitals, county agents, adult education programs and other public service activities. The $1.8 billion total, representing a two-year increase of $357 million, includes over 400 colleges and universities. It is based only on appropriations of state tax funds for operating expenses and does not include reappropriated income from tuitions, dormitories, athletic events and other campus enterprises.

State-by-state gain ranged from New York's 75 percent increase to Louisiana's 5 percent rise. Appropriations again declined in only two states—in Alabama by 1.5 percent and in Montana by 0.5 percent.

The report found that the 20 states which operate local community junior colleges had appropriated an additional $81 million to these schools in 1962-63, an increase of about 42 percent over the total appropriated in the earlier two-year period.

Tar Heels Invade Indiana Today

Dean Smith's Men Risk Perfect Mark

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's Tar Heels risk an undefeated record today when they visit Indiana of the Big Ten Conference, a highly-regarded basketball team which has lost three straight games, surprisingly.

Coach Branch McCracken's Hoosiers had little trouble beating Virginia of the Atlantic Coast Conference, but since that opening-season contest Drake, Iowa State and Missouri have knocked down the boys from Bloomington.

A pair of fabulous sophomore twins, Dick and Tom VanArsdale, were expected to give the Big Tenners a boost over their 13-11 mark of last year—but the Hurryin' Hoosiers have started slow.

Top returning letterman is Jimmymy Rayl, described by the Hoosier coach as "one of the greatest shooters in the game today." Rayl averaged 29.8 a game as a junior and placed on the second All-American team. Rayl is a 6-2 guard and will probably team up with 6-4½ Dick VanArsdale at the backcourt spots.

Winston Fairfield, a 6-9, 245-pound senior center, is the biggest Hoosier. Probable starters at forward are Tom Bolyard, a 6-4 senior who averaged 18.6 last season, and Tom VanArsdale, identical in size, appearance and playing style with his twin.

Top Hoosier reserves are senior lettermen Dave Granger and Dave Porter, and sophomore forward Jon McGlocklin.

The UNC-Indiana series began last year when the Indianans edged Carolina, 76-70, at Greensboro. The Tar Heels held Rayl to 15 points, his second lowest total during the season. Bolyard led the taller Hoosiers with 22 points.

The scoring balance on Coach Dean Smith's Tar Heel team is equal to any in the nation.

Yogi Poteet is top scorer with a 16.3 average in the victories over Georgia, Clemson and South Carolina.

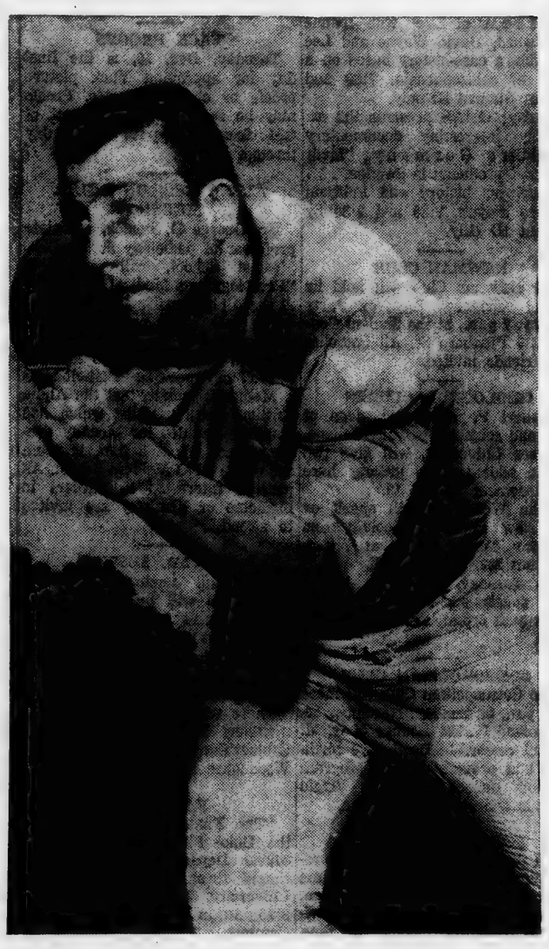
Charlie Shaffer follows closely with a 14.7 mark and Larry Brown is a close third at 14.3.

The sophomores—Billy Cunningham and Ray Respess—are also averaging in double figures. Cunningham's 18 points against South Carolina moved his average to 11.3, and Respess is hitting for an even 10 points a game.

Top reserve Mike Cooke holds a 7.0 average and can fill in at either guard or forward capably.

Today's contest will be broadcast from Bloomington over radio station WCHL at 1:55 p.m.

After the Indiana game, the Tar Heels will fly to Louisville, Kentucky, for another big intersectional game Monday night with Coach Adolph Rupp's Kentucky Wildcats.



Packers Can Clinch Title

The Green Bay Packers are prohibitive favorites to beat the weak Los Angeles Rams Sunday and thus qualify to meet the New York Giants in the National Football League's championship playoff for the second straight year. The Detroit Lions, who meet the Bears at Chicago Sunday, would need a victory and a Green Bay loss in order to wind up in a tie for 1st place and force a division playoff.

Honors Bob Zaback

Athlete Of The Week

By ED DUPREE

It may seem odd, but this week's Athlete of the Week is a football player. Even odder is the fact that Bob Zaback wasn't a starter on Coach Jim Hickey's eleven.

Last Saturday night, Zaback, a 6-1, 215-pound center from New City, New York, was selected as the squad's Most Valuable Player by his Tar Heel teammates.

The vote of the squad was announced at the annual football banquet and Bob was visibly moved when he received the special award.

"No one will ever know how much this means—how much it meant to me playing football at Carolina for four years," said Zaback.

The New Yorker played behind co-captain Joe Craver for three seasons. Craver made it a clean sweep for the centers when he was named recipient of the William Prouty Award (based upon academics, athletic prowess and campus leadership) and the Educational Foundation award, a watch with a Tar Heel insignia.

"If Joe's the best pivot in the league," said one rugged lineman about All-Conference Craver, "then Zaback's the next best. Joe had to hustle to keep his job."

Filling the vacancies left by Craver and Zaback will be one of the biggest problems facing the Carolina coaching staff in preparing for the 1963 season.

Wrestlers Lose To Davidson

North Carolina's varsity wrestlers lost their third straight match Thursday night when Davidson edged the Tar Heels, 14-12.

Coach Sam Barnes' men fell eight points behind in the first four matches and couldn't catch the Wildcats of the Southern Conference.

Bob Crook became the first sophomore to win on the mats for Carolina when he decisioned Davidson's Burns in the 137-pound division.

The visiting Wildcats had won the first two matches by decisions in the 123 and 130-pound matches, then stretched their lead to 11-3 when Davidson's Parker pinned acting captain Willis Johnson in the 147-pound class.

Jack Jones, Gene Record and Jerry Cabe—all lettermen—recorded UNC victories by decisions in the 157, 177 and heavyweight divisions, respectively.

The summary:

123 — Wright (D) decisioned Fishman (NC); 130—Bisard (D) decisioned Furr (NC); 137—Crook (NC) decisioned Burns (D); 147—Parker (D) pinned Johnson (NC), 7:10; 157—Jones (NC) decisioned Jones (D); 167—Mills (D) decisioned Dworin (NC); 177—Record (NC) decisioned Day (D); Heavyweight — Cabe (NC) decisioned Walls (D).

Mantle Again Top Slugger

BOSTON (UPI) — Mickey Mantle, who will be talking contract with the New York Yankees pretty soon, was provided with some ammunition Friday when he was named the American League's slugging champion of 1962.

Mantle compiled a slugging percentage of .605 with 228 total bases in 377 official times at bat, according to figures released by American League headquarters here.

It marked the second straight year that Mantle topped the league in slugging. He also drew the most walks in the circuit last season, 122.

Second to Mantle in slugging was Minnesota's Harmon Killebrew with .545 while Rocky Colavito of Detroit was third with .514. Norm Cash, also of Detroit, had a slugging percentage of .513, and Bob Allison of Minnesota rounded out the top five with .511.

Jim Gentile of Baltimore drew the most intentional walks, 16, while Nellie Fox' 12 strikeouts were the fewest among all regular players. Killebrew struck out the most times, 142.

Cash and Bobby Del Greco of Kansas City were hit by pitches most often, 13 times apiece. Carl Yastrzemski of Boston grounded into the most double plays, 27.

SAE Gridders Meet Duke's Mural Champs

The intramural football champions of UNC and Duke will meet in Duke Stadium this afternoon at 3 in the first intermural contest of the year between the two schools.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon of UNC will be matched against the Duke champions, Phi Delta Theta.

The SAE's are led by All-Campus selections Ned Martin and Scott Trotter in the backfield and Jon Commander, Bob Segrest and Keith Stoneman in the line.

Half of the game will be played by Duke's intramural rules and half by Carolina's.

Each team will be coached by two members of the regular coaching staff of the schools.

The game is sponsored by the Campus Chest organizations on the two campuses. Admission charge will be 50 cents at the main gate of the stadium. Proceeds will be divided between the two Campus Chests.

DECK THE HALLS

When you think of Christmas gifts you naturally think of Marlboro cigarettes, leading seller in flip-top box in all fifty states—and if we annex Wales, in all fifty-one—and if we annex Lapland—in all fifty-two. This talk about annexing Wales and Lapland is, incidentally, not just idle speculation. Great Britain wants to trade Wales to the United States for a desert. Great Britain needs a desert desperately on account of the tourist trade. Tourists are always coming up to the Prime Minister or the Lord Privy Seal or like that and saying, "I'm not knocking your country, mind you. It's very quaint and picturesque, etc. what with Buckingham Palace and Bovril and Scotland Yard, etc., but where's your desert?" (Before I forget, let me point out that Scotland Yard, Britain's plain-clothes police branch, was named after Wally Scotland and Fred Yard who invented plain clothes. The American plain-clothes force is called the FBI after Frank B. Inchcliff, who invented fingerprints. Before Mr. Inchcliff's invention, everybody's fingers were absolutely glassy smooth. This, as you may imagine, played hob with the identification of newborn babies in hospitals. From 1791 until 1904 no American parent ever brought home the right baby from the hospital. This later became known as the Black Tom Explosion.)

But I digress. England, I was saying, wants to trade Wales for a desert. Sweden wants to trade Lapland for Frank B. Inchcliff. The reason is that Swedes to this day still don't have fingerprints. As a result, identification of babies in Swedish hospitals is so haphazard that Swedes flatly refuse to bring their babies home. There are, at present, nearly a half-billion unclaimed babies in Swedish hospitals—some of them well over eighty years old.

But I digress. We were speaking of Christmas gifts which naturally put us in mind of Marlboro cigarettes. What could be more welcome at Christmas time than Marlboro's flavor, Marlboro's soft pack, Marlboro's flip-top box? What indeed would be more welcome at any time of year—winter or summer, rain or shine, night or day? Any time, any season, when you light a Marlboro you can always be certain that you will get the same mild, flavorful, completely comfortable smoke.

There are, of course, other things you can give for Christmas besides Marlboro cigarettes. If, for example, you are looking for something to give a music lover, let me call to your attention a revolutionary new development in phonographs—the Low-fi phonograph. The Low-fi, product of years of patient research, has so little fidelity to the record you put on it that if, for instance, you put "Stardust" on the turntable, "Melancholy Baby" will come out. This is an especially welcome gift for people who have grown tired of "Stardust".

Merry Christmas to all and to all a good night.

• • •

The makers of Marlboro cigarettes, who take pleasure in bringing you this column throughout the school year, wish to join old Max in extending greetings of the Season.

ANNOUNCING THE 1963-1964 AFFLERBACH FELLOWSHIPS*

BACKGROUND OF THE COMPETITION: No matter how much time our People in Naming spend thinking up just the right color names for our shirts (Maize, Stone Green, Peat Blue, etc.), the Eagle Secret Shoppers inevitably report that you choose your Eagle shirts with such statements as "Gimme six of them greenish ones" or "Could I bother you for two or three dozen of those stri-ped ones." Our problem is in selecting names which will capture the imagination of the shirt-buying public. ✣ NATURE OF THE COMPETITION: The 10 Afflerbachs for 1963-64 will go to those persons suggesting the best names for our colors. Imagination-capturing names, like Well Red, Long Green, Charlie Brown, or Navel Orange. You may wish to inspect our shirts—for inspiration, if not purchase. Eagle shirts don't always have an Eagle label—some fine stores sew in their own—but if you write us, we'll suggest your nearest Eagle Shirt Color Inspection Station. ✣ STIPEND: The grand prize winner will have his (or her) choice of a Traveling Afflerbach (a grand all-expense-paid weekend at the Bush House in Quakertown—an exciting chance to become acquainted with the natives—many of whom are us, including Miss Revera Afflerbach, herself) or a Stationary Afflerbach (a dozen Eagle Button-down shirts). The 9 other Afflerbachs will consist of a grant of four Eagle Button-down shirts. Each, that is. ✣ RULES: The competition is open to all students and faculty members at schools, as well as to those who have filled in the coupon below.

*This, actually, is Eagle's second competition in as many years. Those of you who partook of the first, that is, what to do with the pocket on a Shirtkerchief, will doubtless be excited to learn that the book containing many of your letters to Miss Afflerbach has now been published by the Macmillan Co. and is now available at your bookseller. We have called it Dear Miss Afflerbach, or The Postman Hardly Ever Rings 11,342 Times, and the price is $4.95.

How to see Britain for less than $45 a week

For less than $45 a week, you can stay at friendly youth hostels, visit theatres and palaces, meet charming people, eat well and see the country. Clip coupon below for your free student's Travel Kit.

SOME thrifty students say you can have the time of your life in Britain for less than it costs to stay home. The reason is that most prices in Britain are lower than in the U.S.

2 cents a mile is the price of bus travel. Or you can hire a bicycle for only $3 a week.

50 cents is average for a night's lodging at Britain's 400 youth hostels. Join the American Youth Hostels Association before you go.

55 cents buys you a seat at the Shakespeare Season of Plays at Stratford. A gallery seat in London's theatres is only fifty cents.

$254 pays for a six-weeks' course at Oxford, Birmingham or Edinburgh universities. Price includes meals, lodging, tuition and excursions. Plus the chance of making friends with other visiting students.

Free! Any of Britain's 50 cathedrals, and most museums and art galleries.

Seeing Britain on less than $45 a week—typical expense sheet

3 nights in London	$ 9.00
4 nights in Youth Hostels	$ 2.00
Breakfast, lunch and dinner for seven days	$23.86
Bicycle hire for one week	$ 3.00
Visits to Tower of London, castle and stately home	.84
Two visits to the theatre	$ 1.00
Incidentals	$ 5.00
Total	$44.84

Transatlantic fares are surprisingly modest, too. With a college charter flight, you can fly by jet from New York to London and back for about $250.

NSA Delegates Told Of Group's Increasing Importance

NAACP Negotiates For Integration At NC Hospital

NAACP Chairman David Dansby reported Thursday on efforts to negotiate for the desegregation of Memorial Hospital.

Memorial Hospital, according to Dansby, is at the present time segregated, having separate waiting rooms and wards for Negroes and whites.

He said that the Hospital Committee, which has been trying to negotiate with the administration on this problem for nearly a year and a half, has reported that negotiations seem to be fruitless.

Dansby said that this committee has been trying "to work its way up the chain of command" rather than attempting to go directly to top and risk allienating the administration as a whole. He said that the NAACP is not trying to embarrass the University, but only achieve integration.

He made it clear, however, that if negotiations continue to be fruitless, the group will have little choice but to appeal directly to the public.

Demonstrations, if resorted to, would not be aimed at keeping people from going to the hospital, but at awakening the public to the "policies of this university."

Dansby said that at the present time they are in the process of contacting the NAACP's legal advisor to see if there are funds available for instigation of court action against the hospital.

Dansby stressed, however, that the group is still hoping that negotiations will work and is arranging meetings with Deans Berry and Clark.

Academic Affairs

Discussion then turned to Negro high schools in North Carolina and their exclusion from the academic affairs program of the university.

Dansby said that in the past the Office of Admissions has neglected to include Negro high schools in the program which involves sending handbooks and other materials to North Carolina schools.

It was also brought out that the University Housing Office although it has eliminated the race section from on campus housing request cards, still persists in acting as the agent for segregated off-campus housing.

Dansby said that again negotiations would be pursued, but if they failed, he would advocate getting a court injunction to force integration. He said that this could be done on the grounds that a state organization was assisting segregated housing.

A report said that the NAACP's efforts to integrate the ten segregated eating places in Chapel Hill had been, on the whole, successful. Dansby said that they would not know the exact extent of the cooperation of the restaurant owners on this issue until after Christmas.

Internships In New York Available

Professor Frederic Cleaveland, chairman of the Political Science Department, announced Wednesday the extension of the Department's U.N. intern program for a second summer. "The program was extremely successful last summer," said Dr. Cleaveland, "and I am glad we can continue it for another year."

The internships, which are financed by a grant from The Institute for International Order, will carry a stipend of $600 to cover travel and living expenses of each student while in New York.

Interns will work at the headquarters of the United Nations throughout July and August 1963 and will be assigned duties with the Secretariat in such branches as the Technical Assistance Board and the Special Fund.

Four internships will be available, at least one of which will be filled by a graduate student. Applications will be accepted from any student who will have completed his junior year by the end of this academic year but who will not have finished his senior year. Applicants will not be restricted as to major.

Selection will be made by a three-man committee consisting of Professors Cleaveland, Keener Frazer and Andrew Scott. Ability, preparation and interest in the field of international affairs will be the criteria used by the Committee.

Application forms can be obtained from Mrs. Richey, Room 101 Caldwell Hall. All applications must be returned to that office by January 11, 1963.

5 Frats Given Fines After 'Dook' Fiasco

By VANCE BARRON JR.

Three fraternities were found "not guilty" by the IFC court Thursday night on the charge that their floats in the "Beat Dook" parade were "damaging to the mutual interest of fraternities."

Eight fraternities, who had previously been criticized for their "objectionable" floats by letters of censure from the Office of Student Affairs, were summoned before the court as a result of the parade and "the ensuing publicity which was derogatory to fraternities here at Carolina and to fraternities in general," according to a statement by IFC president Jim Dillashaw, and president of the IFC court, Dave Underwood.

The three fraternities which were acquitted by the court are Delta Upsilon, Lambda Chi Alpha, and Phi Kappa Sigma. The remaining five were found guilty and received an "appropriate punishment," presumably a fine. The court did not release information concerning the basis on which any fraternity was convicted or acquitted.

State-Wide Comment

The issue arose when several fraternities sponsored floats in the "Beat Dook" parade that were criticized as being in bad taste. As a result, the University received much unfavorable comment across the state. The Office of Student Affairs sent official letters of censure to eight fraternities and one dormitory, singling them out for condemnation.

Several members of normally constituted IFC court were members of some of the fraternities involved, including chairman Dave Underwood. In order to try the cases, five new members were temporarily appointed by Dillashaw. Charlie Battle, vice-president of the IFC, was appointed chairman as the "ranking member" of the executive committee.

No Administrative Pressure

Dillashaw and Underwood yesterday issued a statement about the court's action saying that, "it should be emphasized that these cases were tried not in response to administrative action, but rather as a matter of principle—that being the over-all welfare of fraternities."

The statement went on to say that the IFC felt that the atmosphere of this year's "Beat Dook" parade was the result of a "growing trend over the past few years." The purpose of the IFC in trying cases was to show that "students are willing to handle these offenses."

The IFC was particularly concerned about the adverse publicity that arose concerning the issue and said that the cases were tried as a result of this as well as the fact that the floats were objectionable.

The statement concluded by saying that "it is believed by the court that students in general are capable of reaching a mature and objective decision in matters of student government, providing the opportunity is reserved for them."

Five Guilty

The five fraternities who were found guilty are Delta Kappa Epsilon, St. Anthony Hall (Delta Psi), Kappa Alpha, Sigma Chi, and Phi Gamma Delta.

The exact punishment was not revealed by the court, but a spokesman for one of the fraternities found guilty said that his fraternity was fined $50 and put on general probation.

Al Lowenstein Cites Growth In The South

Al Lowenstein keynoted the Fall Regional Conference of the National Student Association Friday night with a speech on Southern students problems and responsibility to the region, the nation and the world.

Lowenstein a UNC graduate, spoke on the growth of the NSA since its founding sixteen years ago, and of its increasing significance in world affairs. The association, said Lowenstein, has met more and more problems and responsibilities as member colleges and universities have continued to expand since World War II.

Discussion groups, seminars, and a final plenary session were held Saturday to discuss Southern school participation in NSA.

At the final plenary session of the conference, Harry DeLung, UNC NSA Co-ordinator was elected to represent the Carolina-Virginia Region of twenty-nine schools at the National Executive Committee meeting in December.

The group passed a resolution in favor of having a newsletter for all the members telling of the members' activities.

DeLung also gave a speech at the plenary about the ways in which schools in this region can get the most use out of their membership in the association, and how they can best voice their opinions.

"A great deal of progress made in educational circles," said Lowenstein, "has been made by the National Student Association." The reason for this, he said, is that NSA, as student group in a college controlled by students, faculties, and administrators, is the only group that can view problems from the student's position.

The speaker pointed out the great change in the attitudes of southern students, especially in human rights, and how NSA has helped to bring about this change. NSA has brought to campuses all over the nation a cross-section of attitudes and opinions which are invaluable to students who are becoming more and more specialized in their formal education.

Lowenstein referred specifically to technical schools, like State College where he is now teaching, as examples of institutions which have benefited from NSA's broad range of student involvement in world affairs.

Need For Reconciliation

Saturday morning, Mike Lawler, Vice-president of the UNC Student Body, spoke on NSA's relation to the Southern University Student Government Association. He pointed out the differences between NSA and SUSGA, which is an organization of schools which withdrew from NSA several years ago.

Lawler stressed the need for a reconciliation between the two groups. He said NSA representatives have been trying to give SUSGA officials a broader viewpoint in some of the deep-south schools.

Duke Marston, the Regional Chairman of NSA from Duke University, led a morning discussion on the role of NSA in the South.

The afternoon sessions of the conference included a discussion of three topics of current interest, which have concerned schools in the Carolina-Virginia Region. Henry Mayer of UNC spoke on "Non-violence", Mike Putzel of UNC on "National student political and Action Groups", and Helen Putzel of Hollins spoke on "Federal Aid to Education".

Mike Putzel described the manner in which some student political and action groups have used a basically democratic means of self-government, but have delegated so much authority to their national leaders that the campus chapters have actually lost their own rights of deviation from national policy.

Helen Putzel spoke about several of the reasons why the Federal Aid to Education failed and how the National Student Association has taken a stand favoring the plan.

She said that religious and administrative factors were major issues in the bill's failure, but that there have actually been many kinds of federal aid to our school systems and that another bill similar to the one which failed two years ago is likely to come before Congress again this year.

Special Session Of Legislature Slated

The Student Legislature will hold a special session tomorrow night at 7:30 at the request of the Student Party. A petition calling for the special meeting was circulated by Party Chairman Robin Britt and was signed by 14 SP members and one UP member.

Britt said that he felt the special session was necessary so that the group could consider the purchase of a student bus.

He said that any of a number of other bills, including the Yack appropriation bill, might be considered.

North Carolina Magazine To Make Its Second Appearance This Week

After a close call with death the second issue of the Daily Tar Heel supplement, "The North Carolina Magazine," will appear Tuesday.

The second issue of the magazine had been killed by DTH editors after the apparent lack of student support. Then the magazine was revived after numerous letters were received, protesting its obituary notice. Most letters noted that the magazine should continue to publish in an effort to achieve its full potential as a humor, satire and general interest magazine.

"Admittedly," said the magazine's editor Mike Robinson, "I had regrets about the first issue, but due to the small amount of advertising we couldn't use good material that we already had.

"This time I am almost fully satisfied that the magazine is everything it should be."

Robinson said Tuesday's issue contains material that was to be included in the first issue, but did not appear because of lack of space, or because the authors did not have their copy ready on time.

Included in Tuesday's issue, which is printed in green ink, is a humorous account of a war correspondent's experiences with Chinese prisoners of war in Korea. The story, entitled "The Dai Baio's Private War," was written by Lawrence Jacobs, a Korean war veteran who graduated from Carolina last year.

In addition there are three short stories, a full page cartoon by Ray Chatham, three satirical pieces and a critical review by Joe Williman of three best-selling war novels.

Of special interest, Robinson said, is a clever article by the well-known Barbara Simon in which she explains how it is possible to choose dates or a spouse according to the kinds of food he or she orders in a restaurant. Very precisely, she pinpoints what type of people order certain kinds of food, Robinson said.

"All in all, the magazine has a good sprinkling of spice, sugar, peppermint, as well as a few traces of gall, mustard and vinegar," Robinson said. "I expect it to act as the mild polemic tonic that the campus has needed for a long time."

The magazine will be distributed free around campus and town on the same basis as the DTH.

HELLEL SCHEDULE

The following schedule will be observed on Monday 1:30 p.m., Israeli Dance Workshop; 4:30 p.m., Great Controversies in Judaism class; 6 p.m., Freshman Dinner; 8 p.m., cabinet meeting; 8:30 p.m., Chanukah program.

Mariner Will Orbit Sun Permanently

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Mariner 2 sailed steadily into a never-ending orbit of the sun Saturday still sending back scientific data about the mysteries of deep space.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) said that at 11 a.m. EST, the 447-pound spacecraft had gone 253-836 miles past its rendezvous point of Friday with the mystery planet Venus.

"Mariner 2 continued to score successes after its scientific flyby," NASA said.

Dr. Bernard Boyd Named By Juniors To Open 'Teacher Of Month' Series

Note: This is the first in a series of monthly presentations made by the Junior Class. The award is given in recognition of distinguished service and contributions to the University students, outstanding merit in the art of lecturing, and the stimulation of academic interest. The Class Scholarship Committee contacted about 75% of the Junior Class in order to ascertain each individual's three preferences for Teacher of the Month. On the basis of this poll future awards will also be made.

Dr. Bernard Boyd, James A. Gray Professor of Biblical Literature and past chairman of the Department of Religion, was selected by the Junior Class as Teacher of the Month for December.

Regarding his outlook on teaching, Dr. Boyd stated, "Our duty (as teachers) is to challenge students to the best of which they are capable." In presenting this challenge, however, he feels that certain things must be done by the teacher other than spouting forth facts. He attempts to establish a rapport with his classes and with individual students.

He cherishes not only his classroom contacts, but also the friendships established and the academic stimulation provided through conferences in his office and visits at his home.

TV Not As Effective

Although Dr. Boyd teaches quite extensively through the medium of television, he feels that his TV work is not as effective as a real lecture because he is unable to judge the reaction of the viewers. He also finds TV teaching difficult because of the lack of personal contact. At the same time he is encouraged by the response many of his programs receive.

Through his contacts with students at the University, Dr. Boyd thinks that perhaps the ordinary student is more concerned with getting an education than he was ten years ago. He maintains that there is a wonderful idealism in each student on this campus which could accomplish endless things if properly motivated. Dr. Boyd strives to provide this motivation. In order to do this, he states that a "professor has to keep growing or he will die." To keep growing, he must keep up with the times and especially with new concepts and discoveries in his field. By doing this he can pass on his enthusiasm to his students. Thus, much of Dr. Boyd's time is spent in keeping up with the latest developments pertaining to religion. At present, he is interested in the recent archaeological findings which throw new light on the Bible and religious background.

When asked about the University's system of tenure, Dr. Boyd replied that tenure was necessary and good as long as professors recognize their moral obligation to keep digging in, doing scholarly work, and being constantly concerned with improving their effectiveness.

Dr. Boyd is anxious to disavow any qualifications to make judgment on the present questions with respect to enlarging the Greater University of North Carolina. His personal opinion on this subject is that the money of the state would be better spent in expanding its present departments toward excellence.

State College should continue improvement in the technical fields and UNC should continue to strengthen itself in liberal arts. He feels that by attempting to build both areas of study in each school we will fail to attract the most outstanding professors.

Dr. Boyd stated that it is in the best interests of this institution to send out Carolina's more gifted prospective teachers to other schools, and to bring here the best talent available from schools in other parts of the country. In following this policy, he said that there can be a greater exchange of new educational concepts.

Dr. Boyd does not approve of the system of graders because the student has the right to feel that the man who teaches him should grade his paper. However, due to the numbers of students, he described the system as a necessity.

Although a dedicated follower of the Christian faith, he has found his place in the classroom to be more important than the pulpit. Dr. Boyd still feels it a privilege to introduce students to the Bible and to see some "get excited about it." As a teacher he feels an obligation and desire "to make the student want to succeed."

Dr. Boyd and his family live on Country Club Road in Chapel Hill. The name of their home, Havilah, is appropriately taken from Genesis in the Bible and means "land of happiness."

Exchange Scholarship Forms Now Available To Applicants

Soon after the Christmas holidays, applications will be available for the 1963 scholarship to the University of Tours, France.

The Tours program is designed primarily for rising juniors, though it is not limited to them. Whomever is eventually selected, however, is required to return to UNC for at least one more year of study.

The Tours Scholarship is in its second year and, like the Goettingen program, is on a reciprocal basis. At present John Morris, a Carolina junior, is studying in Tours and his counterpart here is Beatrice Lang.

The UNC Tours scholar in France will find abundant opportunities not only for study but also for sightseeing. Tours is only 2½ hours by train from Paris, and the town itself is in the heart of the chateaux covered Loire Valley. While in France, the Tours scholar will live with a French family.

The Tours scholarship is sponsored by the International Students Board.

GOETTINGEN

For the next academic year, the Student Government will again sponsor two exchange scholarships for study at the Georg-August University in Goettingen, Germany.

Applications forms will be made available after Christmas at the YMCA office and at Graham Memorial. Final selections will be made in the end of February.

The applicants' interest in the international sphere and an adequate knowledge of the German language are presupposed.

In addition, the candidates, after completing a year of study in Goettingen, are expected to return to UNC for two semesters.

Information concerning this program may be obtained from Mr. Claude Shotts, director of the YMCA, or from Reg Brooker, chairman of the selections committee, at 111 Winston.

"Insult To Injury:"
A Readjustment Due

It would seem that we have, in the Buckley vs. Carolina Forum episode, a fine example of an offended party properly upset by the addition of insult to prior injury.

The injury?

Well, as Henry Mayer, Chairman of the Carolina Forum, pointed out in his letter to Mr. Buckley's agent, the decision to meet Buckley's demand of $450 for his speaking engagement represented quite a departure from the established policy.

Not blessed with an abundance of fiscal resources — drawing entirely from student government funds — the Forum just cannot afford to pay traveling expenses and large speaking fees also. The decision to pay Buckley such a large sum came only after extensive deliberation and realization that sacrifices might be made elsewhere.

The Forum might have felt an obligation or, perhaps, merely a desire, to bring a respected conservative to the Campus. At any rate, they contracted to bring Buckley, who in turn "agreed" to speak on "Freedom and the Welfare State."

The event was announced in press releases, the word was passed around, and many were those who looked forward to Buckley's appearance. Many were those who anticipated a lecture on "Freedom and the Welfare State," including the Carolina Forum. They had decided to suffer the "injury" of more than $500 in total expenses for the lecture by Buckley. A slice of cash that large in any student government budget is a wond which certainly represents an injury.

* * *

The insult?

Well, there are those who would maintain that the mere fact that Buckley chose to disregard an "obligation," an "agreement," and to read an article, previously published, that had nothing to do with the announced topic is sufficient insult to merit offense being taken and a demand for readjustment of the fee.

Perhaps, this is "insult."

But if that one fact of divergence from the scheduled topic is not enough to insult an audience, certainly the fact that Mr. Buckley, in a manner so charming, dismissed his divergence with the notion that "Freedom and the Welfare State" was "too academic" for presentation to a Carolina crowd added insult to prior injury.

* * *

Of course, we must guard against the glib assumption that Mr. Buckley did such a thing on purpose, or that he did not care.

We do not think that he chose, snottily, to insult the audience. Chances are that he did not know that the Playboy article was already out, and perhaps he sincerely felt that his agreed upon topic was too academic for an entertaining presentation . . . chances are that he sincerely regrets the whole embarrassing episode.

He would do well to make manifest his regret by "agreeing" to a readjustment in the initial fee. (CW)

Give: Aid To India

Quietly—almost too quietly—various faculty members, students and local citizens of Chapel Hill have undertaken the collection of funds to be sent as "Aid To India" throughout the coming weeks.

We would like to urge every member of the university community to contribute substantially to this fund.

The donations will be sent to India earmarked for use in non-political humanitarian projects. The money will purchase badly needed supplies and medicines for Indian casualties of the Indian-Chinese conflict. Aid will be extended to the families of casualties and generally distributed among a people badly in need of help beyond that military equipment being flown in regularly.

We must not suppose that because open fighting has halted the Indian people may relax or that the situation is not bad. In a country which must struggle desperately to feed and equip a slowly expanding army, there are millions of civilians who are suffering personal sacrifices to support the military growth. We should be more than willing, especially in this season of giving, to contribute our due for humanitarian aid to a cause so worthy.

Although a concentrated drive has not yet been launched, contributions are being solicited continually. And a good way to approach the Christmas Season would be the timely donation of some contribution to the "Aid to India" fund. Address it to:

'Incredibly Dumb . . .'

The current issue of Reporter magazine contains an amazing dialogue from the University of Mississippi. The author of the article "A Visit to Ole Miss" is waiting to talk to James Meredith, and overhears a conversation among Ole Miss faculty members:

"Somebody said, 'One of the deans' wives is spreading the rumor that Meredith is flunking all his subjects except political science and he's passing that only because his teacher is an integrationist.'

"Everybody roared with laughter, except the so-called integrationist. 'I'm no integrationist,' he said to us earnestly, 'but I do believe in supporting law and order.'

"We asked if Meredith might flunk out. Everyone said no.

" 'It's pretty hard to flunk out of this university,' a faculty member said. 'We have a lot of students here who are really incredibly dumb. Some of them think the Lord created the world in six days. They are invariably the ones who think it came to an end last September 30 when Meredith enrolled at Ole Miss.' "

* * *

It appears that, at Ole Miss, "ignorance is our most important product." (JC)

Bus

The bill to buy a bus for Craige-Ehringhaus residents will come up in Legislature at Monday's proposed special session. Bill supporters say it must be passed at this meeting for the bus to be bought before second semester. If this is done, student government can go through the cashier's office to charge students for this bus service—a factor which could make or break the whole project. (JC)

Letters To The Editors

Administrative Act Was 'Dangerous'

Wheless Hits SG Hesitancy

To the Editors,

Rather that Student Government be dead than Administration-led. Our University has a long tradition of strong Student Government; our University has a long tradition of strong and competent University administrators; and of great importance is the tradition that Student Government and Administration are compatible entities.

Student Government and Administration have long been friends. Working together, what greater friends? (Working in diametric opposition, what greater enemies?) The alliance is an important one; but the alliance has been attacked by distrust, disapprobation and disrespect. The Administration has attempted a dangerous precedent, the full implications of which are at the moment incomprehensible when applied to our University.

Administrative cooperation is a facility but not a necessity. Students can and will solve student problems ably and capably in spite of administration harangues. In the past these aforementioned entities have worked well together; I sincrely hope that the recent Administrative action concerning the "Beat Dook" parade does not mark the mood of the future. There is too much to be lost by hasty, ill-measured decree.

It is my hope that the Executive branch of Student Government will assume the lead in resolving this or any other student problem, regardless of legislative or judicial prodding, and regardless of Administrative threat. Compatible entities, yes; but separate.

—Dwight Wheless

Christmas Decorations

To the Editors,

Warmest congratulations to the 450 students of the Pan Helenic Council, under the direction of Graham Memorial, on the very beautiful job they did Sunday afternoon, decorating Graham Memorial for the Christmas season.

Hither-to, as I remember it, there has been a decorated front door, and one tree inside the lounge, with some mantel decorations.

It is delightful with two decorated trees on the porch, a huge 12 foot wreath over the main entrance.

Inside the hall, a lovely centerpiece on the table, four lighted wreaths hang from the four windows, and an evergreen arrangement, with candle, on the window sills. The two stairways are drapped with long strands of evergreens and red balls and ribbons.

Inside the lounge, evergreen arrangements, with candle, on the sills of the seven windows, the mantels decorated with greens and large candles, and another huge Christmas tree, beautifully decorated with all the Christmas lights and trimmings. There was still another tree in the TV room.

I know I haven't named everything, but be sure to drop in and see the decorations and express your wonder and admiration to these boys and girls who gave so much of their time, and spent so many hours at hard labor, as their contribution towards the enhancing of the Christmas spirit. They are smarter than I am, and I wish to express our hearty thanks to them. They have added to the spirit of the season for us all.

Finally Praises Clotfelter

To the Editors,

Congratulations to Clotfelter for finally mustering up the courage to write a positive editorial. It is most encouraging to find out at long last that a 'student leader' with your infinite understanding of everything from international politics to the character of the past Vice-President has finally been able to find something with which you can agree, if only the Reflections magazine.

Team Should Have Negroes

To the Editors:

Carolina is being cheated out of top national ranking in athletics.

Have you heard of Bobby Bell, the only repeat first string All-American? Bobby hails from Mooresville, North Carolina, but he performs his tackle duties for the University of Minnesota. Why? Because Bobby is a Negro.

Bobby would have gladly come to Carolina if he had received a scholarship; in fact, the late Jim Tatum liked Bobby so well that he arranged for Bobby to go to Minnesota.

With our recruiting area restricted, we should tap the entire potential of this area. People who complain about our athletics should realize that the situation could be solved by giving scholarships to all qualified athletes from this state, regardless of race.

A Bell or two could have put Carolina in the Top Ten, as was Minnesota.

North Carolina Negroes have proven their ability in all three major sports. It is a shame they cannot share their talents with their own state university.

Students Tried To Embarrass Guest

To the Editors,

It was distressing that several Carolina students had the poor taste to take advantage of a question and answer session to rudely ridicule our guest. Acting Chief of Russia's Tass News Bureau for the U. S. and the U. N., Nikolai D. Turkatenko, visited the University Thursday evening and talked to a group of students in Carroll Hall. After his talk he answered individual's questions.

Instead of taking a genuine interest in learning what Mr. Turkatenko had to say about the Russian dissemination of news, several students designed questions to embarrass our guest.

An example is a question sarcastically phrased to the effect that if a Russian reporter criticized Khrushchev, "would he be around the next day to talk about it?" It would have been quite easy to have asked how much individual freedom a Russian reporter has in criticizing his government. I am sure that a more genuine answer would have been given to such questions if they did not indicate animosity, but merely honest curiosity.

Otelia On UNC Coeds

I had many reactions to my letter in the Tar Heel on Campus Manners. Most of them favorable. However, one student told me he read it and was "highly displeased" with it — (You can guess who he was). I said, "Good, I am glad you were."

One student said, "Mrs. Connor, you are always writing about the boy's manners. Why don't you say something about the girl's manners?"

I answered, "Well, I don't come in contact with the girls much. In geeral, I always liked men better than women, anyway.

Since I have been in Chapel Hill I have lived in the house with graduate students who are nearly always mature, and pleasant to live with. But when you do run across a few who are not thoughtful, they usually get worse instead of better as time goes on.

However, although they may not be old, they are usually the old maid type, and not the pretty, sweet ones who attract the opposite sex. I suppose they have to have some compensation for their state of single-blessedness, and we shouldn't be too critical of them.

Most of the girls, like most of the boys, on the campus, are all right.

Try Picketing Some Day . . .

Reflections from the picket line

To anyone who has never tried it, I would recommend several hours spent on a picket line for a new and vivid experience.

I spent an evening recently carrying a sign in front of Memorial Hall protesting Pete Seeger. Our purpose was to make sure that people were well-informed about his sponsor (the New Left), his record (many Communist-front affiliations) and the probable destination of their money (a "freedom rider's pocket). If knowing this, they still wanted to put down their dollar and see the show, then they of course had every right to do so.

Those who did put down their dollar were a highly unrepresentative segement of the campus. They were mostly the self-styled bohemians and the sillier sorts of graduate students and that group of journalism students which prides itself on its liberalism. We didn't expect anything else from them.

What did bother us was the coterie of the fraternity-sorority set who giggled, made a clever remark to their dates and swept past the picket line. They would probably agree with our line (if they took the trouble to think about it). But they wouldn't stoop to anything so uncool as to lose an evening's fun for principle. (Maybe they have to wait for their parents to tell them what to think.)

Picketing has its rewards and its liabilities.

There was the handful of nuts who actually screamed at us. There were the mouselike creatures who sidled up to you with an imitation of a friendly smile on their face and then lashed out with some pointless imprecation. This didn't bother us because we knew that the people who called us Lincoln Rockwell admire Castro and anybody who admires Castro is as crazy as Lincoln Rockwell and a lot more dangerous.

On the plus side there was the fact that some of the budding journalists got a big thrill out of covering the incident. The people did not turn away in droves but enough did to give us some satisfaction.

Plenty of them came by and told us to keep up the good work. There was the old couple who said, "You convinced us." And there were the five or six who told each other, "Hell boys, let's go back and listen to the ballgame."

From Conflict

Lessons India Must Learn

The recent clash between India & China told more things about many nations than any other historic event of our time. In general, it brought the unity of the free world as well as the disunity of the communist world into a sharp focus.

With admirable speed and efficiency Britain, U.S.A., and several other countries rushed to the help of India. On the other hand, Russia showed reluctance to take sides in this issue. In the Cuban incidence, Russia took 3 different strategies at different times. First, she denied the existence of offensive weapons in Cuba, until the photographic evidence showed to the contrary. Then she tried to ignore the seriousness of the situation while justifying her position, until she was faced with an utimatum from Washington. Then, finally, Russia tried to picture Kennedy as the aggressor who backed down before the Russian ultimatum. Russia took a similar line of actions regarding the Indian-Chinese dispute. First, she acted as if nothing happened between India & China. She didn't even mention about the conflict in her Party Congress in Moscow. Then, she said it was only a border trouble. Finally she began to blame the western powers for making a big issue out of a border trouble. Though Russia is quite different from what she was a few years ago, we can not take it for granted. India is still hoping against hope that salvation might come from the North.

China pushed deep into the Indian territory playing the strategy of brinkmanship. She retreated only when the whole world reached the brink of total war. Pakistan tried to fish when the water was stirred, not realizing the danger it was inviting for itself. Most of the old "neutral" friends of India were mostly neutral to the issue.

India herself was put into a bright light. The conflict not only revealed the military unprepared & backwardness of India. Even the communication for help reached its destinations slower than one would expect at a time of crisis. People of India became more united under Nehru than ever before. However, Mr. Nehru felt the pressure of the people of India too more than ever before. It was this pressure which caused the demotion of Mr. Krishna Menon.

In her long history, India failed to think in certain realistic terms. She did not develop a realistic sense of history, of geography, of politics and of unity. India was mostly regarded as a cultural unit rather than a political or geographical unit. It was due to the lack of unity among the Indians that India fell under foreign rule quite frequently. Moreover, due to a lack of sense of politics, Delhi seldom paid any attention to the political developments in other countries. The central government was mostly for negotiation to settle the disputes between the local autonomous political units and seldom for direct actions. And each issue was taken separately to deal with, whether it was a matter of internal or external relationship.

India is barely realizing who her friends and enemies are, but yet to learn to make the fine discrimination among her friends and enmies. China is a greater threat to India than Pakistan and India can not expect help from Moscow with the same speed and sympathy in her fight with China, as it can from Washington or London, for example. India is painfully learning that something more than thundering speeches is necessary to fight an enemy. India is beginning to learn the place of might in international politics, but she has yet to learn that paradoxically military power is most helpful when one is negotiating. More aggressors are kept back from aggression by the military preparedness of others than by the goodwill or negotiations of others. India realizes that China is a threat to her, but she is yet to learn that communism is a world enemy. India recognizes internal unity as strength, but she has yet to learn thatthe same principle applies to the whole free world in fighting against the world communism. If India, as part of the world community of democracy, expects help from other democracies, when her freedom is in danger, is she not morally obliged to help other democracies when their freedom is in danger, not because others helped India, but because India values democracy? India is yet to realize that there is no substitution for internal governmental efficiency. No country can help a country which is internally corrupt. The slowness of the administration in India is unequal in history. There is more tax avoided in India than paid. Bribery and corruption made many millionaires in India. India values independence very much, but she is yet to learn that cooperation and joint commitment with other nations do not mean any lack of independence. If cooperation and commitment with other nations in the matters of social amelioration, do not mean lack of independence, then why should a military cooperation with others to fight against a common enemy mean a lack of independence? India must answer some of the realistic questions of our time regarding her course of history in the light of the political developments in other countries, the questions which India seldom asked in her history. No longer she can take things for granted or afford the luxury of isolation.

Miracle Worker Gimmicked Approach Doesn't Fit In

The Miracle Worker, by William Gibson, with Larry Walz, Ann West, Paul Gold, Anne Carson, Phyllis Rankin, Ronald Weaver, Abby Hurwitz, Henry Ramer, Ed Grady, Margaret Cathell, Anne Faushee, Alice Dawson, Marty Grady, Judy Lipton, Debora Myers, Valerie Myers, Louise Pettis, Rebecca Scott, Kathy Wagoner, Nancy Carson, Kermit Ewing, Dude Hatten, Dick King, Bonnie Wilson, Sean Grady. Directed by Wesley Van Tasse. Design and lighting by Harry Callahan.

By MYLES LUDWIG

(Imagine playwright Gibson, who journals the prostitution of an artist in his SEESAW LOG, hovering over his typewriter, hands folded, and dreaming.)

"Heh, heh, heh . . . they think I sold out last time . . . I'll write them an artistic failure that'll be a fantastic success. I'll take a story about this kid, make her a girl who can't see, hear, or talk, just like Helen Keller, and then I'll get somebody to teach her how to fold a napkin. Yeah, that's it. Then, let's see, I need a family. Well, I'll take a couple of characters from that TV thing I saw last week . . . father not understanding son jazz, mother caught in middle. And then, yeah, this will really hook 'em, I'll throw in some symbols—bells that ring in crucial places, voices from somebody's past. Got to be careful not to allow the characters to become to real. Man, it ught to run for years and then I can write a book about this one too. I'll make a million-"

Gibson Exploits Characters

Perhaps the playwright is not as callous as I make him out to be. But the Miracle Worker is concerned with a rather delicate though certainly noble subject, the transformation of an almost bestial being into a "human child." Whether this subect and its ramifications are theatrically valid or not, is not the question at hand. Rather the problem seems to be, is Gibson's talent large enough to carry the theme without exploiting his characters or embarrassing his audience?

I feel that he is very definitely using Helen just as he is using the church bells and, though I admit to a certain amount of guilt-tinged embarrassment at the sight of a sidewalk pencil vendor, I would have been thoroughly appalled by Helen's strangulated movements, had they been played as written. Certainly without this gimmicked approach, the play could never stand on its own.

The family is entirely one dimensional; and even Annie Sullivan borders on the superficial, though admittedly she is granted the possibility of another side by a dramatic attachment to her dead brother and by Captain Keller's abortive suggestion of an ulterior motive in her desire to teach the child. Furthermore, the playwrite, as if the foregoing were not enough to strain our credulity, adds three "plantation nigrahs" straight out of Birth of a Nation.

Though filled with rough-and-tumble scenes, the play is generally dull and talkative. The audience knows very well what it is waiting for and can do without the contrived effects and dramatic indictments that are so much filler. Perhaps, if Gibson had attempted to relate Helen's side of the story, instead of making her a dramatic device, he would have succeeded in holding my attention.

In my opinion, VAN TASSEL's greatest error in judgement was choosing to play the piece in the round. Arena staging is, as Kenneth Tynan says, "a method which overrates the importance of 'intamacy' in the theatre and, by citing the circus as an indication of the creed, overlooks the fact that of the two most exciting things that happen in a circus, one takes place behind bars and the other hundreds of feet in the air." For me, this type of theatre takes the play off the stage and puts it into the livingroom — thus destroying Cluman's "x quality" or the "magic" which is so basic to the drama.

Furthermore, this method taxes unreasonably the concentration of the actor and necessitates some part of the audience missing a dramatically important point. With a play such as this, i.e. one wherein the dramatic intensity hinges so much on facial expression and movement, arena staging cannot be successful.

Worked Against Script

Bearing these handicaps in mind, it is difficult to judge the overall production. The performance was quite casual and not once did I feel that the actors had hit upon a truthful moment. And stranger yet, it seemed to me that the cast was working against the script rather than with it.

ANN WEST played the wailing mother as if she were simply horrified by the whole proceedings and PAUL GOLD, though his third act was beautiful, merely walked heavily through most of the play. Perhaps, if HENRY RAMER had not shown so much contempt for the character he was playing, the situation between father and son might have been more believable. But as he acted the role, I see no reason for the two men to ever find a basis of undrstanding.

I have no quarrel with MARGARET CATHELL'S characterization of Annie Sullivan. But although she was superbly puckish in her tender scenes, Miss CATHELL seemed to substitute vocal and physical posturing for genuine emotion when called upon to participate more dramatically.

Reserved praise goes to ANNE CARSON who played the part of Helen. Miss CARSON handled the role with too much restraint and assuredness, but did come alive in some of the violent scenes with her teacher. She seemed, as did many of the actors, to be victims of overdirection.

WESLEY VAN TASSEL moved his players through HARRY CALLAHAN'S miniature set with little regard for natural relationships. Consequently, the performance moved from mob-scenes to tableaux vivant in a distressingly theatrical manner.

YMCA Throws Holiday Fest For Children At Orphanage

Christmas each year is a little brighter for 40 Raleigh children thanks to the efforts of the YM-YWCA's Orphanage Committee.

Each year this committee, which visits the Roman Catholic Orphanage in Raleigh each week, sponsors a Christmas party for the children. Last year the party included a football clinic where the children met the football team and had a talk with Ray Farriss.

This year there will be entertainment by folk singers Dan Brock, Al Wright, and Miss Garrie Matthews, beginning at 2, with refreshments and games later on.

Today also there will be a visit by Santa Claus, played by student Richard Forum, who will distribute gifts to the children. The gifts are paid for from the committee's budget.

At 4 p.m. the children will leave the Baptist Student Union, where the party will be held, for the Morehead Planetarium to see the Christmas show, "Star of Bethlehem."

Transportation to and from the campus will be provided by the orphanage's bus driven by the committee's co-chairman, Jan Langston.

WE WOULD LIKE TO WISH YOU A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND THANK YOU SINCERELY FOR YOUR CONTINUED PATRONAGE.

Blue Dolphins Leave Today For Princeton, Navy Meets

By JOEL BULKLEY

Carolina's unbeaten varsity swimmers leave this afternoon for important meets at Princeton and Navy and what coach Pat Earey calls "excellent opportunities to see where we stand."

The Blue Dolphins, winners of their first five meets of the season, travel to New Jersey for a meet at Princeton late Tuesday afternoon and then they go on to Annapolis for a Wednesday afternoon clash with Navy.

Earey reported that "if our freestylers hold out we will give them both good meets." The amiable coach went on to give a rough sketch as to what he expects to see in this week's tests of strength.

Princeton has a nationally ranked backstroker in the person of Jed Graef and a couple of other boys who will be out to give Thompson Mann a real workout. Their breast stroke artist has been Eastern Intercollegiate Champion for the past couple of years and has turned in especially good times in the 100-yard event.

The Tigers have butterflyers galore, including some who have done 54 seconds or better in the 100-yard race and under 2:10 in the 200. They also have some of the outstanding divers in the country.

Earey hopes, however, to do well enough in the freestyle events (the 50, 100, 200 and 500-yard races) to offset the number of points they will collect in the butterfly, breaststroke and backstroke races.

Prospects Better

"I think we have a better prospect of gaining a win over the Midshipmen, but we certainly hope to take the measure of both of them," Earey said. "It is certainly a fine opportunity to compete against outstanding swimmers at this time of the year in order to see where we stand now," he said.

"Navy has an especially good middle distance swimmer in a boy named Hopkins. They will probably have 'average' backstroke and butterfly men, who would be 'good' in our league," Earey added.

Navy also has a boy named Collins who does the 50 in 22, 23 or 24 seconds and holds the record of 49 seconds in the 100-yard freestyle. They will also be well prepared in the breaststroke and diving competition as they usually are.

Spirit High

Earey noted that the spirit of the team during the past week had been running especially high, indicating that the boys are preparing for some real battles.

The following boys will be making the trip today: Thad Adams, Howard Cone, Barry King, Harrison Schiffman, Dick Woodrow, Joe Mummaw, Mike Bissell, Jim Huffman, Frank Lea, Ernie Oare, Scott Smiley, Pete Swift, Willie Bloom, Tate Kemper, Thompson Mann, Larry Roberts, Marion Smith and Henry Mummaw.

Tar Heels, Irish Open Video Series

North Carolina and Notre Dame will play in the first of a weekly Saturday afternoon telecast of Atlantic Coast Conference basketball games on January 5, when the Tar Heels travel to South Bend, Indiana.

Eight games will be presented on a regional television network—five of them conference games and three non-conference. Other non-conference games on the schedule are Virginia Tech at Wake Forest on January 12 and West Virginia at Duke on January 26.

A network of 14 cities in three states and the District of Columbia is participating in the weekly series' seventh year.

Announcers for the series will be Jim Simpson of Washington and Charlie Harville of Greensboro.

Castleman D. Chesley, Philadelphia television producer, announced the schedule Thursday.

Cornhuskers Trip Miami By 36-34

NEW YORK (UPI)—Nebraska's Cornhuskers, staggered in George Mira's spectacular passing, came from behind twice Saturday and whipped Miami (Fla.) in the Gotham Bowl football game 36-34 on a pair of conversion runs by Dennis Claridge and Bill Thunder Thornton.

Mira hit 24 of 46 passes for 322 yards and two touchdowns in a dazzling performance in 20-degree weather.

But the Huskers countered with fireworks of their own, including a 92-yard kickoff return by Willie Ross, who scored two touchdowns and set up a third with a 41-yard run.

Cunningham Scores 26 In First Loss

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Billy Cunningham tore Indiana apart here Saturday, but it wasn't enough as the Hoosiers turned to their fast break in the last seven minutes and ran away from North Carolina, 90-76.

Cunningham, the big red head on whose shoulders may rest the fate of this UNC team, finally broke loose against the Tar Heels' Big Ten opponent and was unquestionably the best ballplayer on the floor.

Billy hit a season high of 28 points on 10 of 19 from the field and eight of 13 from the foul line while also proving to be the game's best rebounder with 16.

But Cunningham, who definitely overshadowed Indiana's fabled Van Arsdale twins, could not do it alone and in the end, it was the Hoosiers' speed that told the story.

Running from a halftime lead of 41-34, Indiana battled the Tar Heels on even terms the second half and even saw its lead cut to six as late as the 7:40 mark of that period.

But here the tense intersectional clash was broken open by the form of basketball for which Branch McCracken-coached teams are famous—the fast break.

After Cunningham tallied on a free throw to cut the Hoosier lead to 62-56, Indiana began to run.

Jimmy Rayl, a precision-like shooting mechanism, cracked the whip for McCracken's boys in the next few minutes.

Rayl stole the ball from UNC guard Larry Brown and fired a long pass to Tom VanArsdale for the two-pointer. Jimmy McLocklin, Indiana's fine sophomore center, then went in all alone on another quick fast break, and suddenly the Tar Heels were down by 10 at 66-56.

Rayl then put the icing on the cake. After Yogi Poteet had broken the string with a long jumper, the Kokomo, Ind. star fired in two one-handers from long range. This put the Hoosiers up by 70-58, and Carolina was hopelessly beaten.

Dean Smith called time out for a strategy meeting, but it was all for naught. The Tar Heels, pressing frantically, had to leave men open all over the court in their efforts, and Indiana easily capitalized on the breaks to maintain its margin at the end.

The seven-point lead the Hoosiers carried to the dressing room at the half was certainly not indicative of the closeness of the play.

UNC led by its two sophs, Cunningham and Respess, started strong in that first period.

Respess rebounded a Charlie Shaffer-missed jumper and Yogi Poteet fired in a one-hander for a quick four-point lead.

The two teams went neck and neck from there to the 11:10 mark. Cunningham, playing with the driving concentration that so marked his freshman year, scored consistently on short drives in the early going.

But with about nine minutes gone in the game and Carolina up by 13-12, the Hoosiers made their move.

Striking off its tenancious 3-2 zone defense, Indiana proceeded to run 11 points up on the scoreboard while UNC could only manage Cunningham's drive and Poteet's short jump.

Tommy Bolyard started things off for the Hoosiers with two free throws after being fouled by Respess.

The 6-4 Indiana forward, overshadowed in recent years by teammates Walt Bellamy and Rayl, then scored on two consecutive one-handers. After Cunningham and Poteet stemmed the tide momentarily, the VanArsdale twins took over. Dick sank a free throw and Tom put in a long jumper, after which Rayl canned another long jump.

With five minutes remaining in the half, Indiana, its lead cut to six at 33-27, began to move again.

McGlocklin put in a layup, Ted Redenbaugh hit two free throws, and Bolyard came back with another jumper.

But the Tar Heels, as they were to do so many times in this titantic struggle, fought back viciously, and scored seven straight points off their press before Bolyard ended the half with a one-hander.

Rayl, the All-American candidate, finshed with 24 points—high for the Hoosiers—while Tom VanArsdale captured 10 rebounds.

Scoring:

Indiana (90) T. VanArsdale 16, Bolyard 18, McGlocklin 20, D. VanArsdale 5, Rayl 24, Porter 0, Redenbaugh 7, Harden 0, Granger, 0.

North CAROLINA (76) Respess 13, Shaffer 3, Cunningham 28, Brown 8, Poteet 18, Cooke 6, Krause 0, Calahan 0, Burns 0.

3 UNC Students Still Defy Warning Against Cuba Trip

PLANNING FOR THE interconnection of WUNC-FM and the Educational Radio network are, left to right, Wesley Wallace, acting chairman, Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures; Robert Hilliard, Director of Radio; Donald R. Quayle, Director of Radio Services of the National Educational Television-Radio Center; Mack Preslar, Assistant Director Radio and Television; and standing, Donald B. Upham, former Project Director of the Educational Radio Network, and presently a graduate student at UNC.

WUNC-FM Plans Affiliation With Nation-Wide Network

WUNC-FM will soon become a part of the National Educational Television-Radio Network, according to Donald R. Quayle, Director of Radio Services of the National Educational Television-Radio Center, who is presently visiting in Chapel ill. The target date is January 1964.

Network hookup would mean that WUNC-FM listeners could hear such programs as live meetings of the United Nations while they are in progress, live concerts of the Philadelphia Oratorical Choir, the New Haven and Hartford Symphonies, and the New England Conservatory.

In addition to receiving programs, WUNC-FM would be contributing to the network by broadcasting programs to other ERN affiliates.

ERN emphasizes public affairs in relation to current events as opposed to "hard core news" advocated by commercial stations. The network attempts to give a "background in depth" of current events, and to interpret, rather than to make, news.

"In order to do a significant job in broadcasting today," said Quayle, "stations must pool their resources. No one station will have the budget or resources to do it alone," he said.

The great majority of North Carolina's population are within the broadcasting area of WUNC-FM; network hookup would increase its potential conceivably throughout the United States.

By the end of 1964, ERN hopes to have affiliate stations reaching from Montreal, Canada, to Chapel Hill. Quayle envisions nationwide coverage within five to ten years.

UNC Prof Publishes Bk. On Communism

"Two Generations of Soviet Man: A Study in the Psychology of Communism," a new book just published by the University of North Carolina Press, studies the processes of manipulating the human mind and behavior under totalitarian rule.

Author of the book is John Kosa, a sociologist and UNC associate professor of biostatistics.

His work offers a complete picture of the process of indoctrination of individuals and groups in society, discusses the techniques of coercion and control, and analyzes the various types of man that emerge as the result of this gigantic manipulation - of-the-man effort.

The "faithful believer," the "lukewarm or halfhearted believer," the "opportunist" and the "faithless type" are presented through their characteristic behavior toward their environment, the Party, their work and the society as whole.

Dr Kosa's vehicle for obtaining information about this second generation of Soviet man was through the "tell-a-story" method. He interviewed a small, selected group of refugees from behind the Iron Curtain and asked them to narrate a fictional story about the Communist regime. In this way, he solicited the uninhibited attitudes of the storytellers.

Role Of Terror

The author discusses the functional role of terror within a totalitarian system. He points out that the practice of coercion through force and police terror is not a novelty to most of those countries under Communist rule today where Communism has been built upon the ruins of autocracy and dictatorial powers and not upon the remnants of a democratic system.

Dr. Kosa's study primarily attempts to see whether or not this campaign for enforced conformity among the second generation of Soviet man has proved to be effective in the Eastern European satellite countries.

Stalin apparently failed in his calculations despite the elaborate plans to manipulate and re-form the minds of men in these countries. The revolts in Poland and Hungary in 1956 prove that the application of force alone will not make the Soviet model acceptable.

Since that time, methods of indoctrination nave become more subtle and much less offensive to cultural or national sentiments. The author feels that the great hope of those behind artificial curtains of our times lies in the improvement of communications and understanding between the two systems.

Dr. Kosa was born in Hungary and taught at the universities of Budapest and Szeged before coming to America in 1950. He is the author of "Land of Choice: The Hungarians in Canada," and five books in his native tongue.

UN Internships Available For Next Summer

By PAUL COOLER

"There is no substitute for first-hand experience in developing an understanding of the U.N.," Dr. Andrew Scott of the Political Science Department said yesterday in reference to the United Nations summer internship program.

This program was initiated last year by the International Relations Staff of the University of North Carolina.

According to Scott, the program pleased everyone—including the Secretariat—so much, that it has been extended to other schools. The number of available positions has also been increased.

Earl Koontz, one of last year's interns, found the experience so profitable that he plans to work with the United Nations on his own this summer.

"There is a great need for specialized help in the U.N. during the summer months," Koontz said, "because the U.N. is not normally in session and personnel take vacations during this period."

Tony Harrington, another intern last year, said, "It is the most valuable summer experience any one can have."

"The class assimilation with the operations of the organizations and close contact with the various people in all different offices on very high levels makes this the best internship program in the United States."

Harrington said nearly every one of the interns had his own office, phone and secretary. Also they met many of the top officials in the United Nations, including Secretary-General Thant.

"Anyone interested in International Relations, not just political science majors interested in the United Nations, should apply," Koontz emphasized.

Last year two political science majors and two history majors were selected.

"Our feeling in the Political Science Department is that this type program is extremely important.

"The interns don't serve as personnel who do routine typing or clerical work," he said. "They are put on interesting assignments.

"In recent years the whole idea of internships has proven successful on state and national levels. This is an attempt to extend the internship principle to the international level."

The experience in many cases is helpful to research in fields as varied as population, economics, foreign aid, technical diplomacy, unilateral diplomacy and contemporary history, he said.

Four internships will be available this year. At least one position will be filled by a graduate student.

Applications will be accepted from any student who will have completed his junior year by the end of this academic year but who will not have finished his senior year.

Selection will be made by a three-man committee consisting of professors Frederic Cleaveland, Keener Frazer and Andrew Scott. Ability, preparation and interest in the field of international affairs will be the criteria used by the committee.

Interns will work in the United Nations throughout July and August 1963. They will be assigned duties with the Secretariat in such branches as the Technical Assistance Board and the Special Fund.

Application forms can be obtained from Mrs. Richey, Room 101, Caldwell Hall. All applications must be returned to the office by Jan. 11, 1963.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT OFFICERS, committee chairman, committee workers, hangers-on and folks who just happened to be passing by, officially ushered in the Yuletide season with the first annual SG Office Party held yesterday in GM 210. The anonymous ad hoc plannedw venture featured light refreshments, Santa Claus, gifts for a number of luminaries, a special gift for long-time Executive Secretary Miss Julia Staples, folk-singing and other festivities. In the absence of William F. Buckley, who sent his regrets, Santa Claus spoke briefly on "Freedom and the Welfare State."—Photo by Wallace.

Christmas Spirit Not Hurt By Bleak Day In Chapel Hill

By CYNTHIA LEONARD

It takes more than a cold, bleak day to dampen the holiday spirit of the children of Chapel Hill.

Tuesday afternoon Franklin Street was almost deserted. The partially assembled nativity scene on the lawn of the Methodist Church looked cold and lifeless. The gay Christmas decorations in store windows seemed somehow tired and lacked the festive touch. Faint strains of Christmas carols coming from the "Support Your Community" booth only added to the atmosphere of gloom.

The few people on the street also mirrored the day's dejection. Twenty people passed. A boy and girl walking hand in hand were the only two who smiled.

The scene in a Chapel Hill dime store was somewhat more lively. Only a few shoppers were in the store, but most of them seemed more aware of the approaching Christmas season than the people on the street.

Two middle-aged women were consulting each other at the decorations counter.

One, apparently a school teacher, said exasperatedly, "I was thinking of letting them make Christmas tree ornaments but honestly . . ."

Then she shook her head ruefully and added, "But they have so much glee—It's just wonderful."

Her companion was looking for some "simple decorations."

"I don't know whether to get this stuff or not. I know I'll be sorry if I do. I just know I'll be sorry," she said again and again.

A tired clerk looked at her watch repeatedly.

With the can of sewing machine oil, the picture hangers, notebook and thread in one shopper's cart was a package of Christmas cards and some red and green ribbon.

Another wore a Christmas corsage on her raincoat.

An elderly gentleman unloaded a cart heaped with various yuletide decorations at the check-out counter. His bill was $18.50.

College girls pondered over wrapping paper.

But the store belonged to the children.

"Is he a balloon?" asked a wide-eyed little boy, pointing to a rubber reindeer.

His harried mother's only answer was to quickly pull him away from the counter. She hurried him to the front of the store to find his smaller sister gazing longingly at the candy display, a miniature Santa Claus, his pack filled with lollipops, in her hand.

While the mother was patiently explaining why they could not buy any candy just then, a loud whistle at the back of the store located the boy who had again wandered away.

By the time the two reached him, he had abandoned the whistle to return to the reindeer which "must be a balloon, but why doesn't he pop?"

At the doll counter two 12-year-olds were making a valiant effort to hide their fascination with a "Chatty Cathy" doll.

A small boy with a police badge store making imaginary arrests and whistle was racing about the while his brother pleaded for a red car coat and green felt skirt, tugged at her mother's skirt trying to show her that special doll.

The excitement and gleeful anticipation of the holiday season which the children radiated lifted much of the gloom from the faces of shoppers and clerks alike.

These young shoppers did little to increase the store's business, however. As one short, chubby lad at the top counter solemnly told a clerk who had inquired if she might help him, "I have to wait for Santa Claus to bring me this."

PLAYMAKER AUDITIONS

Auditions for The Carolina Playmakers tour productions of "Rhinoceros" will be held Friday, Jan. 4 at 4 and 7:30 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre. The Ionesco satiric comedy will run here Feb. 13-17 prior to its one week tour of North Carolina and Georgia.

A forerunner of the "theatre of the absurd," "Rhinoceros" has been a recent stage hit in France, England and America. There are parts for 5 women and 10 men in the Playmakers production.

Tommy Rezzuto, staff director of the Carolina Playmakers, will stage the play. His most recent directing assignments here were "Dr. Faustus" and "Summer and Smoke."

Copies of "Rhinoceros" are available for reading at 307 Bynum Hall and in the Reserve Room of the UNC library.

COMMUNITY AMBASSADOR

All students interested in the Community Ambassador program of the Experiment in International Living are invited to attend a meeting Tuesday, Dec. 18 at 5 p.m. in Y Court. Those unable to attend should notify Anne Lee Ridenhour, 968-9097. Applications will be distributed at this meeting.

SEMINARS ABROAD

All interested persons are invited to a meeting to discuss travel and study abroad Tuesday at 4 p.m. at the YMCA. The latest information on Seminars Abroad and other European programs will be given.

New York Group Near Collapse Under Pressure

Larry Phelps confirmed his plans yesterday to travel to Cuba over Christmas in spite of State Department warnings and the withdrawal of 62 of the students from the Cuban paid trip.

Phelps, a 21-year-old UNC student, said that he, Dennis King, and John Salter would leave Chapel Hill Thursday for Toronto where they would make plane connections to Cuba on Sunday.

In spite of stiff State Department warnings of fines or imprisonment, Phelps said that "You can't be sure how the State Department will react in a situation such as this. The prospects of their acting to stop us are slim."

Phelps said that he was not surprised by the withdrawal of many students from the trip, in fact, he said, "The feeling was that two-thirds of those who signed up for the trip would drop out."

UPI Wire reports yesterday stated that the Castro sponsored tour of Cuba promoted by a New York student group faced collapse Monday after a massive withdrawal of scheduled participants.

Sixty-two students of Buffalo State University withdraw from the all-expense-paid junket after a strong State Department warnings of fines or imprisonment. Travel to Cuba is illegal without a specially validated passport.

Tour sponsors headed by Anatol Isaac Schlosser, 25, of New York City, were reported seeking to save the expedition from total collapse by expanding the "free Christmas holiday" offer to all comers, and not just university students.

It was estimated last week when the travel group's plans were exposed that perhaps as many as 250 students might make the trip. Schlossberg said they would come from City College of New York and NYU, as well as the Universities of Wisconsin, Chicago, North Carolina, California, Vermont and Toronto, Boston U., Harvard, Oberlin and others.

Reliable sources said travel "die-hards" in New York planned to leave for Toronto this Saturday to catch a free Cuban government plane to Havana. The switch in takeoff point from Montreal to Toronto apparently was intended to becloud the group's travel plans.

The sources said the junket now was open to all who could provide $25 for round-trip transportation to Toronto. All other expenses are being paid by the Castro regime.

Byerly Publishes Series Of Articles

The newspaperman's newspaper —The Publishers' Auxiliary — is featuring a UNC professor's study on the relationship between community newspaper editors and their correspondents.

The author is Kenneth R. Byerly, an associate professor in the UNC School of Journalism. His series of five articles are based on the thoughts and experiences of 18 leading correspondents from weekly and small daily newspapers in 16 states and two Canadian provinces.

Byerly is both a teacher and a publisher. He owns two papers (a daily and a weekly) in Montana, and—with his two sons—he publishes the Tidewater News, a semi-weekly at Franklin, Va.

TINDALL REVIEWS

Prof. George B. Tindall, UNC professor of history, is the reviewer of seven books dealing with race relations, segregation and prejudice in the current "Emancipation Centennial" issue of the "Progressive" magazine.

Tindall concludes that the general tenor of the seven books he reviewed "leads one to the inevitable speculation that in the next decade the center of the most serious inter-group tensions may shift from the South to the metropolitan North."

Pointing out that the North is already experiencing such tensions to a certain extent, Prof. Tindall reminds his readers that "many of the inadequacies with which the metropolitan North must struggle were spawned in the separate but unequal South."

"TECHNICAL PAPER 4"

A UNC professor has just published a paper which businessmen and economists will find useful in the study of long-term growth of business activity.

He is Professor of Economic Statistics Dudley J. Cowden. His paper is entitled "Technical Paper 4: Weights for Fitting Polynomial Secular Trends."

In addition to aiding businessmen in studying business activity, Dr. Cowden's paper will also help them to determine the cycles which fluctuate around the business trend.

The purpose of "Technical Paper 4" is to provide a simple and easy method of business trend measurement.

Communication Group Busy; Chances For New Union Good

The Communications Committee has recently started an extensive program to inform Carolina students, other colleges and the state about the activities of student government here.

Division of the committee into five parts was announced by Chairman Bob Spearman.

The five parts and their functions:

1) The Exhibits Committee puts up various displays around the campus, such as the recent one in the library showing the organization of Student Government. It is headed by Jack Neal.

2) The Interschool Committee is corresponding with schools across the nation in order to exchange information on mutual problems and ideas. The chairman is Allison Webb. Michigan, Vanderbilt, Duke and California have already been contacted and an exchange is underway.

3) The Publicity Committee, headed by Owen Bishop, is responsible for informing the student through the Daily Tar Heel and campus bulletin boards about the work of different organizations of Student Government. It also sends news to UNC to some North Carolina newspapers.

4) The Polling Committee checks student opinion on campus affairs. Recent polls include feasibility of a bus service between UNC and WCUNC, student feeling concerning the power of the Student Legislature to pass resolutions and a quiz on the student's knowledge of the names of campus leaders. Results of the polls are published in the Daily Tar Heel. Chairman of this committee is Bill Graham.

5) The Dormitory Newspaper Committee, led by Marty Kruming, helps to find personnel to run dorm papers and smooths out various problems. "Though we have nothing to do with the actual content of the newspapers, we are ready to help them at any time," commented Kruming.

Due to the expansion of the Committee, there are openings available on it. Interested students

CHRISTMAS CHORUS

The Chapel Hill Choral Club will present a program of Christmas music tonight at 8 in Hill Music Hall. Accompanying the 90 voice chorus will be a chamber orchestra composed of members of the University Symphony Players. Admission to the concert is free.

STATE AFFAIRS

"Chances of Carolina getting a new Student Union soon look fairly good."

Bill Hoyle, Chairman of the State Affairs Committee, was commenting on capital improvements at UNC.

"We must encourage the State Legislature to appoint funds for needed improvements," he said during a Communications Committee interview. "We have written every legislator in Raleigh and are visiting them as much as possible."

"We will definitely get a new Student Union and Undergraduate Library, and the only question is when," he added. "If we can get the money appropriated in the next session it could be completed by the Spring of '64."

When asked what students could do to help, Hoyle said that they could "Talk with their representatives in the Legislature. The individual student can also talk to the voters in his district and urge them to vote for capital improvements."

"The State Affairs Commilttee has used almost every news media in North Carolina to publicize the needs of UNC, and we need the help of every student."

3 UNC Students Still Defy Warning Against Cuba Trip

PLANNING FOR THE interconnection of WUNC-FM and the Educational Radio network are, left to right, Wesley Wallace, acting chairman, Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures; Robert Hilliard, Director of Radio; Donald R. Quayle, Director of Radio Services of the National Educational Television-Radio Center; Mack Preslar, Assistant Director Radio and Television; and standing, Donald B. Upham, former Project Director of the Educational Radio Network, and presently a graduate student at UNC.

WUNC-FM Plans Affiliation With Nation-Wide Network

WUNC-FM will soon become a part of the Educational Radio Network, according to Donald R. Quayle, Director of Radio Services of the National Educational Television-Radio Center, who is presently visiting in Chapel ill. The target date is January 1964.

Network hookup would mean that WUNC-FM listeners could hear such programs as live meetings of the United Nations while they are in progress, live concerts of the Philadelphia Oratorical Choir, the New Haven and Hartford Symphonies, and the New England Conservatory.

In addition to receiving programs, WUNC-FM would be contributing to the network by broadcasting programs to other ERN affiliates.

ERN emphasizes public affairs in relation to current events as opposed to "hard core news" advocated by commercial stations. The network attempts to give a "background in depth" of current events, and to interpret, rather than to make, news.

"In order to do a significant job in broadcasting today," said Quayle, "stations must pool their resources. No one station will have the budget or resources to do it alone," he said.

The great majority of North Carolina's population are within the broadcasting area of WUNC-FM; network hookup would increase its potential conceivably throughout the United States.

By the end of 1964, ERN hopes to have affiliate stations reaching from Montreal, Canada, to Chapel Hill. Quayle envisions nationwide coverage within five to ten years.

UNC Prof Publishes Bk. On Communism

"Two Generations of Soviet Man: A Study in the Psychology of Communism," a new book just published by the University of North Carolina Press, studies the processes of manipulating the human mind and behavior under totalitarian rule.

Author of the book is John Kosa, a sociologist and UNC associate professor of biostatistics.

His work offers a complete picture of the process of indoctrination of individuals and groups in society, discusses the techniques of coercion and control, and analyzes the various types of man that emerge as the result of this gigantic manipulation-of-the-man effort.

The "faithful believer," the "lukewarm or halfhearted believer," the "opportunist" and the "faithless type" are presented through their characteristic behavior toward their environment, the Party, their work and the society in whole.

Dr Kosa's vehicle for obtaining information about this second generation of Soviet man was through the "tell-a-story" method. He interviewed a small, selected group of refugees from behind the Iron Curtain and asked them to narrate a fictional story about the Communist regime. In this way, he solicited the uninhibited attitudes of the storytellers.

Role Of Terror

The author discusses the functional role of terror within a totalitarian system. He points out that the practice of coercion through force and police terror is not a novelty to most of those countries under Communist rule today where Communism has been built upon the ruins of autocracy and dictatorial powers and not upon the remnants of a democratic system.

Dr. Kosa's study primarily attempts to see whether or not this campaign for enforced conformity among the second generation of Soviet man has proved to be effective in the Eastern European satellite countries.

Stalin apparently failed in his calculations despite the elaborate plans to manipulate and re-form the minds of men in these countries. The revolts in Poland and Hungary in 1956 prove that the application of force alone will not make the Soviet model acceptable.

Since that time, methods of indoctrination nave become more subtle and much less offensive to cultural or national sentiments. The author feels that the great hope of those behind artificial curtains of our times lies in the improvement of communications and understanding between the two systems.

Dr. Kosa was born in Hungary and taught at the universities of Budapest and Szeged before coming to America in 1950. He is the author of "Land of Choice: The Hungarians in Canada," and five books in his native tongue.

"We must encourage the State Legislature to appoint funds for needed improvements," he said during a Communications Committee interview. "We have written every legislator in Raleigh and are visiting them as much as possible."

"We will definitely get a new Student Union and Undergraduate Library, and the only question is when," he added. "If we can get the money appropriated in the next session it could be completed by the Spring of '64."

When asked what students could do to help, Hoyle said that they could "Talk with their representatives in the Legislature. The individual student can also talk to the voters in his district and urge them to vote for capital improvements."

"The State Affairs Committee has used almost every news media in North Carolina to publicize the needs of UNC, and we need the help of every student."

A Lost America:

With Hope–A Future

In reaching the end of a year, more than at any other time, Americans are prone to reflect seriously on the magnificent glories and sordid mistakes of the year past, and the promise of the year to come. It is a time when the people ponder the "mess" the world seems always to have gotten itself into, and the solutions to which the world seems always to give birth, if not hope of life.

These solutions are born of man's hopeful spirit, hopeful always of something less bad than what he has now. These solutions are born in the context of a world gone goofy, of a world where leaders talk like followers and followers talk like inanimate objects, and where neither is willing to assume responsibility for what is happening.

National confusion springs from personal confusion, and international confusion springs from national confusion. In America this confusion traps the leaders within a pattern of words which are made to stand for thought and action. This pattern was established a century ago, and was drained of life a generation ago, but it continues to plague the nation. Our confusion prevents Americans of different backgrounds from settling their differences, and proceeding with the necessary and urgent business of the nation. There is confusion around the land as to what America is, and what Americans are, and what they should do and be.

In the final pages (quoted below) of his posthumously-published novel You Can't Go Home Again, Thomas Wolfe wrote about a man and his America. Wolfe saw an America lost, but with hope and a future. (JC)

CREDO

I believe that we are lost here in America, but I believe we shall be found. And this belief, which mounts now to the catharsis of knowledge and conviction, is for me — and I think for all of us—not only our hope, but America's everlasting, living dream. I think the life which we have fashioned in America, and which has fashioned us—the forms we made, the cells that grew, the honeycomb that was created—was self-destructive in its nature, and must be destroyed. I think these forms are dying, and must die, just as I know that America and the people in it are deathless, undiscovered, and immortal, and must live.

I think the true discovery of America is before us. I think the true fulfillment of our spirit, of our people, of our mighty and immortal land, is yet to come. I think the true discovery of our own democracy is still before us. And I think that all these things are certain as the morning, as inevitable as noon. I think I speak for most men living when I say that our America is Here, is Now, and beckons on before us, and that this glorious assurance is not only our living hope, but our dream to be accomplished.

I think the enemy is here before us, too. But I think we know the forms and faces of the enemy, and in the knowledge that we know him, and shall meet him, and eventually must conquer him is also our living hope. I think the enemy is here before us with a thousand faces, but I think we know that all his faces wear one mask. I think the enemy is single selfishness and compulsive greed. . . .

I think the enemy is old as Time, and evil as Hell, and he has been here with us from the beginning. I think he ravaged and despoiled our land. I think he took our people and enslaved them, that he polluted the fountains of our life, took unto himself the rarest treasures of our own possession, took our bread and left us with a crust, and, not content, for the nature of the enemy is insatiate—tried finally to take from us the crust.

I think the enemy comes to us with the face of innocence and says to us:

"I am your friend."

I think the enemy deceives us with false words and lying phrases, saying:

"See—I am one of you—I am one of your children, your son, your brother, and your friend. Behold how sleek and fat I have become—and all because I am just one of you, and your friend. Behold how rich and powerful I am—and all because I am one of you—shaped in your way of life, of thinking, of accomplishment. . . . Will you destroy this thing? I assure you that it is the most precious thing you have. It is yourselves, the projection of each of you, the triumph of your individual lives, the thing that is rooted in your blood, and native to your stock, and inherent in the traditions of America. It is the thing that all of you may hope to be," says Enemy, "for —" humbly — "am I not just one of you? Am I not just your brother and your son? Am I not the living image of what each of you may hope to be, would wish to be, would desire for his own son? Would you destroy this glorious incarnation of your own heroic self? If you do, then," says Enemy, "you destroy yourselves—you kill the thing that is most gloriously American, and in so killing, kill yourselves."

He lies! And now we know he lies! He is not gloriously or in any other way, ourselves. He is not our friend, our son, our brother. And he is not American! For, although he has a thousand familiar and convenient faces, his own true face is old as Hell.

Look about you and see what he has done.

Letters To The Editors

IDC, Buckley, Coach McGuire

Administration Action 'Drastic'

To the Editors,

Recently it has come to the the attention of the IDC that dormitory advisors have been removing students from their dorm without that student having access or appeal of their decision to the domitory judicial body, the IDC Court.

This is a direct and unwarranted infringement by the administration into an area in which the IDC Court has continually acted in good faith, judgment, and with due sense of responsibility. There is therefore no reason why any case deservinig such drastic action as removal from a dormitory should not be handled by the IDC Court. No reason has been given by the administration for their unwarranted encroachment into this area of the student judiciary. Such should now be given — if possible.

In any event, any problem in a dorm that merits consideration of removal should be referred directly to the IDC Court and should not go through any administrative decision, even if such could be appealed!

Former Coach Needed Now

To the Editors,

The recent demonstration held at Woolen Gym in support of Frank McGuire for Athletic Director was carried out after much thought and careful consideration of the situation.

Coach Frank McGuire led the University of North Carolina to its finest hours in the athletic realms. His success was not at the expense of academics, since the great majority of his ball players were more than adequate in the classroom. A glance at the percentage of his players to earn degrees at Carolina will support this stand. His team was always impeccably dressed and carried themselves with flawless stature and perfect behavior. McGuire conducted himself as well as any other coach in college basketball, much more so than coaches in this area. McGuire's players were devoted to their coach and this devotion was reflected, not only in their play, but also in their behavior. It is noteworthy to remember that the Secretary of Commerce, our governor in 1957, called Coach McGuire, "North Carolina's finest good will ambassador." Therefore, we feel that Frank McGuire possesses the ability and pride in Carolina necessary in an outstanding Athletic Director.

Our athletic program needs a shot in the arm, not necessarily championship teams, but personel who provide the potential for bringing fine teams to Chapel Hill. We know that "Gentleman" Frank McGuire can provide this needed boost.

Liberal 'Slop' Called Faulty

To the editors,

Recently in your paper there appeared a letter written by a seemingly "sick to death" liberal who sought to end all the nonsense? that the supposed conservatives have been writing on this campus. As of today, I ask this "sword of right" to clean up his own backyard before he begins to perceive the wretchedness of the conservative writer. For today we saw again that writing style which has been so predominant among the liberal editors of our esteemed? rag.

For today Mr. King delivered that wonderfully clever editorial on William Buckley. Clever? Yes indeed. But Mr. King overdid himself as do all the dashing clique hidden on the second floor of GM. For in being so clever, Mr. King neglected the facts and perception.

Criticism is good and necessary. But faulty criticism has no place even on the rottenest "bubble gum" rag.

To begin with, Mr. King, who are you to decide who deems himself God and who does not? Perhaps I should recognize your authority on the subject, Mr. Randolph Hearst award winner, since quite evidently You are The One . . .?

I would refute your argument of neglection of points by Mr. Buckley by your own neglection of points.

1) You were not listening attentively to Mr. Buckley's speech. He did not make, nor has he ever made any reference to my knowledge to the phallus as an instrument of foreign policy. Perhaps that was just something you had on your mind while he was speaking.

2) If negroes do not want anything but a cup of coffee, why the Meredith uproar? Think before you write if you want to receive any more tidbits from Randolph.

3) I'm in complete accord with you on your last point. Most coffins draped in Red, White, and Blue still contain bodies. You made an astute observation there. But which is better—Red, White, and Blue—Or red?

To the "sick to death" liberal: Get to work with your slop mop, we'll work on our side.

—R. L. Samosot

. . . By Their Words, Ye Shall Be Known

"Friends and neighbors, it is indeed a pleasure to be here tonight in the town that has meant so much to me. I don't get back very often, nor for very long, but it sure is good to be back. It seems that there are some people in Washington who are so devoted to the principle of large, centralized government that they want to keep Congress in session all year. I reckon that they figure that we don't need to get out among our constituents because they don't do anything except to vote by way of governing themselves.

"It is still more of a pleasure to come back to my hometown to the American Legin, to talk to a group that brings together men who had the courage to fight for America and all that she stands for.

"And that is what I want to talk to you about tonight. Today there are, it seems to me, too many people who do not know what America stands for. There are too many people who are not willing to take a stand and be ready to fight for it.

"We are a freedom-loving people, but there are within our midst appeasers, fellow travelers, collectivists, Communists, and Socialists who want to destroy our country. This country which was founded on the glorious principles of freedom as set forth in the Constitution today faces destruction from within. In government, in the churches, in the schools—and here it is that they flourish—in almost every phase of our life we can witness to the filtration of the Communist conspiracy.

"How long will we idly sit back while the Federal Government appropriates more and more power to itself? How long will we allow State's Rights to be violated? How long will we permit the rape of Freedom by power-mad individuals? It is a time for brave men to stand up and be counted on the side of individual initiative, private enterprise, and capitalism."

* * *

"COMRADES, fellow party members, it is indeed a pleasure to be here tonight in the town that has meant so much to me. I don't get back very often, nor for very long, but it is certainly good to be here. It seems that there are some people in Moscow who are so devoted to service to the party that they don't realize that one must visit people occasionally.

"It is still more of a pleasure to come back to my hometown to talk to the Russian Veterans' Association, to talk to a group that brings together men who had the courage to fight for Russia and all that she stands for.

"And that is what I want to talk to you about tonight. There are, it seems to me, too many people who do not know what Russia stands for. There are too many people who are are not willing to take a stand and be ready to fight for it.

"We are a peace-loving people, but there are within our midst dissenters, capitalists, and imperialists who want to destroy our great nation. This country is dedicated to the glorious principles of the Revolution, but today she faces destruction from those who would bertay the Glorious Revolution which set men free. In government, in the armed forces (which we will, hopefully, soon no longer need), and in the schools— especially in the schools— we can observe the infiltration of agents of the Imperialistic, Capitalistic conspiracy.

"How can we sit back while certain members of the party betray the Revolution? How long can we tolerate this challenge to the heart of the Russian nation by people who do not love her? How long can we permit the interests of certain individuals to take precedence over the interests of the people? How long can we sit and watch Russia be destroyed by the Imperialistic, Capitalistic Conspiracy? It is a time for brave men to stand up and be counted on the side of peace, equality, and Freedom."

Dorms In Yack? Students Say 'Yes'

. . . Won't Be Like The Rest

To the Editors,

We dorm residents should feel honored that this year—for the second year in a row—we will be represented in the Yackety-Yack, not just with two meagre pages, but with ten meagre pages. And you must admit that this is not bad for thirty dorms, considering. . . . But we shall NOT feel honored. We in Ruffin, after contracting for two pages, planned and worked on them and only by a nod from Heaven were we able to meet the deadline set by the Yack. Unfortunately, due to unforseen circumstances, Ruffin was cut to one page—somehow there seemed to be too many dorms for the allotted ten pages. We fail to see how any intelligent creature could not have foreseen that ten pages would not have been enough for thirty dorms. But who are we to say that Yack editors are not intelligent?

When our representative went to the Yack office with the material for our page, he was greeted with sly phrases as: "Your seal isn't appropriate . . . look at ours . . . it's more appropriate, it has books 'n beer mugs 'n it says think and drink in Latin." (Haynes C. McFadden)

If we remember correctly, Mr. Legum (editor) stated last year, "I plan to show the fine academic record of this university . . . and not so much the party side of life here." Is this an example of the fine academic record? Our humble picture was viewed with such comments as: "Don't these guys look young? They look like they are in high school. I bet they act like it too." (This last was chirped by a sophisticated coed wearing what appeared to be a high school ring on a high school chain around her high school neck.) To top it off, they came up with, "You all aren't going to have a sweetheart? Everybody else does! why can't y'all be like everybody else?"

We shall not be like everybody else. One of the purposes of the university is to develop the individual and within him a tolerance for different trains of thought (if not the understanding). You can take your stereotyped pages with their furbelowed seals and unknown, insipid sweethearts — and pack them along with your weejuns.

More Space For Dorms

To the Editors,

"In the Yack next year I plan to show more dorm life in a better way." This is a direct quote of Louis Legum from the DTH, Friday May 4, 1962. At the first of the year, Ruffin dorm sent representatives to the Yack office to inquire about individual dorm pages. They were told by the Editor, Louis Legum, there would be no individual dorm section. Three months later, after persistant demands by the dorms and threats by the Student Legislature to cut off Yack funds, the thirty-two dorms were given ten pages.

We hasten to remind Mr. Legum that the majority of University students are dormitory residents, and contrary to the "old conception" of dorm life—more and more of these students are taking active leadership in campus politics and social activities. Therefore, we do not think it is asking too much to give us proportional representation with other University groups.

REFLECTIONS

A cartoon in the Minnesota Daily showed a man reclining on a couch, with a drink in hand, calmly viewing his television set. From the TV set comes these words:

"This message will last 60 seconds. The missiles are on their way. If you had started running at the beginning of this message you might have made it."

New Nations Must Depend On U. S. Action

By HARRY GOLDEN

David Lawrence, Robert Ruark, William Buckley, Jr., and others are impatient with the new nations of Africa. Their error is that they believe history goes in a straight line. Nothing ever happens to change the world or their idea of it. They cannot, for the life of them, understand that the day is gone when the British colonial officer did not tell the native boy to carry his bags but told the native supervisor to tell the native boy to carry his bags.

I think we must understand that the new nations of Africa are not only our best friends but we must try to understand why they do not always seem grateful. All of these peoples, the new nations in Africa, our allies of Western Europe lie in fear of Communism. They do not fear America's bigness and neither do they envy the wealth of America. I believe it is precisely because they fear Communism and know that their freedom depends on the United States of America they feel a bit frustrated — perhaps because they can't vote in American elections.

Has anyone thought of this idea? Is there any doubt at all that the future of millions of people in Africa and in western Europe is as much dependent upon the type of government we have as is the future of the people of Kansas and North Carolina? Whatever moves our President and our Congress make will determine the kind of world that children born today in Africa and in western Europe will live in. A philosopher in Israel told me quite frankly; "We're all going through the motions of sovereignty with a Parliament, Presidents, Prime Ministers, and we know that we are here and we'll continue to be here just as long as the United States of America has a foreign policy which says we shall be here and continue to be here."

I'm sure that philosophy in Ghana, Kenya, and Congo would agree.

College Roundup:

Colorado U President Quits

QUIGG NEWTON RESIGNS

BOULDER, Colo. (CPS)—Colorado University President Quizz Newton formally announced his resignation last week, bringing to an end a six-year term marked by extreme political turmoil as he worked to make a "great university" of the institution.

Newton resigned the post effective September 1, 1963, when he will bcome president of the Commonwealth Fund of New York, a foundation primarily devoted to medical research. He made the announcement at a public meeting of Denver area alumni of the university.

Newton, who is a past Democratic mayor of Denver, resigned on the heels of a state-wide furor leading up to and following his dismissal of the editor of the Colorado Daily, student newspaper, earlier this year.

Newton fired the paper's editor for allowing articles defaming Sen. Barry Goldwater to be printed. The president took the action after the appropriate student and faculty channels of authority had refused to do so.

The controversy surrounding the student newspaper and Newton's action in firing its editor served to bring to a head long-standing political feuds in the state—in the midst of an election campaign. Newton was elected to the presidency in 1956, and has been under constant criticism ever since, especially from the far-right segment of Colorado politics.

It was generally conceded in Colorado that the controversy over the student newspaper had damaged the Democratic party in the state at a crucial moment, contributing (to an unknown extent) to a general Republican sweep of Colorado elections. Observers in Colorado commented that although Newton gave in to the Right a bit by firing the editor of the student newspaper, he did not earn any love from the Right by that act, while at the same time losing the support of many liberals. A right-wing Republican publically committed to getting rid of Newton was elected to the Board of Regents.

Gary Althen, the fired editor of the Colorado Daily, told the Collegiate Press Service that he felt Newton had little choice but to resign, for he had lost support from liberal and moderate elements, but had not gained any support from the Right, especially on the campus. Asked to comment on the effect of the president's resignation from the university, Althen responded with the same quotation given by Newton as his reason for firing Althen: "I think it is in the best interests of the university."

Comments from Colortado faculty members were generally in praise of Newton's term as president of the school. Under Newton the school has grown bith in size and stature to become considered one of the West's leading institutions of higher learning. When Newton took over the helm at Colorado, the university had suffered under a reputatio nas a "party school" where wealthy midwesterners sent their sons and daughters to pick up a degree while enjoying the ski slopes on the towering Rockies surrounding the beautiful Boulder campus.

EASTLAND ASSAILS GROUP

JACKSON, Miss. (CPS) — Sen. James O. Eastland (D.-Miss.) charged here last week that the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools is "covering up Marxism in the colleges."

The Association, accrediting agency for Southern schools, last week placed the University of Mississippi, along with all other Mississippi institutions of higher educaton, on strict probation, charging the Mississippi school system had bowed to outside political interference in the case of the enrollment of Negro James Meredith at "Ol Miss."

In a speech here the longftime Senator said the Association was also "covering up the activities of certain professors" at the university.

"I don't think the states can permit Marxism on the campuses," he said. "I don't think the states can protect those groups that are lined with reds." Eastland called the Association a "labor union" for the protection of the interests of college professors.

YALE CENSURES SECURITY OFFICER

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (CPS)—Yale University last week cracked down on its "campus security director" ordering the ex-FBI agent to cease investigating the political beliefs and associations of faculty and students.

The Yale Daily News campaigned for over two weeks against some of the activities of the director, John W. Powell, 46, who heads the 77-man campus police force at Yale. The paper charged that Powell in addition to his regular police duties, was keeping a "subversive activities file" on students.

BROWN SIG. NU MAY ACT

PROVIDENCE (CPS) — The Brown University chapter of Sigma Nu national social fraternity is discussing the possibility of withdrawing from the national organization because of discriminatory clauses in the national constitution.

The Brown chapter's action comes on the heels of a recent decision of the Stanford Sigma Nu chapter to leave the national for the same reason. The Brown chapter attempted to get the class abolished at the last national convention, members say. The Sigma Nu constitution bars Negroes and Orientals, according to the Brown Daily Herald.

The executive secretary of the national had no comment to make on either of the local chapters. He told the Daily Herald that the Sig Nu constieution contains provision for local chapters to waive clauses if pressured by administrations. He said the Stanford chapter had not requested such permission.

The Stanford chapter president said that his chapter had left the national by unanimous consent in specific protest to the clauses.

ALABAMA DENIES NEGROES ENTRY

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (CPS)—The University of Alabama last week apparently ended for the year the hopes of three Negroes to attend the all-white institution.

The school suddenly announced that admissions for the coming semester were closed, and only completed applications would be processed.

The University told the press that the school's president, Frank A. Rose, issued the order to the admissions office effective last Friday. It was indicated that no more freshman applications for the coming semester will be accepted at all.

The announcement marked the fourth consecutive semester that applications have been closed in advance of public notice. The official reason given for the university action was "pressure of enrollment."

Tulane Integrated

The Board of Administrators of the Tulane Educational Fund voted last week to admit all qualified students regardless of race to the undergraduate and graduate schools at the opening of the second semester in February.

Drama Students To Read Three New One-Act Plays

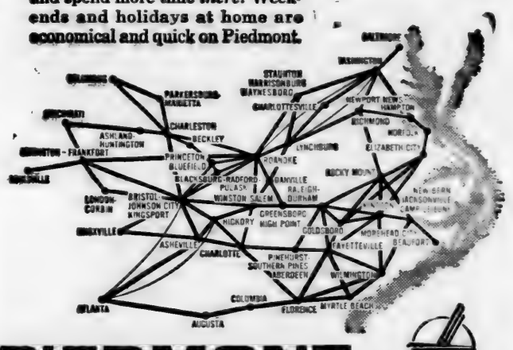
A concert reading of three new one-act plays by UNC drama students will be presented in the Playmakers Theatre here Wed., Dec. 19, at 7:30 p.m. The Carolina Playmakers program is open to the public.

Harry Callahan's "The Voices on the River" will be directed by Robert Malone. Callahan, a native of Livington, N. J., is a graduate student in drama.

Mr. Malone, a graduate student from Rockville, Md., is the author of another play on the program, "Mark Eleven at Johnny's." Callahan will direct the play.

"The Isolate," a poetic interpretation of man's isolation, was written for the program by George Gray III of Gastonia. Patricia Lynch will direct.

The concert readings, a unique venture for the Playmakers, was planned by Joel Climenhaga, visiting staff director of The Carolina Playmakers who also teaches playwriting in the drama department. Climenhaga pointed out that this will be the Playmakers only bill of original one-acts this semester. The organization will present its 200th bill of original plays in connection with the State Drama Festival in the Spring.



Climenhaga and Tommy Rezzuto are faculty advisers for the program. The readings are open to the public without charge.

EAT, SLEEP, AND MATRICULATE

The trouble with early morning classes is that you're too sleepy. At late morning classes you're too hungry. At early afternoon classes you're too logy. At late afternoon classes you're too hungry again. The fact is—and we might as well face it—there is no good time of day to take a class.

What shall we do then? Abandon our colleges to the ivy? I say no! I say America did not become the hope of mankind and the world's largest producer of butterfats and tallow by running away from a fight!

If you're always too hungry or too sleepy for class, then let's hold classes when you're not too hungry or sleepy: namely, when you're eating or sleeping.

Classes while eating are a simple matter. Just have a lecturer lecture while the eaters eat. But watch out for noisy food. I mean who can hear a lecturer lecture when everybody is crunching celery or matzo or like that? Serve quiet stuff—like anchovy paste on a doughnut, or steaming bowls of lamb fat.

And kindly observe silence while lighting your post-prandial Marlboro Cigarette. Don't be striking kitchen matches on your jeans. Instead carry an ember from the dormitory fireplace in your purse or pocket. Place the Marlboro against the ember. Light it quietly. Smoke it quietly. Oh, I know I ask a great deal! I know that one's natural instinct upon encountering Marlboro's fine flavor and filter is to throw back one's head and bellow great, rousing cries of joy. But you must not. You must contain your ecstacy, lest you disturb the lecturing lecturer. You can, if you like, permit yourself a few small shudders of pleasure as you smoke, but take care not to wear garments which will set up a clatter when you shudder—like taffeta, for example, or knee cymbals.

Let us turn now to the problem of learning while sleeping. First, can it be done?

Yes, it can. Psychologists have proved that the brain is definitely able to assimilate information during sleep. Take, for instance, a recent experiment conducted by a leading Eastern university (Stanford). A small tape recorder was placed under the pillow of the subject, a freshman named Glebe Sigafoos. When Glebe was fast asleep, the recorder was turned on. Softly, all through the night, it repeated three statements in Glebe's slumbering ear:

1. Herbert Spencer lived to the age of 109 and is called "The Founder of English Eclectic Philosophy."
2. The banana plant is not a tree but a large perennial herb.
3. The Archduke Ferdinand was assassinated in 1914 at Sarajevo by a young nationalist named Mjilas Cvetnic, who has been called "The Trigger of World War I."

When Glebe awoke in the morning, the psychologists said to him, "Herbert Spencer lived to the age of 109. What is he called?"

Glebe promptly replied, "Perennial Herb."

Next they asked him, "What has Mjilas Cvetnic been called?"

Replied Glebe, "Perennial Serb."

Finally they said, "Is the banana plant a tree?"

But Glebe, exhausted from the long interrogation, had fallen back asleep, where he is to this day. © 1962 Max Shulman

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

A losing season in a major sport quickly stirs up the blood and sharpens the tongues of Carolina students—and Alumni. Such is the case now.

A tough schedule and several bad breaks left Jim Hickey's football team with a 3-7 record. Carolina hasn't had a winning football season since Jim Tatum's death in 1959, so the finger has been pointed often at the Tar Heel coach. It's a good thing these disgruntled students don't attend Wake Forest College or the University of Virginia. Winning football seasons are a rarity at those two institutions.

So, during football season, anti-Hickey jeers and cheers were sprinkled through the booze-soaked stands of Kenan Stadium.

UNC football teams, under Coach Hickey, have won 16 and lost 24 in the past four years. But they've held their own in a competitive, though not powerful, football conference. Only two of the 16 victories have come against intersectional foes. UNC's Atlantic Coast Conference record is 14-14, certainly not poor.

Football season is over and a small group of students have found a new chopping block in Athletic Director Chuck Erickson. The leader of the group said last week, "I think the whole athletic department is on the downgrade."

Last Wednesday, when Frank McGuire was introduced prior to the Varsity-Alumni basketball game, the group displayed their pro-McGuire, anti-Erickson posters. One read, "McGuire AD, Smith Coach, Erickson 0." Another, "McGuire Si, Erickson No." And still another, simply, "We want Frank."

These "boys" didn't stay around for an encore. The end zone where they put on their little demonstration was almost empty by halftime.

Maybe they could see the look on Frank McGuire's face. He wasn't pleased.

The group wanted McGuire "because he is a gentleman" and they defeated their own purpose, which had little chance of success in the first place.

McGuire, the coach of UNC's 1957 NCAA basketball champs, IS a gentleman. That's why he wouldn't consider replacing his friend, Chuck Erickson. McGuire's a gentleman and for that reason he was obviously discomforted by the untimely demonstration.

It was untimely—and here, for once, I agree with Carolina's "friend" Jack Horner—because it marred the most successful Alumni basketball game yet. Over 70 ex-basketball players were on hand in Woollen Gym for the occasion.

Is Carolina's athletic department on the downgrade? Last year UNC ranked third in the ACC for excellence in all sports. The Carmichael Cup, a memorial to the late William Carmichael Jr. of Chapel Hill, is awarded to the top school in conference sports.

Maryland claimed the initial award with 72 points in the ACC's 12 sports—an average of third place in each sport. Duke was second with 70½, Carolina third with 67½.

The figures are close, but even closer when you account for the points accumulated by the lacrosse teams from Maryalnd and Duke.

Maryland's second-place finish added seven points to the Terrapin total. Duke's lacrosse team took third in the ACC for six points. Virginia captured its only league title in that sport.

Carolina does not have a varsity lacrosse team, only a lacrosset club. So, in the eleven sports in which UNC competed, the Tar Heel record was tops in the league.

This includes first places in cross country and tennis, seconds in football, swimming, wrestling, indoor track, outdoor track and golf. That's a bad record?

Erickson's Contributions

Chuck Erickson has made many great contributions to the athletic program at UNC.

He was golf coach for many years and had four conference championship teams. Among his seven individual conference winners was Harvie Ward, a national champ who also won the USGA title twice and the British Amateur.

Erickson is a former president of the National Golf Coaches Association and his interest in golf was responsible for the construction of Finley Golf Course, a gift of his long-time friend, Mr. A. E. Finley.

Since Mr. Erickson took over his position in 1952, Carolina has turned out a number of athletes who have made All-American or succeeded in professional sports.

Ed Sutton, Jack Cummings and Rip Hawkins have done well in pro-football. Lee Shaffer is developing into one of the better pro basketballers. Carolina has had several top baseball prospects snached up by the majors before graduation. The major leagues helped UNC to an eighth place finish on the diamond last year.

Under Erickson, Carolina athletic teams have met teams from all over the nation in a variety of sports—Southern Cal, Ohio State, Michigan State, Notre Dame, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Miami, Louisiana State and Navy in football; Indiana, Kentucky, Villanova, Kansas, Kansas State, St. Louis and West Virginia in basketball; and Miami in tennis.

Few schools can boast the attractive schedules arranged by Erickson over the past ten years.

The University of North Carolina's administration seldom fires members of the athletic department, whether arguments against them are sound or shaky.

Don't look for any changes in the near future. Frank McGuire will eventually take another position in sports, but not at Carolina. Chuck Erickson will continue to be UNC's athletic director as long as he handles the job effectively.

Dolphins Invade Ivy League For Meet With Princeton

North Carolina's Blue Dolphins, easy victors in five swimming meets this season, risk their unbeaten record against Princeton this afternoon.

The Tigers of the Ivy League are one of the best teams in the east and have a nationally-ranked backstroker in Jed Graef.

Coach Pat Earey views today's meet and tomorrow's contest with Navy as "excellent opportunities to see where we stand." He feels his Tar Heel tankmen will give both teams good meets if his freestylers hold out.

"It is certainly a fine opportunity to compete against outstanding swimmers at this time of the year in order to see where we stand now," said the UNC coach.

Princeton's strength should come in the butterfly, breaststroke and backstroke events. Earey hopes his team's strength in the four freestyle races will offset Princeton's points in the other races.

The Ivy Leaguers also have some of the top divers in the nation.

Swimming for Carolina today will be Thompson Mann—the team's ace backstroker—freestylers Thad Adams, Howard Cone, Harry Schiffman, Dick Woodrow, Joe Mummaw, Mike Bissell, Frank Lea, Marion Smith, Henry Mummaw, and captain Willie Bloom; Barry King in the individual medley; Jim Huffman, Scott Smiley in the backstroke; breaststrokers Tate Kemper, Pete Swift; Bloom again in the butterfly along with Larry Roberts; and diver Ernie Oare.

No Story Today

Last night's basketball game between Carolina's Tar Heels and Kentucky's Wildcats in Lexington, Kentucky, was completed too late for the Daily Tar Heel deadline.

Curry Kirkpatrick's on-the-spot report of the important intersectional clash will appear in Wednesday's edition, the last DTH of 1962.

SAE Gridders Top Duke, 12-6

UNC'S intramural champions, Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity, added another football victory to their record Saturday with a 12-6 triumph over Phi Delta Theta of Duke.

The Duke intramural champs took an early 6-0 lead in the first half on a 35-yard runback of a pass interception.

The SAE's tied it in the last half, then chalked up the victory on a 20-yard pass play from Sam Applegate to Bob Segrest.

The contest was played as a benefit contest in Duke Stadium for the Campus Chest organizations of the two schools and may be the forerunner to more intramural contests between the rival universities.

Frosh Swimmers Triumph Easily

By BILLY HATFIELD

Winning first places in all but one event, the Baby Tankmen took their second consecutive win of the season over J. H. Rose High School of Greenville Saturday in Bowman Gray Pool, 66-29.

Rose picked up all its points in second and third place finishes, except in the 100-yard backstroke where UNC Coach Gentry felt out the strength of his reserves. In that event, Don Pierce of Rose won in carrying on the job of his ex-teammate, backstroker Scott Smiley, who will be swimming for the UNC varsity in its important intersectional battle at Princeton today.

The 200-yard medley relay team of Sandy McNairy, Dick Boardman, Fred Lipp, and Tom Bennett copped a strong first as did John Sheldon, Sam Hall, Scott Taylor, and Dick Chance in the 200-yard freestyle relay.

Red-headed fireball Sheldon pulled up first in the 200-yard freestyle and Chance chased home a first in the 50-yard freestyle. Tom Murphy, pushing hard the records set by "Tarzan tankman" Harrison Merrill, wheeled off first places in the 200-yard individual medley relay and 400-yard freestyle events.

UNC's Guy Smith took first place in the diving competition as did Lipp in the 100-yard butterfly. Taylor won the 100-yard freestyle with Rick Forum doing the same in the 100-yard breastroke.

After the holiday break, the Baby Dolphins have an important meeting with Staunton Military Academy on January 12. This will be the first real test of the team's true strength.

Carter Case Was Biggest UNC Story In 1962

By Harry W. Lloyd

The long and continued court fight of former student Ann Carter against the student honor system rated as the top story at UNC in 1962.

The Carter case won out over the stories of changing the name of the university, the rise of leftism, the suspension of the 80 per cent rule, and open trials.

The top story first broke when Miss Carter appealed to the Chancellor her suspension from school for allegedly cheating on a Latin quiz. After Aycock denied her plea, she carried her case to the trustees, who referred it to a special committee. Finding this avenue closed, she took the case to the state courts.

Wake County Superior Court Judge Heman Clark denied Miss Carter's attorney's pleading that the student jury was unable to determine the guilt or innocence of another student. He did say, however that he had some doubt as to her guilt. The final verdict in the case is yet to be made.

The overall plans for the Consolidated University constitute the second biggest story of the year. Last spring, a move was begun to study the possibility of accepting one or more of the new community colleges into the consolidated system. This fall, President Friday and the trustees supported a plan to further standarize the three branches of the greater university at Chapel Hill, Greensboro and Raleigh, eventually admitting men as students at Women's College and giving N. C. State a liberal arts program. Friday advocated calling all three branches by the same name.

The story of leftism drew the biggest attention when the American Legion Post in Chapel Hill asked the administration to investigate certain un-American activities on campus. The charges mentioned especially the New Left Club and the Progressive Labor Club.

The New left, a discussion group, was disbanded last spring but was reorganized by some of its old members this fall. The PLC, which included some of the New Left, enjoyed its biggest period of activity in late spring and summer. Late in the year, the leftists drew attention by sponsoring the appearance of Pete Seeger on campus and announcing plans to visit Communist Cuba despite State Department restrictions.

Carolina fraternities finally succeeded in their fight against the 80 per cent rule. Under this regulation, if less than 80 per cent of a fraternity's active members failed to make a C average for two consecutive semesters, the fraternity lost rushing privileges. The move to abolish the rule was started by the IFC, who carried it to the Student Legislature. It finally was approved by the faculty council on an experimental basis. The fraternities' victory seemed hollow, however, when the faculty put much more stringent restrictions on what inactive members can do.

It took a campus-wide referendum, but student courts were opened to the press. The issue of open trials, long advocated by student editors, was finally recommended in a report by a men's council committee. The move was at first fought by the women's council, but the legislature approved of an election on the issue, and voters approved it overwhelmingly.

The frantic campaign for Daily Tar Heel editor rated number six on the list. It was a two-party race, with co-editor candidates Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye against Ernest Stepp until three days before the election. Then Mike Mathers, the paper's advertising manager, entered the running as a write-in candidate. Despite warnings that his votes might not be counted, Mathers led in the voting by almost 500 votes. The day after the election, however, he discovered that he would be unable to work as editor in the fall and dropped out of the campaign. He endorsed Clotfelter and Wrye, who won in the runoff.

Censorship by the administration was the number seven story. The Beat Dook parade, held on Monday before the game, drew such complaints for its alleged grossness that eight fraternities and one dorm were censured. The office of the Dean of Men established a special board to preview all student displays such as the parade to see that they were not too out of taste.

The failure of any of the major athletic teams to win consistently rated as number eight in the list of stories. The year 1962 was the first full year after the de-emphasis rulings, and only minor sports teams were able to take any championships. The basketball team lost its first game in the ACC tournament and finished with a losing season. The baseball team finished last in the conference, and the football team won only three games, losing in the last minute to Duke by 16-14. The outstanding athletic team of the year was the tennis team, which went undefeated until its last match of the year. The biggest win of any Carolina team during the year? Last Monday's 68-66 win over Kentucky in basketball would have to fit that description.

The ninth biggest story was the return of the University Party to the Student Body administration and the dominance of the Student Party in class offices. Inman Allen defeated Dwight Wheless for student president by 340 votes. Mike Lawler won over Larry McDevitt to put an SP man in the vice-president's chair. Two independents who were later to declare themselves leaders in a leftist organization ran very weakly, but forced a runoff in the close vice-presidential race.

Tenth was the Symposium, which drew many speakers to the campus to lecture on themes drawn from "Today's Revolutions." Among the visitors were Senator Gale McGhee of Wyoming, columnist James Reston, and historian Crane Brinton.

A number of other stories enjoyed short-lived importance during the year.

Ruffin Dorm students protested so loudly when the housing office decided to make the dorm into an all-freshman unit that the decision was changed and residents were allowed to stay.

The campus expanded further to the south with the opening of Craige and Ehringhaus dorms. Construction on classroom buildings went on all during the year.

A Peace Corps school was set up here for 10 weeks to train 36 volunteers for service in Spanish America.

Graduate Dean Alexander Heard was lured away to become chancellor of Vanderbilt, and Dr. Hugh Holman was named to take his place.

The University celebrated its 169th birthday. Princeton President Robert Goheen made the main address.

The highest enrollment in history, 9,604, was here for the fall semester.

The Top Ten Of The Year

1. Ann Carter case against honor council carried to Superior Court.
2. Further consolidation of University, name-changings are proposed.
3. New left-wing groups prompt Legion to ask for an investigation.
4. Eighty per cent rule against fraternities suspended by faculty.
5. Amendment allows the opening of honor council trials to press.
6. Write-in candidate Mathers leads for editor, drops out of race.
7. Board of censorship set up after "Beat Dook" parade criticized.
8. Football, basketball and baseball teams all have losing seasons.
9. University Party returns to leadership as Allen named president.
10. Several nationally known speakers appear here in '62 Symposium.

Magazine Killed By DTH Editors

Jim Clotfelter, DTH co-editor, yesterday said the controversial North Carolina Magazine would be discontinued.

The magazine, which is published by the Tar Heel, has been "subject to much criticism as to its quality," said the co-editor. "Some of this criticism has been justified.

"In addition," said Clotfelter, "the magazine has not been able to carry enough advertising to justify its expense."

Monday's second issue of the magazine received adverse reaction from some students for an article, "The First and Finest Feeling" by C. Carroll Farran and for several cartoons. The story concerned the writer's impressions of Adam and Eve and the creation.

Inman Allen, president of the student body, yesterday said UNC's tradition of editorial freedom was "flagrantly violated" by the N. C. Magazine. "A gross abdication of editorial responsibility allowed the infiltration of filfth and perverted matter into the publication," Allen said.

Clotfelter said reaction to the controversial story was not the only reason for killing the magazine.

"In addition, there is some doubt as to the suitability of the DTH printing such a magazine;" said Clotfelter, "and so it is felt best to discontinue publication at this time." Co-Editor Chuck Wyre was out of town and not available for comment.

"Members of the Publications Board felt the magazine could best be published under some other arrangement," Clotfelter said. "Advertising has not been as high as was expected, and therefore the cost of the magazine is more than we feel it is worth."

In an editorial in today's DTH, Clotfelter said he did not think the Creation article was "filfth" or "perverted."

"There were passages in the article, however," the editorial said, "which we feel were definitely inadvisable, and offensive to many persons."

The DTH editors had considered discontinuing magazine publication for some time, Clotfelter said, but lack of substantial advertising in the last issue was "the final blow."

"This furor about the Creation article brought to our attention again, a major problem concerning the magazine. The Tar Heel editors do not have the time or staff at this time to properly supervise publication of such a magazine," Clotfelter said.

He said that Mike Robinson, editor of the magazine, would not have edited any future issues, even if it had been continued. Robinson will graduate in January.

Allen's Statement To Tar Heel:

For many years the University of North Carolina has cherished and honored its tradition and policy of student freedom of the press. On December 17, 1962, in the second issue of volume one of "The North Carolina Magazine", this tradition was flagrantly violated with the publication of the supplement to The Daily Tar Heel. A gross abdication of editorial responsibility allowed the infiltration of filth and perverted matter into the publication.

Though we have long cherished our principle of editorial freedom, the violation of this freedom in this issue was so flagrant as to demand responsible student action. To ignore this violation would be to betray the trust conferred on student leadership by the University and the student body. Therefore, as president of the student body, I hope to initiate positive action with respect to further publication of The North Carolina Magazine.

First Issue Of J-School Paper Is Out

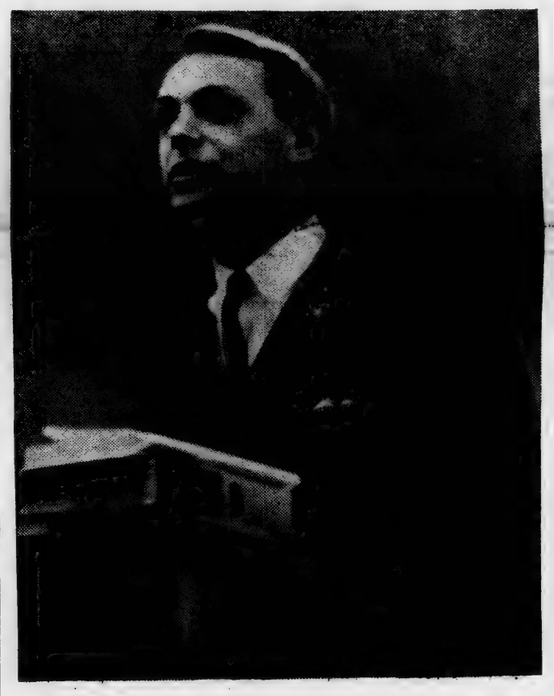
The first issue of the UNC Journalist, a laboratory newspaper to print the best news and feature stories, editorials, and reviews written by journalism students, was distributed yesterday.

Charles D. Mooney, Statesville senior and holder of the Quincy Sharpe Mills Scholarship, edits the newspaper which will appear about three times a semester.

The newspaper provides a print outlet for work done in journalism classes and on assignment from the editor.

A student-faculty board of six members has general supervision of the publication and acts in an advisory capacity to the editor. Gary Dalton, senior from Danville, Va.; Steve Lee, senior from Roseboro; and Harry Lloyd, junior from Hillsboro are the student members. Staff members are Kenneth R. Byerly, Wayne A. Danielson, vice chairman, and Joseph L. Morrison. Dean Norval Neil Luxon is ex officio chairman.

"We have felt the need for a regular print outlet for work done by our students in addition to the extra-curricular experience they get on the Daily Tar Heel," Dean Luxon said.



The first issue of the UNC Journalist contains a review of John J. McPhaul's book "Deadlines and Monkeyshines" by John Medlin, a feature article entitled "Female Fairway Fiends" by Don Jeffries and a society article as seen through the eyes of a male reporter, Perry Young.

Editorials include "Whose Freedom Threatened?" and "Personality Test" by Chris Farran, "Apathy Revisited" by Bill McAllister and "The Reds Are Coming," a poem written to the tune of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" by Jeff Jones.

Davis Appointed Orientation Head

Student Body president Allen announced yesterday the appointment of Archie Davis as chairman of the 1963 orientation committee.

Davis is a junior from Winston-Salem, and has worked as an orientation counselor for two years.

Skybolt Problem Divides Leaders

NASSAU, Bahamas (UPI) — President Kennedy and Prime Minister Harold Macmillan met in balmy weather and high spirits Tuesday, but shadowing this "big two summit" was the conflict over proposed U. S. jettisoning of the Skybolt nuclear missile program.

The Anglo-American leaders stepped up to Tuesday afternoon their opening conference on world issues in the wake of the Cuban crisis and the new situation posed by Red China's invasion of India.

Top military men of both nations — including Defense Secretary Robert McNamara and Britain's Peter Thorneycroft — were to sit in on the talks. Their presence underlined the pressing nature of the Skybolt controversy which had put Macmillan under severe political strain at home. Setting for this sixth Kennedy-Macmillan meeting was the lush, sub-tropical Lyford Cay Club on a peninsula on the western tip of New Province Island.

Kennedy was reported in a "friendly but firm" mood over the apparent American decision to halt within several months development of the Skybolt, an atomic-armed missile fired from a bomber to ground targets with a range of 1,000 miles.

Britain had counted on the Skybolt to arm its jet bomber fleet. Kennedy has indicated, however, that failures and delays will lead to abandoning the project — whose completion would cost $2.5 billion — in favor of reliance on Minuteman and other missiles, the Polaris and Strategic Air Command.

The missile controversy had more immediacy but no more importance than other issues, including:

—Anglo-American support of India against Red Chinese encroachment.

—Consideration of implications of the rift between Nikita Khrushchev and the Chinese Communists.

—Persuasion of Britain and other European powers to increase their troop contributions to NATO, bringing its forces up from 23 to 30 divisions.

—The Congo, where the United States is urging Britain to increase its support of United Nations efforts to force Katanga back into the republic.

Macmillan gave Kennedy an effusive greeting when the President's plane arrived from Washington at 10:55 a.m. EST. Both men obviously were delighted at the sunshine and blue skies after leaving cold and stormy weather behind.

22 Students Will Attend Y Assembly

By Martin Kruming

Some 1,200 students from 400 YMCA and YWCA organizations will gather at the University of Illinois Dec. 27 through Jan. 2 for the National Student Assembly.

Twenty-two Carolina YMCA and YWCA members will leave Chapel Hill by chartered bus Dec. 26 and return the afternoon of Jan. 2. Three delegates from Louisburg College and two from Duke will also make the trip.

The National Student Assembly is held every four years and students from colleges throughout the country meet to discuss national and world problems.

The Assembly program will include leaders in education, religion, and political and international affairs.

James Grant, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State, will lead a discussion on "The World in Revolution."

"Challenges to the Democratic Idea" will be the speech delivered by Indiana congressman John Brademas.

"I really have been impressed with the seriousness of the delegates," said UNC chairman Judy Bryant. "The attendance at the meeting has been excellent. I feel that the Carolina delegation will be prepared for active participation in all aspects of the Assembly," she added.

Claude Shotts and Anne Queen, general secretary of the YMCA and YWCA respectively, will accompany the Carolina delegation.

The UNC group includes Carole Ansley, Priscilla Bennett, Judy Bryant (chairman), Laurie Clark, Carolyn Eubanks, Frances Goins, Lou Jay, Lucy Kennerly, Ginger Kinnaird, Sue Russell and Louise Scherchardt (from the YWCA); Essa Abdullah, Bruce Cooper, Tom Gruehn, Alan Hiffman, Robert McCall, Kellis Parker, Gil Stallings (president of the YWCA), Scott Trull, and Dwight Wheless (from the YMCA).

No Action Taken At Special Meet

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature failed to consider any legislation in its brief Special Session Monday night.

The session, petitioned for by Student Party Chairman Robin Britt and 15 SL representatives, in order to consider the $4600 student bus bill, was adjourned five minutes after it was called to order. No one present could supply any information about the bill.

Earlier in the day, questions arose concerning several aspects of the bill — whether or not a transportation license would be needed; whether or not the bill would violate the Umstead Act; whether or not the insurance would cover all possible liabilities; what the repair costs would be; and others. It was then decided not to introduce the bill in the Finance Committee until all these possible complications had been ironed out. Therefore the bill could not come before SL Tuesday because it had not passed out of committee.

UP Statement

Mike Chanin, chairman of the University Party, released the following statement yesterday concerning the bus bill: "The UP, as co-sponsor of the bus bill, is anxious for immediate and responsible action. However, I must criticize the action of those who sought to rush this bill through SL by a special session without considering many of the financial and legal problems — without even checking with the State Utilities Commission or the State Attorney General on the various laws and regulations governing public transportation in this state.

"The party is anxious that a large investment by student government and, more particularly, by the residents of Ehringhaus and Craige dormitories not be a wasted effort should the state, the university administration or others discover that the bus system is illegal and then force it to stop service.

"The irresponsibility of those who called for a special session to consider a bill and then failed to have the bill completely prepared, and furthermore even failed to attend the session, is not indicative of the responsible student government we need here at Carolina. The UP stresses that bus service to Ehringhaus and Craige must be responsibility planned if it is to work successfully here."

SP Statement

Robin Britt, chairman of the Student Party, released the following statement yesterday:

The events surrounding the special session called for the consideration of a bill to purchase a bus for Student Government are as follows:

On Monday morning I was read a letter from Dean Henderson by his secretary stating that the administration did not object to the operation of a bus service for Ehringhaus and Craige dormitories by Student Government and the administration would provide for the sale of bus passes at the snack bars in Ehringhaus and Craige dormitories and at the Book Exchange.

"The letter stated, however, that the bus fees could not be collected through th Cashier's Office. It also stated that the administration did not feel the operation of the bus service would constitute a violation of the Umstead Act.

"Later, however, several questions arose concerning the involvement of the Administration in the operation that needed to be answered. A few of these questions were the ultimate liability of the University in case of suit, taxes, and permission from the Utilities Commission for the operation of the bus. With these questions raised I decided not to introduce the legislation concerning the bus until the State Attorney General and the Utilities Commission could be consulted. At that time, with the heavy docket of legislation ready to be acted on, I anticipated that Legislature would consider other legislation on Monday night."

Grievance Committee Besieged By Gripes Of Students In Ehringhaus Dorm Meeting

By Mike McGee

The U. P. Grievance recently heard various problems submitted to members of the Committee by the residents of Ehringhaus.

The permanent members of the committee present were Marshall Bellovin, Rex Savery, Bob Clawson, and Dee Johnson. The temporary members included Ford Rowan and John Mitchener, and Russell Perry, dorm manager.

Several residents of Ehringhaus were asked for comments concerning the grievances. The formal grievances are as follows, amended by student comment where applicable:

(1) The Ehringhaus library has no books: "Plans are being made to have the books before the end of the semester," said an editor of the dorm newspaper.

(2) There is a need for a direct path from Craige dorm to campus.

(3) The Daily Tar Heel is not delivered to the suites: "I always find myself able to get it; the dorm is too big for the extra work of door-to-door delivery," said one student.

(4) Because of the distance and coming cold weather, transportation to and from campus is needed: "This is the most important and urgent of the grievances," said one Ehringhaus resident.

(5) Excessive dormitory noise hinders study and causes general disturbance. Comments varied: "All the time . . . Sometimes . . . Not at all."

(6) There is no knowledge of various places around campus, other than Wilson Library, where one might study: "Phillips Hall, Alumnae Hall, Hanes Hall, Saunders Hall, and others," stated one student. "A list of places should be posted on each floor of the dorm."

(7) Telephones are desired in every room without long delays: "Who needs it? No other dorms have such luxuries," was one opinion.

(8) Not enough heat in the bathrooms and in the dorm rooms.

(9) The elevators are not in proper working order at all times.

(10) The janitors do not properly clean the rooms and sometimes try to trade service for gifts.

(11) The food in the Ehringhaus cafeteria is far from good and the prices "seem" to be rising.

(12) The snack bar should be open later than 11 p.m.: "Cigarette, coke, and candy machines would take care of this," students suggested.

(13) The Fire Extinguishers seem to be empty: "I haven't tried one lately," was one comment.

(14) Washing machines are needed in the dorm: "They would be a 'convenience', but are a luxury item," everyone agreed.

Student Responsibility And The Question Of Obscenity

"Student responsibility" means many things to many people. To the IFC it means one thing, to student government another, to the honor councils another.

To the Daily Tar Heel editors, student responsibility is tied up with the issues of editorial freedom and responsibility, complete news presentation. Student responsibility is broad and encompassing — it concerns the editors in their roles as the recorders of campus news, and as commentators on the issues of importance to the educator, student and citizen.

The editors of the Tar Heel hold a unique position, being completely responsible for all material which appears in the newspaper. There is no student or faculty publications board to pre-censor or post-censor any material in the Tar Heel. No DTH editor ever has been fired from his position by the University, as was done at the University of Colorado this fall.

With the unique editorial position comes grave responsibility — responsibility to insure that campus views are given a mode of expression, that campus news is presented, and, tied up in this question of responsibility, is the desire that what is printed should not be libelous, slanderous or obscene.

An article in Monday's second North Carolina Magazine, published by the Tar Heel, has provoked considerable indignation among students. The article, "The First and Finest Feeling," was the contributor's view of the Adam and Eve story from a "different" view, namely that of sex.

Some students were particularly agitated about the article. They urged either honor council action against the editors, the firing of the magazine editor, or the intervention of the Administration — and two students even requested the IFC to pass judgment on the article.

The claim was that the article was obscene. The president of the student body went so far as to claim it was "filth and perverted matter."

We cannot join these persons in complete condemnation of the article. We do not think it was "filth" or "perverted" by any means. The purpose of the tale, we feel, was permissible. We cannot agree with those few whose religious sensibilities were hurt. Many of the other students who are agitated by the article's appearance, may have read too much into the story — what you get out of an article is very much dependent on your personal intellectual background.

There were passages in the article, however, which we feel were definitely inadvisable, and offensive to many persons. The editors did not proof read the article, and might very well have not printed it had they read it. But as editors we assume complete responsibility for the story, as for everything else appearing under the name of the Daily Tar Heel.

As can be seen on page one, the magazine has been — finally, this time — discontinued. The reasons for the publication's demise are many; reaction to the "Feeling" article is only one.

We remain open to any suggestions coming from students who believe something more should be done in this matter. But we feel we have taken the proper action to continue a responsibly-edited Daily Tar Heel. (JC)

Merry, Merry, Merry

As a special Christmas present to the campus, we will not write a "true meaning of the Christmas season" editorial. Instead, we would like to list a few presents to which certain groups and individuals are entitled, and should most certainly receive:

UNC student government — A future.

President Kennedy's 1963 congressional program — Money.

Richard Nixon — A future.

Southern higher education — Money.

The University of North Carolina — A bright future and money. (JC)

Let's All Meet . . .

You won't believe this . . .

Most of the campus by this time has gotten the message that Student Legislature is a somewhat confused collection of people. But Monday night's "special session" really hit rock-bottom.

The Student Party had engineered the special session in order to consider the bill for student government to buy a bus. This is a politically "hot" issue, whatever the merits of the bill itself.

But whatever happened to Baby Jane Legislature? Their most honored Dignities assembled, called the roll and heard Rep. Edmisten give a stirring devotion, and then came time for the bus bill.

There was silence. None of the bus bill's backers had shown up, or at least, none had anything to say.

Someone called for adjournment, and the solons retired for the evening, their special session ended. The bill's supporters? — they had discovered several new developments, and decided not to push passage of the bill at that time.

And so the Legislature met and adjourned, and it all looked just a little bit silly. (JC)

The 'Best' Christmas Wish For '62

By MAX ASCOLI
Reporter Magazine

How are we doing, how are we faring in that realm of the spiritual that is generally supposed to be more or less half of our lives? A look at our balance of spiritual payments is particularly indicated at this season, dedicated to the celebration of the divine in man. The blend of godliness with this human stuff can be commemorated with the re-evocation of the manger and the shepherds and a birth. But there are others ways. For those who have the sense of Christmas, that alloy of the human and of the spiritual has been the starting point of an adventure that is still lived by every human being, and to which there is no end in sight. There has been no fission between the two elements; rather, thy have become more and more emmeshed with each other, though the balance between the two cannot possibly ever be steady.

We can celebrate Christmas by focusing our minds on the here and now: the here in our country, faced as we are now by an opponent not far away from us and for whom what we still call spiritual life is a laughable figment of drugged imagination. This means Cuba, and well beyond that tortured little island, all the lands where Communism is sovereign. On Christmas Day and every day, we cannot have anything but love for all those people violently separated from us and from themselves by a tyranny that seeks to make all men into soulless tools of an irreversible destiny. We have seen just in these days how adept the Communist masters are at lying, cheating, and crawling.

It is said by a number of people in positions of authority that if the status quo is maintained, if reality is recognized—the enduring reality of Communist power and the legitimacy of Communist rule — then things somehow will get settled. The realists, proud of having no theory of history, flaunt a doctrinaire mistrust of all doctrines, yet at the same time exhibit a remarkable reliance on what they consider some habits of history. Above all, let's be pragmatists, it is said, which means, as far as one can understand, unprincipled. There are evidences that the top man on the other side is a pragmatist too, and therefore, for all his vocal, devotional Marxism, he too is unprincipled.

We must maintain, it is said, the balance between their system and ours. True, they are incessantly busy tipping the scales in their own favor, using all possible means, mostly foul. But isn't it a habit of history that every harsh, oppressive rule in due time gets mellower? We have had an evidence of this mellowing just a fw weeks ago, when our major opponent, caught by our government just in the nick of time, canceled the preparations he had made for a pyromaniacal threat to the human race.

Our realists, to be sure, still proclaim on every possible occasion their faith in freedom and their devotion to spiritual life. Even the people of Cuba have been repeatedly told that they are going to regain their freedom some time any time. But the return of large sections of the human race to an order of things where the sovereignty of the individual's inner life is somehow respected—this is such a far-away goal that there is no use wasting energy devising the strategy for achieving it. We had better be satisfied with the day-to-day handling of accidents as they occur.

Have we to add that in thus rebuking pragmatism and realism as they are understood these days, we consider them the most short-sighted of all policies, the ones most likely to lead to an immeasurable conflagration? Everyone who does not recognize the absolute value of the status quo or the legitimacy of Communist totalitarianism must undergo the humiliation of having to proclaim: "I am against war." Of course we are. No sane person can possibly cherish the prospect of war for the sake of ending Communism. Neither can we cherish the prospect of peace for its own sake without becoming the victims of Communism. In our time, we can have only similes of war and similes of peace.

We can and we must have diplomatic dealings with some of the Communist governments, but we cannot mistake the verbiage and amenities of diplomacy for the reality of nation-to-nation, people-to-people communication. We can forget, but only to our sorrow, that these governments are all, though maybe in differing degrees, inimical to the peoples they pretend to represent, and that their arbitrary rule can be maintained only if it is further and further extended. When we accept the notion that the spiritual life of other peoples can be wiped out, we make our own negotiable.

We must express our love for these peoples through every possible means of communication, and first of all by inflicting setbacks on their rulers. Now that at long last a set-back has been inflicted on these evil men, let's ready ourselves to meet other occasions so that the same can be done, again and again.

This is the best Chirstmas wish we can formulate for us and the peoples on the other side for this Christmas 1962.

Letter

Brian Lawler Sends Thanks

Dear Folks,

Since Mom and Dad are still in a dither — they are the most unorganized family to be born into — I thought I'd best up and get a letter off to you myself. Thanks so very much for all the nice things you did for them before and after I came. Don't know what I would have done without you . . . it's taking me long enough as it is to get them conditioned to my schedule.

Thanks specifically (don't you think that's a pretty good word for being only three weeks old yesterday?): to Mom's former housemothers, the other student body officers and all who peered at me through the glass window. Glad you came. Mom was getting kinda lonesome while Dad was at State Student Legislature . . . to whoever or whatever is/are the Old Lampshades, you successfully lit up our whole household with your gift of maid service for a week . . . to the campus hostess, Miss Ann Queen, hope Dad didn't eat you out of house and home the night after I arrived; he seems to have inherited my healthy appetite . . . to Miss Ginger Swain, I don't know yet WHAT you wrote in your letter, but the Folks are saving it for me; it meant so much to them . . . to y'all at Chez Hickory, Mom and Dad seem to think I have enough to do with "pooh" already, but I notice they're in line to read "Winnie" . . . to the Chapel Hill swim Team, and I can hardly wait to join you at workout—Dad says it'll be a few months yet . . . to the Library Catalog Department, a plea, will you please make those Amazons give me back that crisp new bill; it was a battle, but they finally got it away from me . . . and speaking of crisp, new bills, to that anonymous socratic who mailed the $100 bill to "The Littlest Lawler," I only saw it once but it sure was purty. Mom and Dad were a bit stunned, but not so that it wasn't deeply appreciated and quickly used.

My thanks could go on and on, but I can't 'cause "Clot" has to. So, thanks, EVERYBODY, and Merry Christmas! And do come see me; I'm always up!

—Master Brian Arthur Lawler

Out Of The Fryin' Pan . . .

Inasmuch as this will be our last communication with you, dear reader, until the advent of the New Year, we thought it only fitting that we discuss your Holiday Vacation, which means, parties, which means simply—BOOZE.

Unlike the ostriches of temperance of abstinence who simply refuse to believe that people actually drink—Mercy, No!—we not only accept this fact with whole-heartedness but are also willing to make it easier for you if you must. It is with this thought in mind that we set down the following hints and suggestions toward a more sane and enjoyable approach to the wassailing bowl.

(1) Eat before you drink. It may be as little as a sandwich or as much as a steak, but eat. If you don't, you'll forget to afterwards, and by the time you remember, it will be too late, the damage already having been done. By then you will probably be so famished, you will gulp the food down, this only serving to increase your discomfort and setting a Herculean task before your gastric apparatus. Avoid spicy, highly seasoned foods in conjunction with the flask.

(2) Drink the one drink you like, whether it be bourbon, scotch, rye, gin or vodka, but stay with that ONE.

Under no circumstances should you try your hand at mixing one with the other, whether in a glass or in your stomach. This is the surest, fastest path to the bathroom door, and you know what THAT means. Whatever you have chosen for the evening, stay with it. Older and supposedly more experienced drinkers than yourselves have made this mistake and lived — barely — to regret it.

(3) If you are going to drink, learn to enjoy it, but if you must do it as a delayed adolescent status symbol, all the while screwing up your nose in obvious dislike, leave it alone. You're only fooling yorself

By enjoy it, we mean: leave the cokes where they belong — in the refrigerator. Distillers of fine bourbons and scotches did not labor for hundreds of years in perfection of their art only to have you come along and louse up the brew with a bottle of that sweet smelling, vile looking gunk that might be better put on your hair than in your stomach.

Besides, the carbonation in the coke will only serve to have your body absorb the alcohol faster, thereby rendering you fairly well potted within an unreasonable length of time. One drinks to enjoy it, not to play the deadly game of: Last One Under the Table's an FBI Man!

(4) Contrary to popular opinion, coffee does not sober a person. Ten cups of coffe drunk in rapid succession might kill you, but you will still die drunk. Leave it alone. Better than coffee, if you find yourself at a party where the walls seem to be changing places with the ceiling, put your glass down, walk outside and breathe in deep draughts through your mouth.

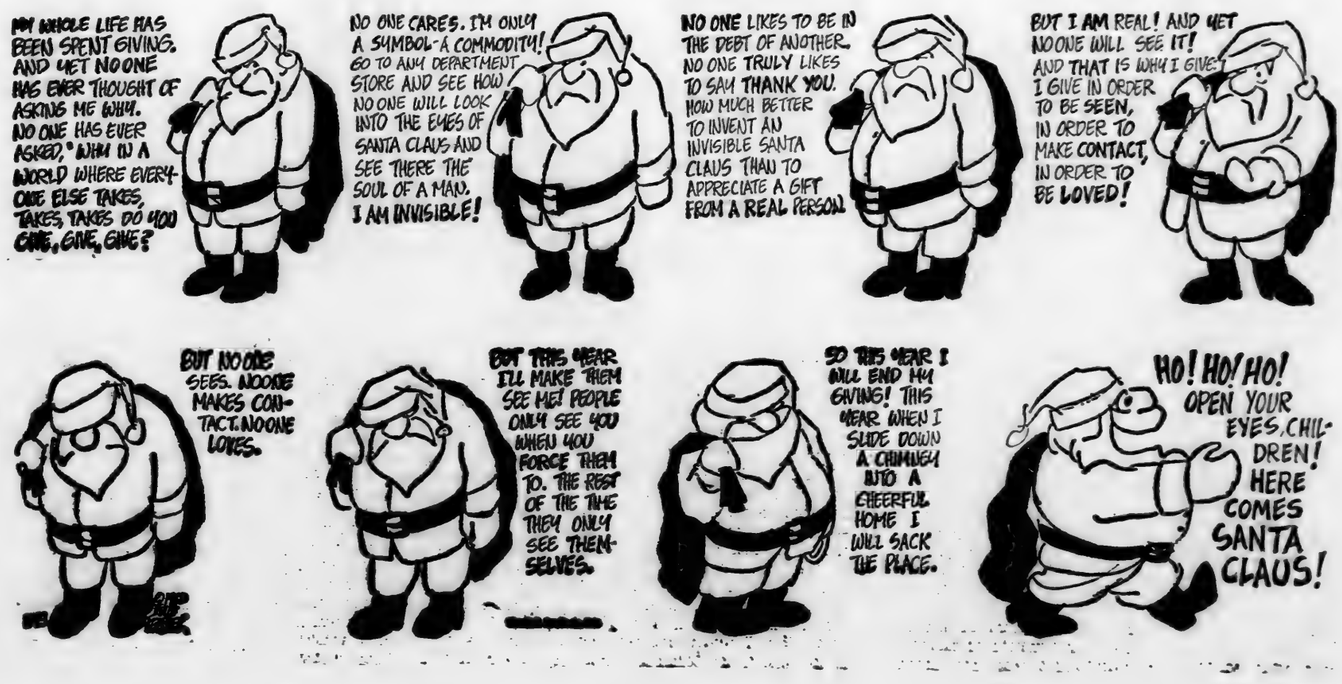
This will serve to give your body a badly needed and long overdue fresh supply of oxygen that will in turn help to "burn up the booze."

If you're in a car, a non-driver, roll down the window and stick your head out — slightly, that is — and do the same. (Before you do this make sure the driver is not playing "Fender, Fender, Who's Got the Chrome Strip" with a passing Greyhound Bus, or your head might really hurt in the morning.)

(5) And while we're on the subject of driving. While drinking, if you feel you must prove your virility and American manhood — whatever that means — by running the speedometer needle out of sight, our advice to you is this: quit school, become an apprentice driver for Fireball Roberts or Nelson Stacy and learn yourself a trade, young man. Don't do it on the highways, most of which were designed for old ladies in 53 Plymouths, not young idiots in 63 Sting Rays.

We leave you, dear reader, with this one parting maxim, the most important of all. Don't take anything from Santa, unless he gives you Green Stamps.

Happy Channukah and Merry Christmas, Y'all! from Ron Levin.



LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel solicits and welcomes Letters to the Editor from all members of the University community.

Letters may be of any length, although brevity increases promptness of publication. They should be typed and double-spaced, if possible. All letters must be signed (signature of letter-writers will be checked) and the student's address and telephone number must be included. Signatures will be withheld if there is sufficient reason.

Letters should be brought to DTH offices, second floor of Graham Memorial, at least two to three days before publication is desired.

Opinions On Buckley, HUAC And Communists

Forum Fee Action Criticized

Saving Money, Or Seeking Publicity?

To the Editors,

On Buckley and the Matter of being a Gentleman:

It occurs to me that some members of the academic community are not acting like the Carolina gentlemen they are supposed to be. First of all, the Dialectic-Philanthropic Society decides to "censure" William Buckley for "vulgarity and poor taste."

A) Nothing in Buckley's speech was vulgar or in poor taste; Rather, he said that what Norman Mailer said was vulgar. His remarks about Kenneth Tynan were obviously said with tongue-in-cheek, that is, Buckley was speaking metaphorically.

B) To censure someone is a rather serious business. The Senate took four years of McCarthy before they decided to act. Yet the Di-Phi which has had a history of enlightened debate and intelligent conduct adjourned from Memorial Hall Monday night to reconvene Tuesday night and "get back at that nasty man who said all those dirty things." Ah well, who can expect children to act like gentlemen?

Second, the Corolina Forum decided they didn't like what they had bought in William Buckley's services, so now they are refusing to pay up. Far be it for me to stand up for Mr. Buckley's legal rights in this regard. He is perfectly able to take care of himself. But what a small opinion he must have of the Univ. of North Carolina, that it would Welsh on an agreement entered into on good faith. More than that, the argument the Carolina Forum is using (which is also endorsed by the President and Vice Pres. of the Student Body,) is specious in total. This is not the first time that a writer of prominence has "read" some of his own work. Besides, what right has a group to dictate the limitations under which a guest speaker must labor in giving an address at the initial request of said group. When you "buy" a speaker, you also "buy" whatever he has to say. Aside from this, however, is the manner in which the whole business of withholding fees has come to light. One wonders if Henry Mayer et. al. are more interested in the money they want to save, or in gathering publicity in conjunction with the Daily Tar Heel's vendetta against Buckley. (The Tar Heel has already published two anti-Buckley editorials by Jim Clotfelter, one by Wayne King, plus an editorial by Chuck Wrye in which he promises to give us his version of the nature of conservatism; plus the umpteen letters-to-the-editors, all of which have been derogatory for Buckley.)

But, in sum, who can blame these people for acting ungentlemanly? "There is something evil about that man," Jack Paar has said of Buckley; if this is so, say our ungentlemanly Carolina gentlemen, why should we act gentlemanly to the devil? Well, the answer is simple; if reasoned debate concerning Mr. Buckley's arguments is too much a challenge for these Carolina "gentlemen," then what else is there but to besmirch his name after he is gone?

—Samuel S. Jones, Jr.

'Rash' Criticism Thrown At WFB

To the Editors,

May I take this opportunity to defend William F. Buckley's address to the student body Monday evening last. I fear that much rash and obtrusive criticism has been unjustly thrown Mr. Buckley's way partially out of ignorance of the circumstances at hand.

First, there are those who have lamented the fact that Mr. Buckley's address was essentially the same as an article published in a national magazine this month. The fact of the matter is, however, that Mr. Buckley had just returned from abroad and was not aware that his article had hit the newsstands until it was called to his attenion afer his address. He expressed his regret of this coincidence later in the evening.

Second, we have heard from those individuals who have criticized Mr. Buckley's singling out Norman Mailer for his attack against what Buckley calls the "liberal mania." When one considers the fact that in a complementing article in the same national magazine, Mr. Mailer presents his case against Mr. Buckley and the American right wing, Mr. Buckley's biting remarks seem quite justified. Quite possibly, the editors of this magazine requested from the authors personal as well as ideological coups de main. Those who listened attentively to his entire address realize that Mr. Buckley did not attempt to typify "liberalism" in the godhead of Norman Mailer. Rather, his point centered on Mailer as an individual and his credo and those who would espouse Mailer's credo.

Third, we are presented with the Di-Phi's censure of Mr. Buckley for "the use of vulgarity and poor taste." With this comes the cries of others who scream "obscene" at Mr. Buckley's touche concerning the "virility" of Kenneth Tynan, an English pacifist. It should have been obvious to all present Monday evening, however, that Mr. Buckley's witty comment was a perfectly legitimate metaphor directed NOT at Mr. Tynan's potency as a biological organism, but at what Mr. Buckley considers Mr. Tynan's intellectual inadequacy. Mr. Buckley himself confirmed this interpretation later in the evening and pointed out that in fact Mr. Tynan already has two children. Only those preoccupied with looking for something to pounce upon could have possibly misconstrued this poignant and effective metaphor.

One would hope that the Di-Phi and those individuals who have voiced such adamant criticism of Mr. Buckley's address on these grounds will intelligently review their temerity. William F. Buckley presented too many excellent arguments which carry home the essential beliefs and commitments of the conservative movement today for campus liberals to concern themselves with such petty attacks as have been advanced. Are we to assume that the lack of intelligent and thoughtful criticism of Mr. Buckley's remarks in Memorial Hall signifies an unwillingness, or indeed, an incapability on the part of liberals to confront Mr. Buckley and his conservative philosophy on an intellectual plane?

—Franklin Adkinson, Jr.

Buckley Can At Least Spell

To the Editors,

Perhaps the letters of December 14th tell us more about their writers than about what their writers have to say.

Ken A. Bode mentions " . . . William F. Buckley's alliterate attack . . ." Since he obviously does not mean to modify a noun with a verb, he must mean either "alliterative" or "illiterate." However, he does not mention alliteration in his letter. Thus, he must mean "illiterate." In that case, we have a clear example of the pot calling the kettle black.

He further states, "I only submit myself to these diatributes infrequently . . ." He must visit the dictionary even less frequently. The word is "diatribes."

In the second letter, Dennis Bobrowske says, ". . . I must complement him . . . " Either he made a blunder in elementary spelling, or there was a typesetting error. There is no need to pursue the matter.

Here is my point: Granted that Mr. Buckley cannot enthrall his readers (or listeners) by making them guess what he means and by inventing new words, he can at least spell.

—Bill Stroupe

Variety Of New Quarterly Is Refreshing To Reviewer

A REVIEW
By Joe Williman

The current issue of the CAROLINA QUARTERLY is a refreshing one in many ways. First as a contrast to the politically-centered review many found in the last, long-delayed issue of REFLECTIONS, and second as a magazine designed to fill the gap of intellectual interest in print which is painfully evident this year at Carolina.

It is usually true of the QUARTERLY that each year's issues have a certain individual quality of their own. This year's first indication looks good in many ways, not so good in others. To begin with, the poetry in this issue is obviously the only real strong point, but it is well made. Of campus contributions, staff member Dudley Carroll has done an excellent two-part reflection entitled "The Tree of Winter Light," and begins to fulfill the promise he made in last year's Quarterly with his clear imagery, and above all, his complete independence of style. Other poems in the issue are also interesting, but the best is "Notes From a North African Cafe," by Lyman Andrews, Jr. This poem is a horror-struck polemic referring to the partisan violence in Algeria; told in a series of 24 related images, its gradual climax is as rewarding as anything in the magazine.

A longish piece by Edsel Ford and a fragment by John Tagliabue seem to have little excuse except as exercises, though the pieces by John Engels and David Cornel DeJong are more completely worked out and satisfying. "Your Mystery, Mallarme" by Sam Bradley is an exuberant piece of music and enthusiasm which is its own best spokesman.

On the whole, this first Carolina Quarterly of the year is a relief, and in many ways positively good.

Local 'Peace' Women Hit House Group

To the Editors,

The Chapel Hill-Durham Branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom wishes to thank you for the fine coverage you have given the hearings HUAC has held concerning the activities of Women's Strike for Peace and to call to your attention the statement of our National Policy Committee.

A statement issued by the National Policy Committee of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom protesting the House Un-American Activities Committee hearings on Women's Strike for Peace, December 11-13 calls attention to several facts:

1) For the first time in history, mere preparation for war is killing people and damaging health and heredity.

2) Women are reacting strongly to these dangers and Women's Strike for Peace is a natural expression of this concern.

3) The most significant difference between totalitarianism and democracy is that, in a democracy, the citizen is free openly to disagree with his government's policies, either domestic or foreign.

4) No governmental agency of a democracy is justified in calling up citizens and questioning them regarding their political convictions or motives merely because they have participated in peaceful efforts to bring to public attention governmental policies or actions which they consider to be not in the best interests of their nation or in line with their nation's traditional ideals.

5) Any American is fulfilling his patriotic duty when he gives conscientious thought to public policy and appeals to his fellow citizens to support changes which he regards as urgent.

6) The WSP has, by orderly demonstrations, been effective in awakening citizens and government to the urgent necessity of stopping nuclear explosions and of achieving world disarmament under effective international control which is actually declared U. S. policy.

—CH-Durham Branch Women's International League for Peace and Freedom

More Than HUAC Could Handle

By MARY McCRORY

WASHINGTON — "Why can't a woman be like a man?" sings Henry Higgins in "My Fair Lady."

That is precisely the question the House Committee on Un-American Activities is asking itself today, after three days of hearing on Communist infiltration into the Women Strike for Peace movement.

The committee was trying to find out if the ladies' group is subversive. All they found out is that their conduct in the caucus room certainly was.

The leader of the group just kept protesting prettily that she was not really the leader at all.

No man, of course, would ever deny being the leader of anything. Nor would he suggest for a split second that he didn't know exactly what was going on.

But Mrs. Dagmar Wilson of Washington, when asked if she exercised control over the New York chapter, merely giggled and said, "Nobody controls anybody in the Women Strike for Peace. We're all leaders."

Mrs. Wilson's appearance was the coup de grace for the men in the battle of the sexes.

Things had been sufficiently out of hand before. The ladies had been using the Congress as a baby-sitter. Their young crawled in the aisles and noisily sucked their bottles during the whole proceedings. The ladies themselves hissed, gasped, clapped entirely at will. When several of their number took the Fifth Amendment, they applauded.

When Mrs. Wilson, trim and beguiling in red wool, stepped up to take the stand, a mother with a baby on one hip worked her way through the crowd and handed her a bouquet of purple and white flowers, exactly as if she were the principal speaker at a ladies' luncheon. There were smiles, cheers, and a hint of tears.

Mrs. Wilson took over from the first word. The committee counsel, Alfred Nittle, who had been burned by a previous witness, said she did not need to give her exact age.

Mrs. Wilson said crisply she didn't mind at all saying she was born in 1916.

Mr. Nittle then went about what could have been the fairly easy task of finding out if she was in charge of the Women Strike for Peace.

But Mrs. Wilson, who treated Mr. Nittle exactly as if he were a rather trying dinner partner, said, "We're all leaders."

The leaders behind her burst into applause.

Mr. Nittle produced a Women Strike for Peace newsletter, from what he hoped would turn out to be the headquarters.

"It's not dated," he said.

"Oh, dear," rejoined Mrs. Wilson.

Wasn't it a fact, asked Mr. Nittle sternly, that the New York chapter—several of whose members had appeared and refused to answer questions—played a dominant role in the group?

"Other cities would be mortified if you said that," said Mrs. Wilson.

Was it, Mr. Nittle wanted to know, Mrs. Wilson's idea to send delegates to a Moscow Peace Conference.

"No," said Mrs. Wilson regretfully, "I wish I'd thought of that."

Mr. Nittle, who was being gently beaten with non-sequiturs, led Mrs. Wilson through a cloudy passage about how the Women Strike for Peace had become the Women's International Strike for Peace, or WISP. And did WISP have a headquarters?

"Alas," said Mrs. Wilson, "we need one badly."

Mr. Nittle asked sternly if the international coordinator of the WISP was from New York.

"She really comes from California said Mrs. Wilson, giggling a little bit. Acting Chairman Doyle, who is also from the Golden State, bowed reflexively, and Mrs. Wilson dimpled at him.

Mr. Nittle wanted to know whose idea it was for the WISPs to send observers to Moscow.

"It is something," said Mrs. Wilson, getting to the heart of the matter, "I find very difficult to explain to the masculine mind."

Mr. Nittle pressed forward to the clutch question, one that would bring a man to his knees with patriotic protest.

"Would you knowingly permit or encourage Communist Party members to occupy leadership positions in the Women Strike for Peace?"

"Well, my dear sir," said Mrs. Wilson, "I have no control or desire to control those who wish to join. I hope everyone in the whole world joins; unless they do, then God help us."

The ladies cheered.

"Would you unknowingly permit or welcome Nazis or Fascists?" asked Mr. Nittle.

Mrs. Wilson tittered and said, "If we could only get them on our side."

Chairman Doyle, who was obviously weary with being the generalissimo on his side in the war between the sexes, thanked Mrs. Wilson for coming and said he was sure she was no Communist.

Naturally, she had the last word.

"I do hope you live to thank us when we have achieved our goal," she said.

Editor Turns His Back . . .

To the Editors,

Mr. Clotfelter:

By all means let's condemn our government's action taken against the communist party in the U. S. After all we're not in a life and death struggle pitting our nation against one of the most awesome powers (political and military) we have ever faced. A power whose leader has promised to "Bury us." Therefore we definitely should harbor an organ of this power within our own boarders. Possibly we should appropriate federal funds for its support. That would be extremely democratic of us, and should satisfy Mr. Clotfelter's pseudo-idealism.

Maybe, if we are lucky, such an organization would be successful in blowing up a couple of large department stores during the Christmas rush, as Cuban communist agents almost succeeded in doing recently. In this case Mr. Clotfelter would probably write an editorial condoning this as an excellent solution to the population explosion in the U. S.

Let's look the other way . . . turn our backs. Let's show the communists that we are not afraid of them. Let's disregard what happened December 7, 1941 when we turned our backs on an enemy. If we are lucky we would then continue as "the land of the free and home of the brave" as Mr. Clotfelter puts it, until 1984.

CP Should Be Outlawed

To the Editors,

I have read your editorial "A Brave Nation Won't Outlaw Opposition" with mixed reactions. What is it you are protesting? Are you opposed to the registration of the Communist Party, U.S.A. as a 'Communist - action organization' which is defined in the Internal Security Act as "any organization in the United States (other than a diplomatic representative or mission of a foreign government accredited as such by the Department of State) which (1) is substantially directed, dominated, or controlled by the foreign government or foreign organization controlling the world Communist movement . . . and (ii) operates primarily to advance the objectives of such world Communist movement . . . ." (50 U.S.C. Sec. 782(3) (a))? If so, on what grounds are you protesting? Do you maintain that this characterization of the C.P.U.S.A. is not justified? If so, you must doubt the findings of the Subversive Activities Control Board which held hearings for over a year and produced ". . . a record of some 14,000 transcript pages and approximately 500 exhibits, many of which are book length." (Modified Report of the SACB; Docket No. 51-101; p. 5).

The Board's findings were challenged in the Courts and were upheld after 10 years of litigation. The Communist Party was afforded all of the protections of due process of law including defense witnesses, assistance of counsel, the right to submit oral or documentary evidence in rebuttal and the right to conduct cross-examination. But maybe you do not question the findings of fact, but only question the constitutionality of the order of registration. But if this is the case, you must then question the Supreme Court (Communist Party v Subversive Activities Control Board, 367 U.S. 1 (1961)) which ruled that registration and disclosure of information on finances and membership was not unconstitutional. And, as some people like to point out in regard to other types of cases, Supreme Court decisions are the "Law of the Land." It should also be pointed out that many groups are required to register and/or report on their finances and/or membership to the Federal government: Aliens, Lobbyists, Agents of foreign governments and corporations, not to mention political candidates and parties.

You also seem to worry about the possibility of the Communist Party being prosecuted under the Smith Act if they register as a "Communist - action organization" in so far as this would be a plea of guilty to the charge that the Party was an agent of a foreign power, an agent which wishes to overthrow the government by violent means. Even if it were true that the act of registration as a "Communist - action organization" would be a plea of guilty to Smith Act charges, I would point out that the membership or holding office in any Communist organization is not per se a violation of any criminal statute nor may the fact of registration be received in evidence against any person who is registered in any prosecution for any alleged violation of any criminal statute (50 U.S.C. Sec. 783 (f)). Thus the only way that a conviction might be obtained under the Smith Act would be in a separate action utilizing evidence from other sources. In addition to this, since the Yates v U. S. decision, the chances of a conviction under the Smith Act are almost nil.

You ask: "Do we want to outlaw political beliefs? (No one is talking about overt acts of subversion —for such, there is a multitude of laws, so many that the attorney genera lisn't sure which to implement first.") I will not ask the question, just what is an act of subversion, for this is a complex field. But I would ask whether in the case of the Communist Party you can separate Marxism-Leninism as a "political belief" from Marxism - Leninism in practice. Lenin said "Our teaching is not a dogma, but a guide to action . . ." (Lenin—"Letter on Tactics"; Selected Works; International Publishers, New York, 1943; vol. VI, p. 32) Khrushchev has said that "In all its ACTIVITY, the Communist Party is always GUIDED by . . . Marxism-Leninism . . . We must inculcate a live knowledge of Leninism to youth, the ability to link its study with PRACTICE." (My emphasis) (Speech to XIII Komsomol Congress; Moscow radio broadcast, April 18, 1958). Thus it has always been a central Communist idea that Marxism-Leninism was a guide to action and practice rather than a "political belief." But you may say, "Isn't it possible to hold Marxism as a political belief apart from any action?" And I must answer that this is certainly possible. But on the other hand, is it reasonable to assume that the Communist Party is a debating society?

It is almost axiomatic that a "political party" is set up primarily to gain power so that it might put its "political beliefs" into practice. This is true of the Communist Party no less than it is true of the Republican Party or Democratic Party. But here is the difference. The Republicans and Democrats are committed to our Constitutional system, no matter how much they may disagree about various subordinate issues. But the Communist Party is committed to the overthrow of that Constitutional system, not by the ballot or by Constitutional amendment, but by any means necessary up to and including violence.

If the members of the Communist Party were committed to this idea in the abstract, they would not be members of the Party. As soon as a Marxist-Leninist joins a party or other organization which is committed to the goal of achieving power through action guided by the principles of Marxism-Leninism he is by definition committed to the utilization of force and violence or any other means that are necessary to establish the dictatorship of the proletariat. Thus, the Internal Security Act is not outlawing a simple "political belief." For this particular "political belief" when advanced by a "party" is a guide to action, action that would destroy the Constitution and its protections of "rights" that are exploited by the Communist Party. In fact, it is, in my opinion, debatable whether the Internal Security Act actually outlaws this particular "political belief" anyway. It seeks only to rob the Communist Party of its most potent technique: conspiratorial methods. If the Communist is a legitimate political party it should not mind operating in the open where the American people might choose or not choose its program and goals.

You also say that "The words 'national security' cannot be distorted in defense of the abridgment of basic constitutional rights". I first ask you just what rights have been abridged. The Party was asked to register and report on their finances and membership after long hearings held in public under rules of procedure that guaranteed them full due process rights. They had full access to the Courts and their case was found wanting. If they ARE a group which is sustantially controlled or directed by a foreign government or organization which controls the world Communist movement, they are no different from a lobbyist who represents sugar interests in Latin America who want to influence the Agricultural Committees in Congress to buy more sugar from them. These lobbyists are engaged in legitimate activity and they do not mind registering and reporting on their finances.

If on the other hand they are a legitimate domestic political party, as they would have us believe, they are no different from the Democratic Party which must report on its expenses and whose membership can be ascertained by examining the public REGISTRATION books in each precinct. Why should the Communist Party hesitate to register if it really is as it says it is? Or, is it really trying to retain its weapon of conspiratorial methods which does nothing but deceive the American people about the "true" nature of Communist Party and its aims? If the Party is so innocent, let it operate out in the open so that the American people might exercise their democratic prerogatives of choosing or rejecting the Party and its aims.

In closing let me comment on the last paragraphs of your editorial. You say that the American people must not allow the government to have unlimited powers to control any opposition, that they (the people) must take the opportunity to "renounce the cowardly view that America must suppress the freedom of its opposition in order to remain free." In most instances I would concur in this statement without reservation. However, in this case, we have another type of opposition. Criticism of the party in power by the out-party is a central part of our democratic process in America. The reason it is VALUED is because no party governs without mistakes and this keeps everyone on their political toes. The reason it is TOLERATED is because the party in power knows that the opposition is a LOYAL opposition. The opposition will not, in most cases, engage in assassination or attempt to replace the other party with a coup d'etat. The opposition will also stand behind the party in power, in most cases, when the country is faced with a threat from without. This latter always entails not collaborating with the enemy just because the opposition and the enemy have the same "enemy": the party in power. But can this be said of the Communist Party?

The Communist Party, it has been shown in legislative findings and hearings before the Subversive Activities Control Board, is ideologically committed to assassination and the coup d'etat should the proper time come; and the Communist Party has most definitely "collaborated" with the enemy, if the Soviet Union and the Communist-bloc is an enemy. Not only was the Communist Party not able to show before the SACB a single instance in which they did not support the foreign policy aims of the Soviet Union in their publications and activities, but the record of the party's espionage activities on behalf of the U.S.S.R. should speak for itself. So it seems to me that outlawing the "Communist opposition", in so far as the Internal Security Act may do this, is no worse than fighting in Korea against the Communist agressors. They both have the same objective ultimately: the whole world under Communist slavery.

Letters To The Editors

Opinions On Buckley, HUAC And Communists

Forum Fee Action Criticized

Saving Money, Or Seeking Publicity?

To the Editors,

On Buckley and the Matter of being a Gentleman:

It occurs to me that some members of the academic community are not acting like the Carolina gentlemen they are supposed to be. First of all, the Dialectic-Philanthropic Society decides to "censure" William Buckley for "vulgarity and poor taste."

A) Nothing in Buckley's speech was vulgar or in poor taste; Rather, he said that what Norman Mailer said was vulgar. His remarks about Kenneth Tynan were obviously said with tongue-in-cheek, that is, Buckley was speaking metaphorically.

B) To censure someone is a rather serious business. The Senate took four years of McCarthy before they decided to act. Yet the Di-Phi which has had a history of enlightened debate and intelligent conduct adjourned from Memorial Hall Monday night to reconvene Tuesday night and "get back at that nasty man who said all those dirty things." Ah well, who can expect children to act like gentlemen?

Second, the Corolina Forum decided they didn't like what they had bought in William Buckley's services, so now they are refusing to pay up. Far be it for me to stand up for Mr. Buckley's legal rights in this regard. He is perfectly able to take care of himself. But what a small opinion he must have of the Univ. of North Carolina, that it would Welsh on an agreement entered into on good faith. More than that, the argument the Carolina Forum is using (which is also endorsed by the President and Vice Pres. of the Student Body,) is specious in total. This is not the first time that a writer of prominence has "read" some of his own work. Besides, what right has a group to dictate the limitations under which a guest speaker must labor in giving an address at the initial request of said group. When you "buy" a speaker, you also "buy" whatever he has to say. Aside from this, however, is the manner in which the whole business of withholding fees has come to light. One wonders if Henry Mayer et. al. are more interested in the money they want to save, or in gathering publicity in conjunction with the Daily Tar Heel's vendetta against Buckley. (The Tar Heel has already published two anti-Buckley editorials by Jim Clotfelter, one by Wayne King, plus an editorial by Chuck Wrye in which he promises to give us his version of the nature of conservatism; plus the umpteen letters-to-the-editors, all of which have been derogatory for Buckley.)

But, in sum, who can blame these people for acting ungentlemanly? "There is something evil about that man," Jack Paar has said of Buckley; if this is so, say our ungentlemanly Carolina gentlemen, why should we act gentlemanly to the devil? Well, the answer is simple; if reasoned debate concerning Mr. Buckley's arguments is too much a challenge for these Carolina "gentlemen," then what else is there but to besmirch his name after he is gone?

'Rash' Criticism Thrown At WFB

To the Editors,

May I take this opportunity to defend William F. Buckley's address to the student body Monday evening last. I fear that much rash and obtrusive criticism has been unjustly thrown Mr. Buckley's way partially out of ignorance of the circumstances at hand.

First, there are those who have lamented the fact that Mr. Buckley's address was essentially the same as an article published in a national magazine this month. The fact of the matter is, however, that Mr. Buckley had just returned from abroad and was not aware that his article had hit the newsstands until it was called to his attenion afer his address. He expressed his regret of this coincidence later in the evening.

Second, we have heard from those individuals who have criticized Mr. Buckley's singling out Norman Mailer for his attack against what Buckley calls the "liberal mania." When one considers the fact that in a complementing article in the same national magazine, Mr. Mailer presents his case against Mr. Buckley and the American right wing, Mr. Buckley's biting remarks seem quite justified. Quite possibly, the editors of this magazine requested from the authors personal as well as ideological coups de main. Those who listened attentively to his entire address realize that Mr. Buckley did not attempt to typify "liberalism" in the godhead of Norman Mailer. Rather, his point centered on Mailer as an individual and his credo and those who would espouse Mailer's credo.

Third, we are presented with the Di-Phi's censure of Mr. Buckley for "the use of vulgarity and poor taste." With this comes the cries of others who scream "obscene" at Mr. Buckley's touche concerning the "virility" of Kenneth Tynan, an English pacifist. It should have been obvious to all present Monday evening, however, that Mr. Buckley's witty comment was a perfectly legitimate metaphor directed NOT at Mr. Tynan's potency as a biological organism, but at what Mr. Buckley considers Mr. Tynan's intellectual inadequacy. Mr. Buckley himself confirmed this interpretation later in the evening and pointed out that in fact Mr. Tynan already has two children. Only those preoccupied with looking for something to pounce upon could have possibly misconstrued this poignant and effective metaphor.

One would hope that the Di-Phi and those individuals who have voiced such adamant criticism of Mr. Buckley's address on these grounds will intelligently review their temerity. William F. Buckley presented too many excellent arguments which carry home the essential beliefs and commitments of the conservative movement today for campus liberals to concern themselves with such petty attacks as have been advanced. Are we to assume that the lack of intelligent and thoughtful criticism of Mr. Buckley's remarks in Memorial Hall signifies an unwillingness, or indeed, an incapability on the part of liberals to confront Mr. Buckley and his conservative philosophy on an intellectual plane?

—Franklin Adkinson, Jr.

Buckley Can At Least Spell

To the Editors,

Perhaps the letters of December 14th tell us more about their writers than about what their writers have to say.

Ken A. Bode mentions " . . . William F. Buckley's alliterate attack . . ." Since he obviously does not mean to modify a noun with a verb, he must mean either "alliterative" or "illiterate." However, he does not mention alliteration in his letter. Thus, he must mean "illiterate." In that case, we have a clear example of the pot calling the kettle black.

He further states, "I only submit myself to these diatributes infrequently . . ." He must visit the dictionary even less frequently. The word is "diatribes."

In the second letter, Dennis Bobrowske says, ". . . I must complement him . . . " Either he made a blunder in elementary spelling, or there was a typesetting error. There is no need to pursue the matter.

Here is my point: Granted that Mr. Buckley cannot enthrall his readers (or listeners) by making them guess what he means and by inventing new words, he can at least spell.

Variety Of New Quarterly Is Refreshing To Reviewer

A REVIEW
By Joe Williman

The current issue of the CAROLINA QUARTERLY is a refreshing one in many ways. First as a contrast to the politically-centered review many found in the last, long-delayed issue of REFLECTIONS, and second as a magazine designed to fill the gap of intellectual interest in print which is painfully evident this year at Carolina.

It is usually true of the QUARTERLY that each year's issues have a certain individual quality of their own. This year's first indication looks good in many ways, not so good in others. To begin with, the poetry in this issue is obviously the only real strong point, but it is well made. Of campus contributions, staff member Dudley Carroll has done an excellent two-part reflection entitled "The Tree of Winter Light," and begins to fulfill the promise he made in last year's Quarterly with his clear imagery, and above all, his complete independence of style. Other poems in the issue are also interesting, but the best is "Notes From a North African Cafe," by Lyman Andrews, Jr. This poem is a horror-struck polemic referring to the partisan violence in Algeria; told in a series of 24 related images, its gradual climax is as rewarding as anything in the magazine.

A longish piece by Edsel Ford and a fragment by John Tagliabue seem to have little excuse except as exercises, though the pieces by John Engels and David Cornel DeJong are more completely worked out and satisfying. "Your Mystery, Mallarme" by Sam Bradley is an exuberant piece of music and enthusiasm which is its own best spokesman.

On the whole, this first Carolina Quarterly of the year is a relief, and in many ways positively good.

Local 'Peace' Women Hit House Group

To the Editors,

The Chapel Hill-Durham Branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom wishes to thank you for the fine coverage you have given the hearings HUAC has held concerning the activities of Women's Strike ior Peace and to call to your attention the statement of our National Policy Committee.

A statement issued by the National Policy Committee of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom protesting the House Un-American Activities Committee hearings on Women's Strike for Peace, December 11-13 calls attention to several facts:

1) For the first time in history, mere preparation for war is killing people and damaging health and heredity.

2) Women are reacting strongly to these dangers and Women's Strike for Peace is a natural expression of this concern.

3) The most significant difference between totalitarianism and democracy is that, in a democracy, the citizen is free openly to disagree with his government's policies, either domestic or foreign.

4) No governmental agency of a democracy is justified in calling up citizens and questioning them regarding their political convictions or motives merely because they have participated in peaceful efforts to bring to public attention governmental policies or actions which they consider to be not in the best interests of their nation or in line with their nation's traditional ideals.

5) Any American is fulfilling his patriotic duty when he gives conscientious thought to public policy and appeals to his fellow citizens to support changes which he regards as urgent.

6) The WSP has, by orderly demonstrations, been effective in awakening citizens and government to the urgent necessity of stopping nuclear explosions and of achieving world disarmament under effective international control which is actually declared U. S. policy.

More Than HUAC Could Handle

By MARY McCRORY

WASHINGTON — "Why can't a woman be like a man?" sings Henry Higgins in "My Fair Lady."

That is precisely the question the House Committee on Un-American Activities is asking itself today, after three days of hearing on Communist infiltration into the Women Strike for Peace movement.

The committee was trying to find out if the ladies' group is subversive. All they found out is that their conduct in the caucus room certainly was.

The leader of the group just kept protesting prettily that she was not really the leader at all.

No man, of course, would ever deny being the leader of anything. Nor would he suggest for a split second that he didn't know exactly what was going on.

But Mrs. Dagmar Wilson of Washington, when asked if she exercised control over the New York chapter, merely giggled and said, "Nobody controls anybody in the Women Strike for Peace. We're all leaders."

Mrs. Wilson's appearance was the coup de grace for the men in the battle of the sexes.

Things had been sufficiently out of hand before. The ladies had been using the Congress as a baby-sitter. I will not ask the question, just what is an act of subversion, for this is a complex field. But I would ask whether in the case of the Communist Party you can separate Marxism-Leninism as a "political belief" from Marxism - Leninism in practice. Lenin said "Our teaching is not a dogma, but a guide to action . . ." (Lenin—"Letter on Tactics"; Selected Works; International Publishers, New York, 1943; vol. VI, p. 32) Khrushchev has said that "In all its ACTIVITY, the Communist Party is always GUIDED by . . . Marxism-Leninism . . . We must inculcate a live knowledge of Leninism to youth, the ability to link its study with PRACTICE." (My emphasis) (Speech to XIII Komsomol Congress; Moscow radio broadcast, April 18, 1958). Thus it has always been a central Communist idea that Marxism-Leninism was a guide to action and practice rather than a "political belief." But you may say, "Isn't it possible to hold Marxism as a political belief apart from any action?" And I must answer that this is certainly possible. But on the other hand, is it reasonable to assume that the Communist Party is a debating society?

It is almost axiomatic that a "political party" is set up primarily to gain power so that it might put its "political beliefs" into practice. This is true of the Communist Party no less than it is true of the Republican Party or Democratic Party. But here is the difference. The Republicans and Democrats are committed to our Constitutional system, no matter how much they may disagree about various subordinate issues. But the Communist Party is committed to the overthrow of that Constitutional system, not by the ballot or by Constitutional amendment, but by any means necessary up to and including violence.

If the members of the Communist Party were committed to this idea in the abstract, they would not be members of the Party. As soon as a Marxist-Leninist joins a party or other organization which is committed to the goal of achieving power through action guided by the principles of Marxism-Leninism he is by definition committed to the utilization of force and violence or any other means that are necessary to establish the dictatorship of the proletariat. Thus, the Internal Security Act is not outlawing a simple "political belief." For this particular "political belief" when advanced by a "party" is a guide to action, action that would destroy the Constitution and its protections of "rights" that are exploited by the Communist Party. In fact, it is, in my opinion, debatable whether the Internal Security Act actually outlaws this particular "political belief" anyway. It seeks only to rob the Communist Party of its most potent technique: conspiratorial methods. If the Communist is a legitimate political party it should not mind operating in the open where the American people might choose or not choose its program and goals.

You also say that "The words 'national security' cannot be distorted in defense of the abridgment of basic constitutional rights". I first ask you just what rights have been abridged. The Party was asked to register and report on their finances and membership after long hearings held in public under rules of procedure that guaranteed them full due process rights. They had full access to the Courts and their case was found wanting. If they ARE a group which is sustantially controlled or directed by a foreign government or organization which controls the world Communist movement, they are no different from a lobbyist who represents sugar interests in Latin America who want to influence the Agricultural Committees in Congress to buy more sugar from them. These lobbyists are engaged in legitimate activity and they do not mind registering and reporting on their finances.

If on the other hand they are a legitimate domestic political party, as they would have us believe, they are no different from the Democratic Party which must report on its expenses and whose membership can be ascertained by examining the public REGISTRATION books in each precinct. Why should the Communist Party hesitate to register if it really is as it says it is? Or, is it really trying to retain its weapon of conspiratorial methods which does nothing but deceive the American people about the "true" nature of Communist Party and its aims? If the Party is so innocent, let it operate out in the open so that the American people might exercise their democratic prerogatives of choosing or rejecting the Party and its aims.

In closing let me comment on the last paragraphs of your editorial. You say that the American people must not allow the government to have unlimited powers to control any opposition, that they (the people) must take the opportunity to "renounce the cowardly view that America must suppress the freedom of its opposition in order to remain free." In most instances I would concur in this statement without reservation. However, in this case, we have another type of opposition. Criticism of the party in power by the out-party is a central part of our democratic process in America. The reason it is VALUED is because no party governs without mistakes and this keeps everyone on their political toes. The reason it is TOLERATED is because the party in power knows that the opposition is a LOYAL opposition. The opposition will not, in most cases, engage in assassination or attempt to replace the other party with a coup d'etat. The opposition will also stand behind the party in power, in most cases, when the country is faced with a threat from without. This latter always entails not collaborating with the enemy just because the opposition and the enemy have the same "enemy": the party in power. But can this be said of the Communist Party?

The Communist Party, it has been shown in legislative findings and hearings before the Subversive Activities Control Board, is ideologically committed to assassination and the coup d'etat should the proper time come; and the Communist Party has most definitely "collaborated" with the enemy, if the Soviet Union and the Communist-bloc is an enemy. Not only was the Communist Party not able to show before the SACB a single instance in which they did not support the foreign policy aims of the Soviet Union in their publications and activities, but the record of the party's espionage activities on behalf of the U.S.S.R. should speak for itself. So it seems to me that outlawing the "Communist opposition", in so far as the Internal Security Act may do this, is no worse than fighting in Korea against the Communist agressors. They both have the same objective ultimately: the whole world under Communist slavery.

White House Aide To Talk In June

By Mary Jane Deadwyler

Chancellor William B. Aycock has announced that August Hecksher, White House Consultant on the Arts, has accepted the invitation to deliver the Commencement address in Kenan Stadium June 3, 1963.

His speech apparently will deal with the field of cultural arts in the University system.

At present special consultant to the Federal Advisory Council of the Arts, an honorary appointment conferred by President Kennedy last February 21, Hecksher acts as liaison between the White House and governmental and private agencies.

He is a former Director of the Twentieth Century Fund.

Hecksher attended both Yale and Harvard and is a former instructor of government at Yale. He is also a former chief editorial writer for the New York Herald-Tribune and has been Art Commissioner of New York City and Chairman of the International Council of Museums.

He serves on the Boards of several colleges including Mount Holyoke and is the author of the books, "These Are The Days"; "Patterns of Politics"; and "Diversity of Worlds." Hecksher is a member of a family well-known for its philanthropic work in New York.

Air Force Is Santa For Local Children

CHRISTMAS STARTED early for 50 underprivileged Negro children from the Chapel Hill-Carrboro area, when they attended an AFROTC party in the Nurses Dormitory Sunday afternoon.

The party, co-sponsored by Carolina's Cadet Corps and the Angel flight was attended by 31 AFROTC Cadets, 33 Angels and the local Detachment Officers.

The party featured punch, cookies, games and Christmas carols. Eleven model U-2 planes made by the freshman Cadets were given to the children. The highlight of the party was a visit by Santa Claus, who distributed gifts to each child. The presents were provided by members of the Cadet Corps and the Angels.

Anderson Is Nominated For Rhodes

Representatives from UNC and Davidson yesterday received nominations for Rhodes Scholarships from a Southern District Selection Committee in Atlanta.

Representing the University is Fred R. Anderson Jr., a senior history major from Rutherfordton. The Davidson representative is David A. Carrell of Louisville, Ky who is also a senior history major.

The committee of selection is composed of former Rhodes Scholars, under chairmanship of a leader in public life outside the Rhodes group. Members of the district committee includes: Irving E. Carlyle of Winston-Salem, chairman; Dr. D. G. Martin, president of Davidson College; and Edwin M. Yoder Jr. of the Greensboro Daily News.

Two years of study at Oxford University, England, in any field of scholar's choice is the reward for the regional winners who will be announced Monday.

About 7,000 Indians live on seven reservations in New York state.

In N. Y. News Strike Neither Side Gives

NEW YORK (UPI)—Federal mediators met Tuesday with publishers and striking printers for the first time in a week and said that neither side would bulge in the dispute that for the last 11 days has closed nine newspapers.

The talks were the first since negotiations broke off last Wednesday.

As negotiators for the two sides came out of the joint talks that were supervised by William E. Simkin, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, they said "nothing has been accomplished."

"There was very little to be optimistic about," one of the mediators commented.

Secretary of Labor Willard Wirtz, who came to New York Monday to try to avert the threatened east and gulf coast maritime strike, did not take a personal hand in Tuesday negotiations. He discussed the issues with both sides last week and was "available" to give any help he could.

Reflections Editor Looks For Salesmen

'Reflections" magazine editor Bob Brown said yesterday the magazine wished to have interested students distribute the publication in their home towns over the Christmas vacation.

"We have distributed to all of our previous outlets in college towns and large cities," Brown said, "And we are now interested in spreading to even other cities." Brown urged all interested students to contact him, 942-6272.

KKG Scholarship Blanks Are Here

Kappa Kappa Gamma Fraternity has announced that scholarship applications are available in the Dean of Women's Office. The three types of scholarships are:

—Rehabilitation scholarships to women who are training as professional workers in fields of rehabilitation including scholarships for advance clinical training at the Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation in New York under the direction of Dr. Howard Rusk and a $1,000 award. These scholarships are offered on both the graduate and undergradute levels.

—Five hundred dollar fellowships for women under 30 years of age for graduate work. Preference is given to first-year graduate students.

—Foreign student scholarships for foreign students to study in the United States and Canada.

All applications must be returned to Miss Nancy Adams in the Dean of Women's Office by Mar. 1.

UNC-YMCA Founded 1860; Its Role Changes With Need

By JACK GREGORY

The year 1860, which marked the beginning of the Civil War, also saw the founding of the YMCA at Carolina. In a short time "two-fifths of the officers and committeemen of the infant Association slept in soldiers' graves."

But the Civil War brought only a brief interruption and in 1876, one year after the re-opening of the University, the YMCA was re-organized.

The YMCA began as an organization for the "improvement of the spiritual condition of the students and the extension of religious advantages . . .," but it soon found itself involved in practical service to the University. "Its program has changed from decade to decade to meet changing needs."

It began by bringing prominent speakers and authorities to the campus to discuss important issues of the time. In 1876 it started the Carolina Handbook to provide information for new students. By 1900 the student body was too large for all student names to appear in the Handbook so a directory was begun.

It took an active part in campus sports and organized an Athletic Department with a class manager for each of the intramural sports.

Book Exchange Begun

The Book Exchange was begun in 1892 in the room of the YMCA president. Succeeding presidents continued the practice of making their rooms a swapping place for students. As time went on items needed by students such as pencil and paper were sold.

Besides providing a handbook and directory for new students, the Y also took on the responsibility of Freshman Orientation until the late 1930's when student government took over. In order to retain some of the values of the older program the Y started Freshman Camp in 1947.

In recognition of YMCA services the University began contributing aid to it. In the 1930's instead of giving it a contribution it simply put the Y Secretary and its office staff on the UNC payroll.

Later the staff was taken off the payroll and only the three professional officers of the Y continue to receive a salary from the University.

In 1910 the Y assumed all responsibility for student financial aid and kept the job until the 1930's when the University took over.

The Y also took an important part in the maintenance of churches and Sunday Schools around Chapel Hill in the first part of the century. With the coming of the automobile the church and Sunday School work disappeared along with some of the churches.

"Rankin's Chapel," two miles east of Chapel Hill, was built in 1905 and named for Fred B. Rankin, the first General Secretary of the YMCA. It was abandoned in the 20's and has since fallen apart.

Annual Drives

After World War I, the Y along with other student associations raised five million dollars from America to feed destitute European students. Since World War II there have been annual drives to raise funds for World University Service.

In more recent years the Y has entered community life by working with Dix Hill, the County Welfare Organization and several orphanages.

Before 1948 the YMCA and YWCA conducted an annual financial drive for "World University Service." Later it got information about Campus Chests in other Universities and since 1954 it has organized and conducted the Campus Chest each year at the request of the Student Body president.

In 1960 the Y organized a committee to work with foreign students. It began the year with the entertainment of 60 foreign students in Chapel Hill homes.

In 1961 the publication of the Student - Faculty Directory was turned over to the Business Office after 75 years under YMCA administration.

The Y has also acts as host for speakers and other guests of the University. Miss Ann Queen entertained 1,326 guests in her home last year.

WE WOULD LIKE TO WISH YOU A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND THANK YOU SINCERELY FOR YOUR CONTINUED PATRONAGE.

And A Happy New Year

Merry Christmas, Kentucky

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina killed a giant Monday night, and at no time has any group of guys been happier over a victory.

The brilliant play of all of Dean Smith's Tar Heels was overshadowed only by the magnificence of Larry Brown, who, in the end, had to be the standout in this thrilling 68-66 win over Kentucky.

Brown, who along with Yogi Poteet and Charlie Shaffer kept the Wildcats panting for the ball in the final minutes, was the game's high scorer with 19 points in addition to putting in six straight foul shots in the last half.

Although these free throws ultimately were the difference, it was a big play by Billy Cunningham which gave UNC the impetus it sorely needed.

With 1:50 remaining to go and Kentucky down by two at 62-60, the Wildcats brought the ball methodically down the court as 11,200 spectators screamed in anticipation.

The home team, as it had vainly done all night, looked for the fabulous All-American Cotton Nash. But the Wildcats didn't find him.

Enter Cunningham

Instead, Cunningham cut in front of Nash, grabbed the ball and dribbled more than half the length of the court to give UNC a lead it was never to relinquish.

Charlie Ishmael scored on a layup but Brown matched him with two free throws off a foul by Scotty Baesler. At the 40-second mark, big Red Rolfes hit two foul shots to again cut the UNC lead to two at 66-64.

But this was Carolina's ball game and the Tar Heels were never better.

With 34 seconds left, Nash frantically fouled Cunningham. The big redhead hit the first but missed the second, giving the Wildcats another life.

Little Randy Embry, who had just entered the game, capitalized on the opportunity by hitting a jumper with 21 seconds left. The score was 67-66 and UNC had the ball.

Here Brown went into another fantastic dribbling act, and the Wildcats couldn't touch him. So they fouled him.

Nash Leaves

It was the fifth personal for Nash. He left, and Brown canned his first free throw. But Larry missed the second and after a wild scramble under the boards, a jump ball was called.

The tap went to Kentucky with six seconds left, but rather than call timeout, the Wildcats passed the ball to Embry. The Kentucky sub, who beat Temple on a similar maneuver last week, missed this time as the buzzer sounded.

Walking to the exits were 11,175 disappointed people. The other 25 were not disappointed, and they were not walking. They were running to the UNC dressing room, and no Tar Heel has stopped smiling since.

Team Victory

This was a team victory in every sense of the words. If Brown was magnificent, consider the following:

* Charlie Shaffer shot perfectly—five for five from the field, five for five from the foul line.

* Ray Respess played the entire second half with four personal fouls and was a tremendous asset at his post position.

* Billy Cunningham scored 13 points and corralled 13 rebounds. Both totals surpassed those of Kentucky's cotton-topped star, Nash.

* Yogi Poteet, pressing Nash all over the floor, limited him to three field goals—and two of these were crip layups with Poteet away from the ball. Yogi also scored 17 points.

This had to be, unquestionably, Dean Smith's finest hour as a basketball coach. The ingenius "diamond and one" pressing zone defense with Poteet all over Nash did the job.—and did it to perfection.

Smith Elated

Smith was so elated over his great victory, that he, assistant coach Ken Rosemond and trainer John Lacey walked from Lexington's Memorial Coliseum all the way back to the Tar Heels' downtown motel. And they had stars in their eyes.

They also have stars on this team. Brown, Cunningham and Shaffer were in seventh heaven after the game. They're still there, too.

The long-distance telephone lines were kept busy all night as the three took turns making calls. Billy called his father in Brooklyn, Charlie called his prep school basketball coach at Woodberry Forest, and Larry called a special someone in Chapel Hill. Brown was on the phone longer than anyone cared to count.

UNC wanted this one and wanted it badly. After the Heels' sorry performance at Indiana, they wanted to prove they were good. They did.

"I've never been so happy in all my life," said Shaffer.

"This is the biggest victory I've ever been in," said Brown. "We're not going to lose from here on out."

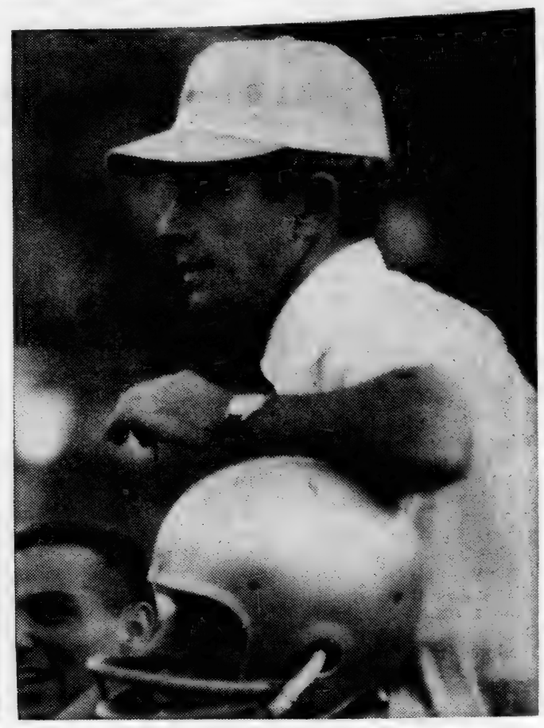
It was almost a quiet year at UNC in 1962. There wasn't even an appearance by the president as there had been the year before. The things that happened usually happened slowly and quietly and away from the rush of everyday events. The stories that roared out from the newspaper pages on one day were usually subdued to a purr by the next edition.

But this is not to say that there was not life in Chapel Hill. There was life, and there was color, and there were enough unusual events to keep the newsgatherer on the run and the photographer wide awake.



Pictures cannot tell the whole story of the big events in Chapel Hill in 1962. But they can succeed in capturing the spirit of the news and presenting it in their own way.

Better than words they describe the impish elation of students in a picket line, the grateful surprise of a coach who has just won his first ball game, or the light hearted glee that surrounds the appearance of a celebrity.

On this page are a few of the leading pictures taken in 1962. It is with them that we try to show some of the leading events at Carolina this year.

Buckley's Agent Refuses Readjustment Of Speaking Fee

Phelps Is Stopped En Route To Cuba

Larry Phelps, a UNC senior, and approximately 65 other U. S. college students were stopped in their efforts to travel to Cuba over the Christmas holidays.

The trip, which was to be sponsored by the Cuban government, was cancelled when Canadian officials refused to permit a Cuban plane to land at the Toronto airport.

Phelps said yesterday that "When the U. S. State Department learned that its threats of fines and imprisonment had failed to deter our group, it went into action and got the Canadian government to stop the trip."

Despite this set back, said Phelps, the group has not disbanded and is now working on plans for a trip to Cuba over the coming summer. In order to avoid another incident such as the one over Christmas, they will travel to Mexico by bus and take a regularly scheduled flight to Cuba from there.

Phelps was the only UNC student to make the trip to Canada. He said that the other two UNC students who had planned to make the trip, Dennis King and John Salter, had backed out at the last minute.

Kennedy Frees Junius Scales

President Kennedy Dec. 24 commuted the prison sentence of Junius Scales, former Communist Party leader in the Carolinas. Scales had served nearly 15 months of a six-year term.

Scales, 42, is a graduate of UNC, where he studied from 1936-38 and again in 1946. He headed the Communist Party in Chapel Hill in the late 1940s.

A member of a prominent Greensboro family and grandnephew of a North Carolina governor, Scales was convicted under the "membership clause" of the Smith Act in 1955. He won a new trial and was convicted for a second time in Greensboro in 1958.

In announcing Scales' release the Justice Departmuent said his six-year term was longer than those of some national leaders of the overthrow of the government.

Scales quit the party and repudiated communism between the time of his first and second trials.

Scales was accused and convicted in 1954 of being the underground Communist chief of Tennessee and the Carolinas in the 1950s. He joined the party in 1939.

The acknowledged Communist appealed his conviction to the Supreme Court, which in October of 1956, held hearings on the constitutionality of the Smith Act. The court failed to reach a decision and considered the case again in 1957.

The Justice Department issued a memorandum recommending that the conviction be reversed because Scales, in his defense, had not been given access to certain FBI reports on his case. Shortly after the Court overturned his conviction, in December, 1957, Scales declared he was no longer a member of the Communist Party.

On February 21, 1958 Scales was convicted again by the Middle District Court in Greensboro, and sentenced to six years in prison. The Supreme Court again heard arguments on the constitutionality of the Smith Act "membership clause" and in October, 1960 the conviction was upheld.

Scales surrendered to federal authorities in October, 1961, seven years after he was first arrested for "knowing membership" in the Communist Party.

Affidavits on Scales' behalf were submitted by Superior Court Judge L. Richardson Preyer; four members of the second jury which convicted him; Martin Luther King Jr., integrationist leader; Reinhold Niebhur, theologian; Paul Green, North Carolina playwright; and Jules Feiffer, cartoonist, among other leading figures.

Scales' petition for pardon was filed on June 11, 1962 by his attorney, McNeill Smith of Greensboro. Filed with the petition were letters of endorsement by 33 persons including nine of the twelve jurors who convicted him. He was to be eligible for parole on October 2, 1963.

In his petition Scales said he requested pardon or commutation of sentence because:

"(1) I can best serve my country outside the Federal penitentiary rather than in it . . . (2) I do not believe myself to be a danger to my country . . . (3) I personally discussed with as many members of the Communist Party as I knew and was able to contact personally . . . and I urged them to quit the party too (after 1957) . . . (4) Nevertheless, I hope and pray that my case has served some good purpose for my country and that purpose having been served, I, myself, might be allowed to live out the rest of my life in quiet devotion to my family . . ."

The Justice Department's announcement met varied reaction in North Carolina.

Sanford attorney Robert L. Gavin, state GOP chairman and former U.S. district attorney who prosecuted Scales, said he was

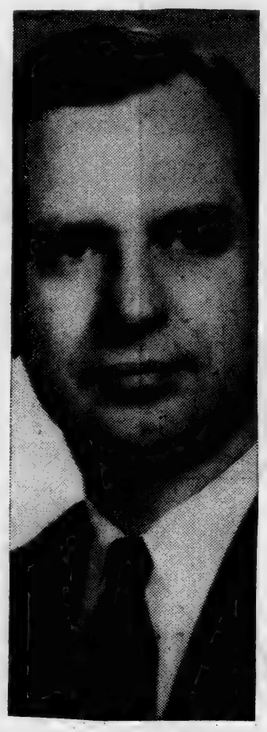
Friday Won't Comment On Classic

Consolidated University President, William Friday had a polite but firm "no comment" last week when asked about a possible move to restore the Dixie Classic.



Last week, the Wake County Commission voted unanimously to go on record as approving resumption of the tournament next December.

When asked Monday to comment on the commission's action, Friday said, "I have no comment to make. They have the right to resolve as they wish."

However, Friday pointed to an easing in the scheduling at the University of North Carolina and North Carolina State. Each is playing 19 regular season games, three more than last year when they were limited to 16, not counting Atlantic Coast Conference tournament games and possible competition in the NCAA tournament.

After being held for 12 holiday seasons, the Dixie Classic was terminated before the 1961 tournament as a part of basketball deemphasis at the University of North Carolina in the wake of the basketball fix scandal reports.

Friday said pressure to have the tournament restored has been "a seasonal thing."

PROFESSOR JAMES KING

History Prof James King Dies Of Fall

James Edward King, 46, professor of history at UNC who was on leave of absence, died December 23 in Washington, D. C., from a fractured skull received in a fall in his apartment.

At the time of death, Professor King was working with the Guggenheim Foundation on a book on welfare.

A member of the faculty since 1948, Dr. King had received the 1958 Tanner Award for outstanding teaching of undergraduates.

The West Virginia native studied at the University of Richmond, served in the Navy in World War II with the rank of lieutenant commander, and received his Phd. from Johns Hopkins in 1948.

PROFESSOR WOODHOUSE DIES

Edward James Woodhouse, 79, political science teacher at UNC for many years until his retirement in 1954 at the age of 70, died in Jacksonville, Ala., Dec. 22.

In 1924 Mr. Woodhouse defeated Calvin Coolidge in a race for mayor of Northampton, Mass., and served one term.

He taught at Yale and at Smith College as well as at UNC, and served as head of Coastal Carolina Junior College at Conway, S. C., until his retirement to Jacksonville.

Mr. Woodhouse was a veteran of World War I, retiring as a first lieutenant. During his life as attorney and teacher he authored numerous books and articles.

CAROLINA FORUM

The Carolina Forum will meet at 4 p.m. Monday in Roland Parker I.

Letter Calls Forum Head 'Iscariot'

Letters from William F. Buckley Jr. and his agent yesterday blasted the Carolina Forum chairman as "Judas Iscariot" and rejected the Forum's request for a reduction in Buckley's speaking fee.

Buckley, editor of the conservative National Review, applied the "Judas" label to Chairman Henry Mayer, who had asked for a "readjustment" in the $450 fee.

M. Catharine Babcock, the editor's agent, said he had contracted with the student government Forum for "participation in a program" at UNC and had done so.

No Decision

Mayer said he had not yet decided if the Forum would pay Buckley's full fee for his Dec. 10 speech. When student government announced Dec. 14 it would withhold payment of the fee pending "readjustment," Mayer said it was "unconscionable" for Buckley to charge $450 for "the reading of a previously published piece and not for personal and original contributions."

He indicated he will call a meeting of the Forum committee to discuss the letters.

Buckley spoke on "The Nature of the Right Wing" instead of the predetermined topic of "Freedom and the Welfare State." The "Right Wing" speech was published in the current issue of Playboy magazine.

The Forum chairman said Buckley's comments, made in a letter to the Tar Heel (see page two—edit column), were "not worthy of him."

Judas Beer

Buckley defended his $450 price. "I'm told there were a thousand people there. Well, that comes to about fifty cents apiece — less, come to think of it, than a copyy of Playboy. Much less than a flick. And come to think of it, less even than the amount I paid for Judas's beer later that night at the beerhall."

The conservative editor said he had told Mayer his speech came from a Playboy article. Mayer said, "He did not tell me he was going to read the Playboy article . . . I would have denied him permission . . ."

Most of Buckley's letter answered student charges of vulgarity in his references to the virility of several liberal writers. He referred to the Di-Phi Society, which censored him for "vulgarity" and "poor taste" as the "Old Lace Society."

Mayer commented on Buckley's letter: "Mr. Buckley's personal interest and delight in his critics is certainly commendable; his defense, however, is not worthy of him.

No 'Pumping'

"I am not at all concerned about the language Buckley used in his reading. I am quite disturbed that he says I 'pumped' him for information. That information was proudly volunteered, and it does seem odd that Buckley seems to have forgotten the difference between a pump and an overflowing cup," he said.

Mrs. Babcock's 'etter to Mayer said Buckley changed his speech topic in order to "deliver a talk suited to the interests of a more general audience."

Mayer said Mrs. Babcock "misunderstood our argument. There is a difference between giving a speech which has already been given and reading a currently available published article.

"Although she denied our application," he said, "we feel she misunderstood the basis for our request. Further clarification will be necessary on both our parts."

U.N. Troops Halt Attack On Tshombe

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (UPI) — United Nations troops consolidated their positions at the Katanga mining center of Jadotville Friday while building up supplies and equipment for a drive on President Moise Tshombe's Kolwezi stronghold.

Vague reports reaching Leopoldville said some U.N. troops had "advanced considerably" beyond Jadotville on the winding 140-mile road to Kolwezi but these were believed only patrol units. UPI correspondent Peter Lynch reported from Jadotville the main body halted there to rest and regroup.

The Jadotville dispatch said it

Judge Returns Carter Case To Trustee Board

LIBRARY FIRE—Firemen work to extinguish the remains of a two-seat sofa that caught fire around 5:40 Thursday evening in the library. The sofa, located in a graduate lounge in the rear of the Carolina Collection, was thrown from a window by firemen. Besides the sofa the only damage was to paint on the wall. The fifth level of the stacks was also filled with smoke. The cause of the blaze is undetermined.

Exoneration For Student Is Ordered

By HARRY W. LLOYD

Superior Court Judge Heman Clark last week instructed the UNC trustees to have another look at the Ann Carter case.

Clark, while saying that the trustees had full rights to review the decision of the honor council, ruled that there was insufficient evidence presented to rebut the assumption of evidence in the case.

"A charge of cheating is a lasting mark against a person's character," said the judge in his final decision. "Miss Carter should be exonerated of the charge against her."

Judge Clark said that UNC Chancellor Aycock had suggested that the case be remanded for further consideration. He called the suggestion "proper," and referred the case to the board of trustees "for such action as is proper."

Trustees Upheld Council

On May 28, 1962, a special committee of the trustees upheld the suspension of Miss Carter by the Women's Honor Council for her alleged cheating on a freshman Latin quiz.

Miss Carter's counsel, in carrying the case to the state courts, did not challenge the trustees' right to review the case, but rather challenged the right of a student judiciary to rule on the guilt or innocence of another student.

Judge Clark said that the delegation of responsibility by the trustees to a student government group was entirely constitutional and proper. The board can honor a student government, he said, but the board also has the responsibility of correcting errors made by the student judiciary.

"In this case, the board met its constitutional responsibility," he said. "Miss Carter was advised of her right to appeal. The case was reviewed by the Chancellor as provided for in the student constitution."

Additional Evidence

The judge said that Miss Carter's testimony as to her innocence of the cheating charge was corroborated by some additional evidence, which had not been considered by the trustees.

Miss Carter was charged with handing in to her professor the answers to an original quiz for a makeup quiz she took. Another paper, which had the answers to the makeup quiz, was also handed in, but the council did not think it to be Miss Carter's paper.

The handwriting on the paper, however, "very closely resembled Miss Carter's," the judge said. He said that neither the chancellor nor the trustees had known about the handwriting evidence when they considered the case.

Students' Rights

"Every student should have two oasic rights," the judge continued. "They are 1) the presumption of innocence, and 2) the right to know the evidence. In this case, the council did not show Miss Carter the handwriting which corroborated her testimony.

"It is the opinion of this court that all the evidence fails to rebut the assumption of her innocence.

"To deny her readmission on the grounds of her suspension for cheating would be arbitrary and capricious."

No Progress Seen In N.Y. Paper Strike

NEW YORK (UPI) — The city's month-old newspaper strike appeared no closer to settlement Friday than when it began last Dec. 8. The dispute was having an unprecedented effect on businessmen and job-hunters.

Walter Thayer, president of the New York Herald Tribune, one of nine newspapers closed by the walkout, said Friday "rumors" that publishers want a long strike are "sheer nonsense, propaganda, or a combination of both."

Thayer, appearing on a television program "Today"—NBC, said purveyors of such rumors "deserve a story-telling badge of some sort."

No new negotiations have been scheduled between representatives of the New York Publishers Association and Local 6 of the International Typographical Union (ITU).

No Meeting Planned

Local union President Bertram Powers said the union is ready to meet with management at any time. Federal mediators from Washington remained in New York, but said no meetings are planned for the present.

The printers' walkout has idled 20,000 newspaper employes and cut off one-tenth of the nation's newspaper circulation. The nine papers involved in the dispute have a total daily circulation of 5,700,000.

John Fanning, president of the Association of Personnel Agencies of New York, said the strike is having a severe effect on employment here.

"To say that business is off 50 per cent is no exaggeration," Fanning declared. The association represents 175 employment agencies in the city.

"Our major concern is for the month of January, a peak employment month," Fanning said. "We normally would see a minimum of 200,000 persons, but now don't expect to see 110,000."

The association placed on city newsstands an eight-page "help-wanted" tabloid which will be published weekly until the end of the strike.

The last reported offer made by publishers was for a package of $9.20 per man per week over a two-year period. Printers have demanded a $38 weekly package and neither side appears to have budged from its stand.

The strike has closed the Herald Tribune, Times, Daily News, World Telegram, Journal American, Mirror, Post, the Long Island Press and the Long Island Star-Journal.

Intern Program Positions Are Open

The College of Arts and Sciences announced yesterday competition for a position in the U.S. State Department's Summer Internship Program. The program is open to outstanding juniors and seniors who are interested in the conduct of foreign affairs.

Students selected will serve in the Department of State from June 15 to August 31 or September 15 at a pay rate of roughly $350 per month. They will be assigned to substantive areas of the Department to assist in the performance of the duties of country desk officers, research analysts, economic officers, and of the Department's secretariat and operations center. They will also participate in a program of lectures and seminars.

Eligibility requirements include: U.S. citizenship, the intention to return to an accredited institution for a full year of study, an overall B average, foreign language study, ability to write effectively, and serious interest in pursuing a career (public or private) in the field of foreign affairs.

Interested students may get further information from Frank M. Duffey in the College of Arts and Sciences. Those who wish to apply must submit by January 10 a 500-word essay on why they desire summer employment in the Department of State.

Duke Dramatists Slate Production

The Wesley Players of Duke University will present Eugene Ionesco's play "The Bald Soprano" on Sunday evening, January 6 at 7 at the Presbyterian Student Center in Chapel Hill. The play is produced by Thornton Penfield and directed by James Gillikin.

The cast includes Duke and UNC students Jinx Wellborn, Sando Moffett, Lola Kramer, Rhoda Blanton, and Elliott Zede.

The first play by the Rumanian-born playwright, "The Bald Soprano" is a comedy set in dialogue form in which two English couples, the Martins and the Smiths, solemnly inform each other of the obvious. Ionesco has called the play "a parody of a play . . . an attack upon the universal petty-bourgeoisie, the accepted ideas and slogans, the ubiquitous conformist. The Smiths and the Martins can no longer talk because they can no longer think; they can no longer be moved, can no longer feel passion. They can no longer no longer think because they can be; they can 'become' anybody, anything, for, having lost their identity, they assume the identity of others . . . they are interchangeable."

The Wesley Players' production received wide acclaim during a three-night pre-Christmas run in Durham. There will be no admission charge for this, the only Chapel Hill presentation by this group.

Chaperons Wanted For Bus Tours

The American Field Service has announced openings for college students who wish to chaperone bus loads of AFS foreign students on a trip across the United States this summer. The students will be from many different countries and will have spent their senior year in high school living with American families.

The bus trips are taken annually at the completion of the academic year of the AFS students in order to let them meet students of other nationalities and to enable them to see parts of the country other than their host communities.

The duration of the trip will be four weeksc during June and July, three weeks on the road and the rest of the time in Washington, D. C.

The buses travel in pairs on separate itineraries and then meet in Washington for a final convocation before the students leave the country. On the trips the buses stop at various communities where the students are entertained by the host families. The chaperones will accompany the students on all activities.

The only requirement for chaperones is that they must be seniors who are 21 years of age by the time of the bus trip. The trip will last from about June 20 to July 15. Interviews will be held by a committee of the UNC AFS returnee chapter. Anyone who wishes to apply should come to a supper meeting on the second floor of Lenoir Hall this Thursday at 6. Further information will be given at that time.

TRACK FILMS

Color films of the 1962 NCAA Track and Field Championships will be shown Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. in Room 304 in Woollen Gym. All students are invited to attend. Immediately after the movie there will be a brief meeting of members of the track squad to fill out eligibility cards.

Buckley Unrepentant; Old Lace, Judas Panned

The case of William F. Buckley Jr. and the Free Enterprise System VS. the Student Body of the University of North Carolina has become a national story, worthy of coverage in Time magazine and the National Observer.

The student government asked for a reduction in Mr. Buckley's $450 speaking fee— and this request was denied by the conservative editor's agent.

In an apparent attempt to clarify his position Mr. Buckley has written a letter to the Tar Heel, received here yesterday by air mail special delivery.

In the spirit of fair play and regard for the views of a person who has become a regular target for adverse DTH editorial comment, we reprint Mr. Buckley's letter in full. (JC)

* * *

To My Admirers at Chapel Hill:

When Judas Iscariot drove me to the airport the next day, pumping me for details about the economic genealogy of my talk on Norman Mailer and the Meaning of the American Right Wing, he asked me what had been my impression of the students of Chapel Hill, and I replied that I found them charming, hospitable, and curious, which, like everything I said the night before about Norman Mailer and the meaning of the American right wing, is absolutely true. I didn't know then just HOW curious, and if I had, I'd have given old Judas a copy of my financial statement, and a copy of "National Review's," though if he redeems my pleasant invitation to call on me in New York, which I tendered in response to his effusive thanks for my performance the evening before, he can pick them up then and no doubt the Tar Heel will want to serialize them. . . . But such is your interest in the professional aspects of lecturing, that I wish to contribute to you my store of information and have authorized my agent to give you any particulars you care to have.

Mr. Dennis Bobrowske wrote to the Tar Heel that obviously Mr. Buckley "came unprepared for his planned speech." Really, Bobrowske, I prepared THAT speech, in its basic outline, six or seven years ago, and it was right there in my brief case, along with four or five others, any one of which I could have swung into on five seconds' notice. Here is the situation: a professional speaker is more often than not asked to speak on a generic subject of general interest. Accordingly, he follows the practice of working out a formulation, and updating it from time to time, until events have anachronized it, at which point he tosses it away: or, as in my case, donates it to the Library of Congress. I suggested to Judas that I switch off Freedom and the Welfare State for reasons suited not to my own convenience — I couldn't care less which speech I gave: I am familiar with all of them, and all of them would have shocked you equally (you ought to hear the one on academic freedom!). I reasoned that the Cuban crisis was, and is, very heavy in the air, and my anxiety to please (it'll kill me one of these days) prompted me to take the initiative in suggesting this particular substitution.

The magic figure $450. How is it arrived at? The idea, to quote a well-known North Carolinian football coach on how to treat alumni, is to keep them sullen, but not mutinous. I'd like to talk less, and earn more. But I don't regularly aspire to the $800 that Martin Luther King charges, or to Norman Cousins' $750 — I am not envious, understand. I am a conservative; I know my place. Your paper says I "soaked" you — surely an inappropriate word, considering that you approached me, rather than vice versa? I'm told there were a thousand people there. Well, that comes to about fifty cents apiece — less, come to think of it, than a copy of Playboy. Much less than a flick. And come to think of it, less even than the amount I paid for Judas's beers later that night at the beerhall.

Oh yes, Playboy. I was surprised to learn that the January Playboy had actually been printed and distributed on the 14th of December, the day I spoke. And anyway, a) the very first copy I saw was after I had lectured, when a student brought one to me to autograph. b) Judas told me later there was no reason to assume more than a half dozen members of the audience had read it. c) There was not a single reference to Playboy in the issue of the Tar Heel covering my talk. One third of the write-up, by the way, was devoted to remarks I had made that were not in the original Playboy at all. d) There had been no effort whatever to dissimulate. I told the audience my talk had crystallized at a debate with Mailer, and told my hosts it had been bought by "Playboy." And anyway, would you refuse to invite the January Playmate to Chapel Hill because she had already revealed her charms? Strike that. I forgot about your Dialectical-Philanthropic Society. No doubt it doesn't permit Playmates at Chapel Hill.

Which brings me to the other bone of contention, the language that shocked the Old Lace Society. I understand I have been formally censured. I understand further that those generous souls among you who rose to give me a standing ovation have ALSO been censured. My goodness, that a censorious community you non-conformist liberals maintain! Surely the Old Lace Society will not stop there, but go on to censure Playboy for running my article, and all those other colleges that have listened appreciatively to it? To do otherwise would be highly undialectic; and philanthropically, a real bust. What a difficult time the Old Lace people must be having. I take it that absolutely EVERYBODY at Chapel Hill reads Playboy — so Judas now implies. But I am also supposed to infer that everybody at Chapel Hill disapproves strongly of the use of any sexual imagery. . . . Maybe the Old Ladies don't know what those words mean? That occurred to me. (There is a very curious latitude in the use of words at Chapel Hill, as any reader, or rather cryptographer, who tries to understand some of the language used in the Tar Heel knows.) The reference to Tynan's virility was swooped upon by the Old Ladies as insinuating the impotence of Mr. Tynan. Now I ask you, how can you question the impotence of a man who has children? I quoted Tynan as saying he wanted "ANOTHER child." What I then referred back to, rather neatly, I thought, was Tynan's statement that he would rather "live on my knees than die on my knees," which is cowardice (you know, the kind of thing men in the army get shot for); and cowardice is considered — by conservatives, at any rate — an unmanly, i.e., unvirile, trait. I am reminded of Raymond Moley's comment in 1956 when asked how come Kefauver had scored a surprise victory over Stevenson in the Minnesota primary? "Did you ever tell a joke in Minneapolis?" Mr. Tynan, by the way, enjoys the freedom of the metaphor. In Harper's a couple of years ago, he bracketed me, and Goldwater, with the Grand Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan. That WAS a metaphor, wasn't it? Perhaps the D-P's should investigate.

For the rest? My friends, you must read Norman Mailer and try to understand the role that sex plays in his social philosophy. Read his essay "The White Negro." Read James Baldwin. (Time Magazine this week got around to noticing things about him I told you about three weeks ago.) They are taking a serious social-philosophical position — which one must speak about seriously, on the assumption that one is addressing grown-ups, and need not strew over one's language with fig leaves. Kant defined marriage (quite seriously) as the "mutual monopolization of the genitalia." Now how're you going to discuss Kant without, well, without arguing with Kant? I guess you argue outside Chapel Hill, where they can take it. Like Brooks Preparatory School (where I recently gave the same talk, and so far as I know offended no one).

What your correspondent Mr. Wm. Hicks wanted from me was a "deductively and empirically true argument." That is not only more than I can deliver, it is more than I can understand. (What on EARTH is a "deductively and empirically true argument?" Is it the kind that says you don't owe me $450?) And my failure to please Mr. Hicks causes him to serve notice that he would rather be red, or dead, than vote for me for president; which means, by deduction, that he'd rather live under Communism than under a government headed by, say Goldwater, or Taft. (I'm not running for pres —they don't pay enough), with whose views I concur. Ah, the hero Hicks, the flower of the campus, the morning glory of liberalism, the paramount Dialectical-Philanthropist: look about you, my friends; you don't need visiting conservatives to furrow your peachy brows. Worry begins at home.

Yours,

—Wm. F. Buckley, Jr.

The Second Battle Of Britain

Dixie Classic

No Pressure On University

RALEIGH TIMES

The members of the Wake County Board of Commissioners have every right, both as individuals and as a governoring board, to resolve in favor of resuming the Dixie Classic here. So, it was perfectly proper for the Commissioners to solemnly put themselves on record yesterday as urging that the basketball extravaganza be resumed.

The resolution, presumably, eventually will find itself before trustees of the University of North Carolina. And,at that time, it would be entirely appropriate for the trustees to file the resolution in the pigeonhole of things to be considered at some future date.

Officials of the Consolidated University of North Carolina had good reason to kill the Classic. Until those officials are confident beyond any reasonable doubt that those reasons have been entirely eliminated, those officials shouldn't be pressured into reinstating the basketball tournament. The Classic was killed because it was vital that basketball be brought into a proper relationship to the remainder of the total activities of Carolina and of State. Basketball's troubles had culminated in the fix scandals, and it was necessary for University officials to take the steps to make sure that basketball would be in its proper size in the future.

County Commissioner James Judd, who made the reinstatement motion, noted that every basket of apples is expected to have some that are not quite as good as the merchant would like, might even have a few rotten ones. But, Commissioner Judd added,the merchant doesn't throw away the whole basket—"he picks the bad ones to throw away."

The University officials didn't throw away the whole basket when they took steps to keep basketball within its proper sphere. They just took steps to make sure that all the contents of the basket would be good in the future.

The time may come when it would be best to reinstate the Dixie Basketball Classic. If that time does come, then let it be reinstated.

But if there is to be reinstatement, let it be done purely and simply on grounds that it is an entertainment spectacle for sports-minded people, a money-making business event for the businessmen of Raleigh, a money-making event for the State Athletic Department—and not that it is connected in any remote way with the education of the young people of our country.

Name Changing A Minor Issue

GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS

As the discussion grows, it is becoming more evident that the fight over the change of State College's name to the University of North Carolina at Raleigh goes far deeper than mere words and the emotions which have been unleashed by them.

Scratch beneath the surface sparring and you'll find the abiding issue of university consolidation.

So far all official agencies have lined up behind the proposal to give the three units of the Consolidated University equal university status. Organic change are involved; but the outward fight at least has centered around name changes, quite vociferously at N. C. State and to a much less degree at Woman's College.

All official agencies, including the Carlyle Commission, the State Board of Higher Educations and the consolidated university administration, have stressed the reorganization which will raise all university units to truly university status and make sure that the reorganization is effected within the single university framework. The board of higher education spoke out in unusually firm language at its Friday session.

Meanwhile the furor over names, its intensity perhaps more clearly understood here because of the same battle in microcosm on the high school level, has continued to rage. There is reason to believe that a compromise will be worked out, without sacrifice of university unity and oneness, announced well in advance of the legislative session at which action will have to be taken. The compromise, in fact, could come from the special committee, headed by Tom Pearsall, to which the whole issue has been referred for study and recommendation.

There are at least two serious developments which should give all friends of higher education in North Carolina serious pause. The emotion-packed name issue is already fraught with political overtone, and, for the first time, a more or less covert campaign against consolidation is coming into the open.

These are the most disturbing aspects of a situation which call for intelligent, dedicated leadership and a marshaling of public opinion to prevent the chaos which we think would undoubtedly result if the state's university system fell a prey to politics or deconsolidation.

Names may mean much. But they do not mean enough to jeopardize or undermine the educational structure which North Carolina has pridefully and sacrificially built up over the years and which stands on the threshold of its greatest service and brightest future if it comes through its recent testy crisis.

We are confident that the people of North Carolina, given all the facts, will rally behind higher education's cause as they have before and that minor issues, which can be settled, will not be allowed to supersede major decisions as they affect the future of the state.

Buckley: Another Yankee Who 'Took' Us Southerners...

By HARRY GOLDEN

(The following article was sent to the DTH by Mr. Golden with permission to reprint.—Eds.)

The students at Chapel Hill, the home of the University of North Carolina, engaged Mr. William Buckley, the editor of the vastly conservative National Review to render unto them a lecture on "Freedom and the Welfare State." In fact, the students even ponied up $450 which helps prove how serious is the modern youth.

Came the evening of the lecture. But did the students hear about Freedom and the Welfare State. No, they did not. According to the students, Mr. Buckley read an article he had recently published in Playboy Magazine. Last month, Mr. Buckley had undertaken to explain to the peeping-tom readership the meaning of the radical right. In the course of this explanation he also made some scurrilous remarks about novelist Norman Mailer, who appeared in the same publication talking about the radical left. Sounds like a barrel of laughs, doesn't it?

So the officers of the Carolina Forum, under whose auspices Mr. Buckley had travelled South, refused to pay him. They said, "His speech was warmed-over and vulgar, and worst of all, it is not original." They asked Mr. Buckley's agent for an adjustment. "His reading cannot be as expensive as the lecture for which we contracted," said the chief of the student forum, remembering not to end his sentence with a preposition.

The Yankees are always trying to take us Southerners and Mr. Buckley, for all his conservatism and love of initiative is no exception. It still takes us Tar Heels two days to traverse our state because when the Yale graduates and sundry other Yankees built the railroads here, they built them to run up and down and not hither and yon. This was to keep our raw materials coming up and their manufactured products coming down. Stuff at 15c a pound came back in finished goods at $40. a pound.

What was true of cotton, alas, is true of ideas. The students at Chapel Hill didn't get the original article but instead of the shoddy. Buckley spent his time questioning the virility of a critic and when he discussed Mr. Mailer, made anatomical references that his listeners thought objectionable. No one needs a $450 lecturer for this sad business.

All of which goes to prove that Playboy has a whale of a circulation and it must come as a surprise to some of the editors of that estimable magazine that not all of their readers are looking at the pictures of the nude women. As Mr. Buckley is learning, youth has many surprises.

Letters To The Editors

On Buckley Talk, Slanting The News

Were Speaker's Views Censored?

To the Editors,

Has our illustrious Dialectic-Philanthropic Literary Society censured Mr. Buckley's "vulgarity and poor taste" or Mr. Buckley's conservatism?

—Charles Moss

If Barry Had Been Target?

To the Editors,

I am curious, gentlemen, as to how much indignation campus liberals would have shown had Mr. Buckley's ready-wit been aimed at Senator Goldwater instead of Norman Mailer.

—Jim Johnson

Inman Allen: Mountebank?

To the Editors,

Chez Hickory, collectively and institutionally does hereby charge H. Inman Allen, President of the Student Body, with coldblooded and dastardly murder.

In that:

On or about the night of Friday, the 14th of December, 1962, the above designated villain, with premeditated and vile malice aforthought, did cool our goldfish by placing them outside in the cruel and frigid elements where he left them until thoroughly dead.

We hereby call upon the Attorney General and all other appropriate officials to take the necessary punitive action with deliberate speed. And we demand that you, the Student Body, stand in moral judgment of this monstrous deed.

—Chez Hickory

Gentlemanly Reply—Helms

To the Editors,

I never once said you "slant news." I did not say that you print "Communist advertisements." I did say that you "gave too much space to the Labor man and to Seeger and too little to the conservative Lewis."

I simply state some obvious facts which I suggest are incontrovertible.

Your regular readers know best whether you slant news. They also are the best judges as to whether you give too much or too little space to any story. I seldom see The Daily Tar Heel, an dit suits me for you to run it as you see fit. I did a little work on a college paper myself many years ago. At the time I thought I knew all there was to know about journalism. Now, as you probably will be the first to agree, I am amazed at what I don't know. All of us have to learn by doing—and by error.

P. S. I note that you say that The Daily Tar Heel does not "censor ads." I call your attention to the fact that on January 16, 1962, we requested advertising space in your publication in connection with the program, "Hollywood's Answer to Communism." The ad was neither acknowledged nor run by your publication. We wrote to your publication about failure to run the ad on March 9, 1962, and on March 28, 1962. To this date we have not had the courtesy of a response. Thus it may be a matter of opinion as to wether your publication does indeed "censor ads."

Eds. Note:

The Tar Heel does not now, nor has it ever to the knowledge of any present staff member, knowingly refused an advertisement—from WRAL or anyone else. The ad mentioned by Mr. Helms was never received by the DTH.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Hussein Hits U.S. Policy In Mid-East

AMMAN, Jordan (UPI) — King Hussein of Jordan accused the United States Friday of openly supporting "subversive elements" in the Middle East.

Hussein warned that U.S. politics in this tinder-box area, particularly Washington's "premature recognition of the New Yemeni republican regime, could lead to "the shattering of the Middle East's stability."

In an interview with United Press International, the monarch said his nation had been the target of all the Middle East's "troublemakers" because of its loyalty to the cause of freedom.

"It is difficult for Jordan to face the Communists and the fact that the United States is backing subversive elements all at the same time," he said.

Hussein, speaking a his hilltop Amman Palace, described Washington's Yemen policy as, in effect, "linking Russia, UAR President Gamal Abdel Nasser and the United States in competition toward the same end designed to overthrow Yemen's legitimate government."

"surprised, shocked and disappointed."

Charlotte author-editor Harry Golden, on the other hand, called the commutation "a great Christmas season correction." Golden, who last year circulated a petition in Scales' behalf, said Scales has "repudiated communism as thoroughly as anybody could repudiate it."

Scales' wife, Gladys, who lives with their daughter in New York, said "I would be glad to tell it to the whole world—I am very grateful to President Kennedy and the attorney general."

Another Copter Hit By Viet Cong Force

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (UPI) — Communist guerrila groundfire damaged another American helicopter Friday — the 12th this week—but U. S. military sources said American jungle warfare tactics will not be changed.

The battle plan for the American-advised government troops in the long and costly civil war here calls for use of the 'copters to haul troops in close to marauding Viet Cong units before they can fade away.

Although they stood and fought Wednesday, inflicting a humiliating defeat on a numerically superior government force at Ap Bac hamlet, the Communists are not believed by American militarymen here to have abandoned their basic hit-and-run pattern.

The U. S. Army H21 helicopter hit Friday was flying supplies to government forces supposedly pursuing the rebels in the Ap Bac area, where five U. S. helicopters were shot down Wednesday, and six others damaged. Three Americans were killed and six wounded in that battle.

Thousands Attend Services For Kerr

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI)—President Kennedy led the mighty and humble in tribute Friday at the funeral of Sen. Robert S. Kerr whose life had touched them all in his rise from log cabin to rank as the most powerful man in the U.S. Senate.

Under skies so dismal and rainy they almost prevented the presidential jetliner from landing for the services, a crowd estimated by police at more than 10,000 filled the huge First Baptist Church and the rainswept street outside to bid farewell to the 66-year-old millionaire statesman.

The bronze coffin was borne from the church to the Rose Hill Mausoleum and interred temporarily. At a later date, the senator will be buried at a plot near Ada, Okla., not far from where he was born in the wilderness before Oklahoma became a state.

Kerr died New Year's Day in Washington of a heart attack and his death, scarcely a week before the opening of the new term of the Senate, created political upheaval. But this was forgotten as men who were his friends, and some who were his political enemies thronged to hear Dr. Herschel Hobbs, pastor of the church, eulogize Kerr simply with the words "He was a man."

A group of congressmen and 29 senators, the biggest senatorial funeral delegation since the death of former Vice President Alben Barkley, joined the President, the family and mourners who included employes of Kerr in his vast oil and ranch intrests.

Dirt-poor at birth and a millionaire in oil, minerals and cattle before he was 40, Kerr served in the Senate since 1948 and at his death was second-ranking member of the Senate Finance Committee, chairman of the Space Committee and custodian of such cloakroom power that he was called "the uncrowned king" of the Senate.

New Telstar Programs Hinted

NEW YORK (UPI)—Scientists sent televsion images across the Atlantic via the newly-reactivated satellite Telstar Friday in a scientific feat that meant Americans soon may be seeing Folies Bergere cuties live on their home TV sets again.

Another satellite, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Relay, which like Telstar was "brought to life" Thursday, also beamed television test patterns across the Atlantic Friday morning for the first time since its launching Dec. 13.

The scientists actually "tricked" Telstar, which had been silenced for six weeks by space radiation, into resuming transatlantic transmission at 9:55 a.m. EST for a 10-minute period.

A spokesman for the American Telephone and Telegraph Co., developer of Telstar, said the satellite will resume the five-day transmission schedule followed last summer, with three days devoted to tests and two days to public demonstrations.

was doubtful they would advance in force until the Lufira River is spanned strongly enough to permit heavy trucks and armor to join them. U. S. Air Force transport planes flew in five bridging tanks Friday from the U. S. airbase at Chateroux in France for spanning the Lufira. Retreating Katangese mercenary troops blew up the road and rail bridge.

There was speculation any U. N. drive on Kolwezi with the possibility of heavy fighting would await the flight here of Undersecretary Ralph Bunche from U. N. headquarters in New York to check reports local U. N. commanders had exceeded their authority.

Because of its auto races, Daytona Beach, Fla., has more visitors in summer than in winter.

Tar Heels Play At Notre Dame Today

Moyer Faces Archer In TV Bout Tonight

NEW YORK (UPI) — Denny Moyer of Portland, Ore., and Joey Archer of New York, two smart and speedy young Irish boxers who seek a shot at the middleweight title, are slated for a nationally televised 10-rounder at Madison Square Garden, Saturday night.

And surprisingly, the betting odds in New York are being quoted as even money — "6-5 and pick 'em."

Baby-faced, strawberry-blondish Moyer already wears the world junior middleweight 155-pound crown but that will not be at stake because both Denny and the rangy, dark-haired Archer will scale more than 155. Joey is ranked seventh among middleweight 160-pound contenders.

Wrestlers Take On Pfeiffer In Pair

By JOEL BULKLEY

With memories of the Christmas holidays still ringing in their ears, Carolina's varsity wrestlers host both Pfeiffer and East Carolina in an afternoon doublebill today beginning at 3 p.m. in Woollen Gym.

Coach Sam Barnes will weigh in two different lineups prior to the matches, but will probably use some of his wrestlers in both contests as UNC seeks its first victory of the season after three successive setbacks.

Heading Barnes' lineup card will be heavyweight entry Jerry Cabe. Cabe, a junior from Brevard, N. C., is the only undefeated team member. Other candidates who will probably compete in both matches include Louis Arthur in the 123-pound class; Jack Jones in the 157-pound class and Gene Record in the 177-pound division.

Ken Furr (130), Russell Simmons (137), Willis Johnson (147), and Elliott Dworin (167) will be the other starters in the opening meet against Pfeiffer. Last year the Tar Heels clobbered Pfeiffer 28-10.

Joel Fishman (130), Robert Cook (137), Dave Wiles (147) and Walt Phillips (167) may see action in the second match as East Carolina engages in its first meet of the season.

Bill Hagerty, freshman wrestler in the 157-pound class, has a twin brother who will be representing the same class for the East Carolina varsity.

Four Maryland counties (plus the state of Nevada) legalize slot machines.

Game To Be Shown Here On T.V.

By HARRY W. LLOYD

North Carolina and Notre Dame, two teams who know what it is to come from far behind to win a basketball game, will meet today on the hardwood in South Bend, Indiana.

For Carolina fans, the game will be shown on regional television live this afternoon.

The Tar Heels are still shivering after their close call here Wednesday night, in which they had to come from 16 points back to defeat Yale, 86-77. Notre Dame had to take a similar comeback route to stop Indiana, 72-69.

Indiana is the same team that dealt the Tar Heels their only loss in six games this season.

Last year, Carolina crushed a slow-reacting Irish team by 99-80 in Charlotte. But the Tar Heels don't expect the going to be so easy on the Irish court. Lettermen returning to the ND lineup include guards John Mathews and John Andreoli and forward Ed Malloy. Six-nine sophomore Walt Sahm is the bright new face in the top five.

Coach Dean Smith, whose team rode home against Yale on the basis of a 29-point performance by Billy Cunningham, will be going with his same top five. That includes Cunningham, guards Yogi Poteet and Larry Brown, and forwards Charlie Shaffer and Ray Respess. Poteet and Brown hit 17 and 19 points respectively in the Yale game.

Scandal Uncovered In NFL; Chicago Bears Mentioned

HOLLYWOOD BEACH, Fla. — (UPI) — The National Football League, which has been without scandal for the past 16 years, admitted Friday that some members of the Chicago Bears and players of "three or four other" league teams have "associated with undesirable types."

But NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle insisted that an investigation by the league's staff of 16 former FBI agents has turned up nothing of "a criminal nature."

"We haven't found any fire," said Rozelle, "but anytime we see any smoke we look fast."

Rozelle disclosed the investigation after George Halas, owner of the Bears, revealed in Chicago that the commissioner was looking into reports of a possible scandal involving a number of NFL teams during the last two years.

"I told Halas that our investigations in the commisioner's office had turned up the fact that some of the Bear personnel had been associated with undesirable types," Rozelle said.

"There were a couple of things involving the Bears and I told Halas about them," the youthful commissioner went on. "I do not feel that this is any more urgent than any of the cases we have had in the past."

Insisting that the league is "constantly checking rumors of this type," Rozelle declined to reveal the names of other teams involved in the rumors.

He explained, "we have proved nothing, except questionable association by some players, and when these are found, we notify the club and the players involved and in each instance the situation has been corrected."

It was well known in pro football that when the late Bert Bell, Rozelle's predecessor, was NFL commissioner Bell frequently received rumors directly from bookmakers concerning unusual changes in betting odds on games. Bell reportedly pursued investigations of all these reports in order to discover any possible dishonesty.

Rozelle Friday called attention to the staff of former FBI agents employed by the league and said they are constantly investigating "these types of rumors."

There were reports of unusual odds activity early in the 1962 NFL season when the Green Bay Packers defeated the Detroit Lions by less than the betting "point spread." In both cases reports said betting money from the same source had been wagered correctly. Bookmakers in New York and Boston refused to accept bets on subsequent Green Bay games. There was, however, no reference to specific rumors in Rozelle's comments Friday.

The NFL has not been touched by public scandal since 1946, when players Frank Filchock and Merle Hapes of the New York Giants were revealed to have received offers of $2,500 each, plus a $1,000 bet on the game, to control the spread of points in the championship game against the Chicago Bears.

Hapes was not allowed to play in the game but Filchock was and threw two touchdown passes even though the Giants lost 24-14. Both players later were suspended by the league. Filchock was reinstated four years later.

South Is Senior Bowl Pick

MOBILE, Ala. (UPI) — Fifty collegians end their amateur football careers Saturday when they clash in the 14th annual Senior Bowl game which should be an aerial duel between the South and the North.

The Rebs ranked as 7-point favorites Friday when the two teams conducted their final workouts this afternoon. The contest marks the first play-for-pay by the 25 Yanks and 25 Rebs.

The winners take home $800 and the losers $600.

About 40,000 persons were expected to attend the game in Land Stadium. Game time is 2 p.m. EST, an hour earlier than in previous years.

Both squads have announced they will use pro-type offenses and defenses and this should mean plenty of passing. Both squads have the quarterbacking to do the job.

North coach Tom Landry of the Dallas Cowboys wil start Jerry Gross of Detroit as signal caller. During the season he completed 105 of 212 passes for 1,317 yards and six touchdowns. He also rushed for 296 yards for a 1,613 total.

Cunningham Is Too Cunning For Irish: 76-68

THE CONGO (UPI) — Katanga Interior Minister Godefroid Munongo has reformed the battered Katangese gendarmerie and is leading a march of 1,000 men on Elisabethville from the Northern Rhodesian border, the United Nations said Saturday.

The development threatened to explode new fighting in the mineral rich province. It came as U.N. Undersecretary Ralph Bunche arrived in Leopoldville and gave the green light for further military operations against Katanga President Moise Tshombe.

Bunche pinpointed three more main military objectives including Tshombe's stronghold at Kolwezi and Sakania. Sakania is located on the border of Northern Rhodesia, 100 miles southeast of Elisabethville, from which the Katangese were reported moving with at least six armored vehicles.

Civilian Train

The United Nations sent a civilian train with Red Cross markings down the railway line toward the Sakania area late Saturday to test the reaction of Munongo's gendarmes.

It appeared obvious Bunche was hoping to withhold major U.N. strikes until Secretary-General Thant's two-week ultimatum to Tshombe to talk peace or face renewed warfare expires Jan. 14. The new Katangese offensive could change all that, however.

Tshombe has shown no signs of talking peace at the moment. U.N. reconnaissance aircraft flying over the Sakania area Saturday reported that Munongo has reformed stragglers from the Katangese gendarmerie who were driven out of Elisabethville in a U.N. Christmas offensive and was leading them into battle.

Northern Rhodesia charged that three Swedish U.N. jet fighters flew deep into Rhodesian territory in the same area. It ordered its own jet air force to patrol the border and halt further incursions.

The U.N. spotter craft said the Katangese were moving from Sakania and Ushoshi, about 12 miles away, where the Katangese still hold immigration and customs posts. The road is the only route the civilian population can move food, medical supplies and gasoline into Katanga from the south.

Controls Road

The U.N. command said Munongo's forces controlled part of the road and a rail line which runs parallel for 16 miles between Elisabethville and the Northern Rhodesian border.

The central government, meanwhile, flew in officials to Elisabethville to assume control over the administration in a further step to incorporate secessionist Katanga into the Congo government.

In another development aimed at reunification, Marcel Van Roey, director of the National Bank of Katanga, flew into Leopoldville to discuss the Katangese monetary situation and possibly work toward sharing Katanga mining revenues with the central government.

The three targets outlined by Bunche were Kolwezi, Sakania and Dilolo.

Kolwezi is 150 air miles northwest of Elisabethville and 85 miles above captured Jadotville. Sakania is on the Rhodesian border 100 miles southeast of Elisabethville and Dilolo is on the Angola border 350 air miles west of Elisabethville.

Billy Pours In 26 In Overtime Win

Notre Dame held Billy Cunningham to 26 points yesterday. At first it looked as if he were going to get 46. But for the tenacious Irish, their defense on the amazing Carolina sophomore was not enough.

Billy the Kid, the original left-handed gun, carved another notch in his six-shooter as the Tar Heels captured a 76-68 overtime win from the Irish in their South Bend stronghold.

It was Cunningham himself, all six feet, four and a half inches, that lofted a jump shot from some 25 feet away with the last second ticking off the clock in the regulation game. The ball swished through, tieing the game at 63-63.

The shot climaxed a classic comeback for the Tar Heels, who a minute and a half earlier had been four points behind and didn't have the ball.

The overtime period itself was duck soup compared with the second half of play. Cunningham, the fellow with the magic, dropped in two free throws to start the scoring in the extra stanza, and the Tar Heels were never headed again. Carolina regained possession on a palming violation, and Yogi Poteet dropped in a layup.

Substitute center for the Irish Ron Reed made one of two foul shots, but Poteet came back with a three-point play to give the Tar Heels a 70-64 lead, and practically assure them of their sixth win in seven games.

Reed managed a layup for ND, but Carolina turned the final test into a rout by scoring six points in a row as Brown and then Poteet was perfect from the free throw line, and Charlie Shaffer capped off a fast break with an easy layup.

Even the final shot was anticlimactic. Irish captain John Andreoli took a jumper from the corner, but the leaping Cunningham went high over the basket to bat the ball away. The points counted for Notre Dame, of course, but by that time, the 3,500 fans in the Notre Dame Field House had nothing to cheer about. The Fighting Irish of coach Johnny Jordan had just lost their first home game of the season. It was also only their second loss of the year.

Close All The Way

The game was close all the way, and Carolina's 10-point lead near the end was the biggest margin ever separating the closely matched teams.

Carolina scored first on Larry Brown's jumper, but sophomore Jay Miller, the top Irish scorer of the game with 21, came back with a free toss and a field goal to put the white-clad homestanders ahead.

Cunningham then had his first and only miss from the free throw line (he made 10 straight afterwards) but then hit two field goals to put UNC ahead by 6-5. After ND took the lead on baskets by guard Larry Sheffield, Cunningham hit twice again to put the Heels in front, 13-11. Cunningham's tap, making the score 19-16, gave Carolina a lead that they held until the second half was four minutes old.

The Tar Heels led by 31-27 after the first 20 minutes, and had several chances of being in an even better position. But the taller Irish, after suffering by Cunningham's early successes, had begun to clog the middle in attempts to keep the ball away from him. Six-nine, 35-pound center Walt Sahm, no whiz on offense, was nevertheless able to do a very good job in defending against Cunningham. For the last nine minutes of the first half and the first 13 minutes of the second half, the Kid could make only one point.

When he broke out of the shell imposed by the Irish, the Tar Heels were behind, 50-47.

After Charlie Shaffer had tied the score at 35-35 with his first basket of the game, the Irish got three goals while UNC had only one. Notre Dame reached its biggest advantage at 46-40 before Cooke drilled in a long jumper, Brown scored a free toss, and Bryan McSweeney got his first points of the season on two free throws, cutting the lead to 46-45.

Carolina last led in regulation play when Cunningham scored on a field goal and two free shots for a 51-50 advantage with 4:51 left. But the Irish then scored five straight points to regain the lead.

With 3:17 left, Cunningham dropped in two more charity shots to make the score 55-53 ND. The Irish got a big break and a chance to up their lead by four when fouls were called on two UNC players simultaneously. Sahm made his, but Andreoli missed his.

Sheffield went to the line with 1:49 left and ND ahead by 59-55. He missed, and the Tar Heels got the rebound. Cunningham, killing two birds with one stone, fouled out Sahm and converted both chances from the line.

Shaffer then tied up Reed and got the ball for Carolina. Cooke tied the game at 59-59 with a long, long jump shot. Miller scored on a layup, but Brown canned two free shots with 19 seconds left to tie the game again.

Notre Dame tried a shot from the key. It missed, but Reed made the tapin. Carolina, behind by 63-

Barnett Ordered To Show Cause In Contempt Charge

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi was ordered Saturday by the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals to show cause why he should not be held in criminal contempt for his actions in the University of Mississippi integration crisis.

Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson Jr. was directed to appear with Barnett at 9:30 a.m. Feb. 8.

The Court of Appeals directed the Justice Department on Nov. 15, 1962, to institute contempt proceedings against Barnett and Johnson. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy filed his application for a show cause order Dec. 1.

In his application, Kennedy charged Barnett and Johnson failed to comply with a Court of Appeals order of July 28, 1962, directing that Negro James H. Meredith be admitted as a student to the University of Mississippi.

On Sept. 25, 1962, the court issued a temporary restraining order prohibiting Barnett and university officials from blocking Meredith's admission.

The court said the government application had shown probable cause for Barnett and Johnson to be held in contempt.

Kennedy alleged that Barnett, while aware of the appeals court's restraining order, "wilfully prevented . . . Meredith from entering the offices of the board of trustees of the University of Mississippi . . . and thereby deliberately prevented . . . Meredith from enrolling as a student . . . pursuant to this court's order of July 28, 1962." Barnett blocked Meredith's attempt to enter the offices on Sept. 25.

"While having actual notice of the temporary restraining order of Sept. 25, 1962," the appeals court order continued, "Paul B. Johnson Jr., acting under the authorization and direction of Ross R. Barnett . . . wilfully prevented . . . Meredith from entering the campus . . . and thereby prevented . . . him from enrolling as a student . . . and did, instead, direct and encourage certain members of the Mississippi Highway Patrol, sheriffs and deputy sheriffs and other officials . . . to obstruct and prevent the entry of . . . Meredith upon the campus of the university that day."

Kennedy charged that Barnett, on Sept. 30, failed "to take all possible measures for the maintenance of peace and order upon the campus and . . . wilfully failed to exercise his responsibility, authority and influence as governor of Mississippi to maintain law and order."

Barnett was in Washington and could not be reached for comment.

Gripe Committee To Meet Again Wednesday At 9

The University Party Grievance Committee will hold its second open meeting Wednesday at 9 p.m. in Graham Dorm for all members of the Lower and Upper Quads.

The meeting, to be held in the basement study room, is open to all interested students who may wish to bring any problem or question concerning all aspects of student living, Student Government, or student social life to the attention of the committee.

Co-Chairman Marshall Bellovin stated that, while the committee's main function is to bring to the attention of Student Government and the administration many of the problems that they overlook, the members of the committee are themselves in positions to act quickly on the problems.

The other UP Grievance Committee members are Rex Savery, co-chairman; Dee Johnson; and Bob Clawson. The quest members for this meeting will be Reid Suggs, Dorm Manager of the North Campus; Phil Baddour, Legislator from the Lower Quad; and John Mitchener, Chairman of the Dorm Improvements Committee.

UP Chairman, Mike Chanin, in announcing the meeting said, "The last meeting of the Grievance Committee in Ehringhaus was well attended and very productive.

SCRIPT ACCEPTED

William T. Green of the CBS Television Network announced recently that Buck Roberts, a graduate student in Drama at UNC has had a television script accepted by the network's Program Department.

The script, entitled "A Lost Day is Hard to Find" was submitted on December 27, and will be produced as a thirty-minute drama or as a part of an existing sixty-minute series.

According to Green, the program will appear "at an early date this spring."

Stevens Gets New Scholarship

Elliott Walker Stevens Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Walker Stevens of Warsaw, has been named as the first recipient of the recently established Pfizer Laboratories Scholarship at the School of Medicine.

This is the first time that UNC has participated in the Pfizer Scholarship program. The Pfizer Laboratories Division of Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc. awarded UNC one thousand dollars for the initial scholarship,, to be given in the interest of furthering medical education through financial assistance to a particularly deserving student.

The Scholarship is to apply toward the academic and subsistence expenses of one medical student in the UNC School of Medicine during the year. Selection is based on scholastic record, financial need, or both.

Mr. Stevens, this year's winner, was a Morehead Scholar when an undergraduate at UNC and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, the highest scholastic honorary.

India-China Riff May Go To Hague

NEW DELHI (UPI)—India disclosed Saturday it has formally proposed to Communist China that they refer their border dispute to the International Court of Justice at The Hague for arbitration.

At the same time Ipdia accused the Chinese Communists of using tactics "reminiscent of the old days of gunboat diplomacy." It implied for the first time that Peking's terms for opening negotiations amounted to a victor's surrender conditions.

The International Court proposal, originally suggested in parliament by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru, as well as the sharp charges were contained in a note to Peking released today by the Indian Foreign Ministry.

Its disclosure came as Red Chinese Premier Chou En-lai bade farewell in Peking to two visiting would-be peacemakers in the Sino-Indian dispute with a statement indicating the Chinese have not budged from their hard line on the controversy.

Chou's statement was made at a farewell banquet for Ceylonese Prime Minister Mrs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike and Indonesian Foreign Minister Subandrio, who left Saturday en route to India. It made clear Communist China was holding fast to the position it took when it declared a unilateral ceasefire Nov. 19.

Chou insisted that Red China must enter any negotiations with India while still occupying all the territory it claims in the dispute. India, on the other hand, is demanding a pullback to positions the two sides held before the Chinese made their big military gains in the Himalayas this autumn.

The Communist New China news agency, in a dispatch monitored in Tokyo, quoted Chou as charging that "the Indian government has to this day shown no sincerity for peaceful negotiations."

India's note, on the other hand, asked Red China to demonstrate its sincerity for a peaceful settlement by agreeing to refer the border matter to The Hague court.

Nehru Letter

The note, dated January 4, revealed the arbitration proposal also was conveyed by Nehru in a New Year's Day letter to the Chinese Communist premier.

"The Prime Minister of India has referred in his letter of Jan. 1, 1963, to suggestions he made in the Indian parliament regarding reference of differences between India and China for decision to the International Court," the Indian note said.

"It is hoped the government of China will respond positively to the proposal made by the Prime Minister of India and indicate that they are sincere in their profession for peaceful solution of differences between the two countries.

UNC Sculptors Recognized For Excellent Work

Several sculptors in the UNC Art Department have recently won recognition for their work this year from various organizations in the state and in New York.

Sculpture by Jeffery Bayre, an undergraduate from New Hampshire, was accepted by the Madison Gallery in New York City for its Quarterly Show.

Other sculptors in the department who received recognition in 1962 were: Dwayne Lowder who had a one-man show in New York City; Robert Howard, associate professor of art, who was awarded a first prize for his metal sculpture in the North Carolina Artists' Exhibition at the North Carolina Museum of Art in Raleigh; and students, Tim Murray, Craige Moore and Dwayne Lowder who have sculpture in the same show which will close January 5.

Mr. Bayre's sculpture, which is untitled, is a plaster torso 22 inches high that has been treated to resemble weathered bronze by the application of pigments.

This technique permits a color and form unity "vital and basic to a meaningful relationship to spacial environment; each element of space, volume, and color merges to form a harmoniously integrated oneness," according to Bayre.

Although the sculpture is untitled the artist describes the work as a "study in positive and negative forms" or perhaps more categorically as "softened cubism." The show will continue at the Madison Gallery through January.

NSA Execs Propose Extensive Reforms

Extensive reforms were proposed for the National Student Association (NSA) by its National Executive Committee (NEC) which met at the University of Minnesota last week.

Harry DeLung, UNC NSA Coordinator, represented the 29-school Carolinas-Virginia region.

The controversial referral of resolutions from the annual National Student Congress to the NEC came under attack by liberal and conservative committee members. According to DeLung, referral will "probably be abolished at next summer's Congress."

The NEC, which acts as a board of directors for the Association, expressed an almost unanimous desire for structural and policy reform. Many proposals were made which would increase NSA's role in educataion and de-emphasize its political involvement.

The NEC's committee on programming recommended that "the Association's first concern always be for on-campus problems."

A reorganization of the regional structure was discussed which would condense NSA's national division into five or six areas. "UNC would be in the southern area," said DeLung. "Chapel Hill would probably be the home base for one of five or six national vice presidents who would travel to member schools in this area."

"This increased, direct contact between the national officers and each school would dramatically affect the value of NSA membership," he added.

The 16th National Student Congress was tentatively set at the University of Indiana next August. UNC will send four elected delegates, the president and vice president of the student body, the editor of the DTH, and the NSA Coordinator.

The NEC's Congress - planning committee recommended sharp limitations on the amount of legislation which the Congress may consider. "This was done in an effort to produce more carefully thought-out resolutions," said DeLung.

DELEGATES ELECTED

A constitutional amendment was discussed which would require that all delegates to the Congress be elected by their student body. Presently, this is left to the discretion of each school.

Dennis Shaul, president of NSA, told the NEC he hoped the 16th Congress would provide more experiences for the delegates "which can be of direct value when they return to their campuses." Shaul is the past-president of the student body at the University of Notre Dame, and was a Rhodes Scholar.

Upstairs Gallery To Sponsor Art Classes Here

Winter art classes are now being registered at Paintings Upstairs Art Gallery, 113 West Franklin St.

The schedule of classes is as follows:

Dwayne Lowder's class for beginning adults will be taught from 8 p.m. until 10 p.m. on Monday. The first class will begin January 28, 1963.

Jane Haslem's class in oil painting will be taught from 8 p.m. until 10 p.m. on Tuesday. The first class will begin January 29, 1963.

Robert Shannon's class in all media will be taught from 8 p.m. until 10 p.m. on Thursday. The first class will begin January 31, 1963. The students will be charged $20 for 10 lessons. Artists materials are to be furnished by the students.

Two classes for teenagers and one class for children will also be included in the Winter schedule, however, these classes have already been filled.

For advance registration, call 968-0881 or register at Paintings Upstairs Gallery. (Hours: Mon., Tues., Thurs., Fri., 10-5—Wed., Sat., 10-12).

20 Companies To Recruit Here

Wednesday, January 9

U. S. Naval Research Laboratory; FMC Corporation—Chemical Division.

Thursday, January 10

National Carbon Company; The Procter & Gamble Company; U. S. Army Ordnance (Aberdeen Proving Ground); Teraco Inc.; Colgate-Palmolive Company.

Friday, January 11

Henderson, Lindsay & Michaels, Inc.; Goodyear Aircraft; Columbia College.

Athletic Scheduling: Disconcerting–Disgusting

The scheduling of the Duke football game over the Thanksgiving holidays was disconcerting, to say the least.

The scheduling of the Duke basketball game (our home game) during the break between semesters is disgusting.

To whomever it may concern, we repeat:

There are some things about university life which are now, and will continue to be, beyond the realm of any student control. There are events, decisions, and rulings which, although they greatly effect students, are none-the-less properly placed in the hands of administrative authorities.

We accept many decisions and abide by many rulings in the conception of which we have had no active part, because they are made by our elders who reside in the positions of responsibility. This is as it should be.

But because certain rulings and events are beyond any active student control, we should not glibly assume that they are beyond student concern. We acquiesce in most instances because we realize that our elders are in positions that enable them to better understand the full scope of problems and to administer justly the decisions that must be made.

But we do not relinquish the privilege, indeed the right, to raise an occasional voice in protest, when we feel that the administration has totally disregarded our concerns.

Such "disregard" appears to have been in evidence with the scheduling of this year's basketball encounters, particularly in the scheduling of the Duke game during the semester break.

Certainly, we should all realize that there are many factors which drastically affect the composition of one team's athletic schedule. One alteration in the schedule of any particular team is liable to rearrange the schedules of numerous other teams. And when each university is trying (we would hope) to secure the best possible arrangements for its team—and its fans—a great deal of work must go into the final arrangements.

The situation may never be changed. And, certainly, we recognize that if it ever is to be changed, it will not come about because of noise on the part of students. It surely is out of our hands, but damned if it is out of our area of concern.

And therefore, we raise a voice in protest. We are extremely unhappy about the fact that the Tar Heels play Duke University over the holidays. We know that we can do nothing about it. We know that the students at Duke are unhappy. And we know that our protest doesn't make any difference. But we did not want the event to pass without voicing our resentment.

In light of all the complexities of scheduling, it would seem that there should be some things that are basic to every year's schedule—some things upon which you build, and around which you arrange the remainder of the schedule; and it would certainly seem that one of those basic things should be the scheduling of any encounter with Duke University on a week-end when school is in session. Bill & The Forum: Playmates

"Mirror, mirror on the wall, Who's the Fairest of them all?"

Both ends of the Bill Buckley-Carolina Forum controversy must be asking themselves this, as the debate continues in its witty and spirited way.

The Forum doesn't want to pay $450 for Buckley's fold-out rendition of a Playboy article—and Mr. Buckley says, 'Tough luck, pay up.'

But all facts aside (which is the condition under which most of the controversy has taken place), it appears everyone concerned has suffered a little during this strange series of events.

The Forum has suffered—they will have to pay Mr. Buckley's fees and they know it. (The editor's agent says he must have the money to pay off National Review's debt—and Nightstand books are probably in need of William F.'s aid also.)

Mr. Buckley has suffered—for once, the novel and unusual (and universally humorous) has been turned against him. He was caught without his stinging verbs and vitriolically-dripping adjectives by the Forum's refusal to pay — and several national magazines took the opportunity to make him look a little uncomfortable.

In the end, however, no one suffered enough to cause concern. The campus — and the nation — was treated to a wonderfully entertaining battle as Buckley attempted the difficult task of increasing his unpopularity on campus; and as student government succeeded in making itself look simultaneously silly and serious. (JC)

More on Buckley, in the form of a letter:

To the Editors,

Enclosed you will find one dollar. We would like to donate this money for Mr. William F. Buckley's controversial fee. We do this in hopes that, along wth the gate receipts (1000x$.50 equals $500.00) enough money can be scraped up to pay the $450.00. Perhaps, if the money is "raised," we will not be embarrassed by the University's policies when we go home for the semester break.

We are forwarding this money to the DTH because obviously the editors are well acquainted with the complaining parties.

—Reid Jones and Bob Engler

This dollar will be put in a fund from which Carolina Forum Chairman Henry Mayer will be paid thirty pieces of silver. (JC)

Drunks And Divines

For the reader tired of wars and revolutions, economic programs and cultural revivals . . . for the reader who enjoys seeing Important and Weighty Matters go lopsided and come out just a little bit upside down . . . for the reader who must keep his sanity by laughing at the ultra-serious wing of the population . . . for this reader the following two (true) news stories are offered.

Happy sanity.

Ecuador — The Ecuadorian Senate in a unanimous vote has demanded the impeachment of the President of Ecuador.

The Senate demand followed the State visit of the President of Chile. The Chilean arrived at the airport in the Ecuador capital and was greeted by the Ecuadorian president whom, Senators charge, was in a state of complete drunkenness.

Pennsylvania, USA—A revivalist minister named Emmanuel, has charged that the famed Father Divine is being held prisoner in a Pennsylvania mental institution.

The person claiming to be Father Divine, Emmanuel said, is a Communist spy who forced the real Divine into the asylum. The Communist has established fellow comrades as heads of many of Father Divine's Havens for Peace and Rest, he said.

Emmanuel is charging two of Divine's workers with assaulting him in front of a Divine Haven.

Emmanuel claims to be a descendant of Jesus Christ. (JC)

Pick Your Politics Before You Enlist

With all the political groups springing up and dieing on campus faster than you can say "Richard Nixon," it is becoming more important for everyone to be able to say what political ground he stands on and what its boundaries are.

You can no longer be just a joiner, like the sophomore who picketed the Russian speaker, his Peace button shining so coexistingly on his left lapel.

To be a card-carrying member of the Young Democrats and a sympathizer with the Young Americans for Freedom is impossible. According to the people who think up names for these clans, either one Young isn't the other Young or if you're for Freedom you aren't Democrat-ic.

If you're a Progressive Laborite, you're left of Communism, but if you're only in the New Left, you're just left of Kennedy. On the spectrum between such extremes must lie an infinite number of ideologies.

The wide-awake student of today needs a political no-doz to help him decide exactly what he will believe before he starts believing it. What would really help would be some well defined rules of left vs. right, liberalism vs. conservatism, welfare state vs. free enterprise, and Pogo vs. Little Orphan Annie.

* * *

For the first chapter in this primer, the following outline is suggested:

If you think we should throw away all our weapons, you are a liberal. If you think we shouldn't build any more weapons because they cost too much, you are a conservative.

If you gripe when you pay a tax on food because you think it should be only on luxuries, you are a liberal. If you gripe when you pay a tax on food because you like to eat too much, you are a conservative.

If you like federal aid because it means more spending, you are a liberal. If you like federal aid because you don't pay tax anyway, you're a conservative.

If you cut your classes because you can study better on the outside, you're a liberal. If you cut your classes because you already know the material, you're a conservative.

If you eat spaghetti because it tastes better than hot dogs, you're a liberal. If you eat spaghetti because it's cheaper than sirloin, you're a conservative.

If you don't like your prof because he's narrow minded, you're a liberal. If you don't like your prof because you can't understand him, you're a conservative.

If you flunk out of school because you couldn't concentrate on the useless general college courses, you are a liberal. If you flunk out of school because you spent all your time studying Math 6, you're a conservative.

* * *

The idea is for everyone to know all the facts before he decides who he will stand next to in the political daisy chain. For once you take your place in line and hold hands, your fist is closed and so is your mind. The biggest mistake you can make is to try to change positions after you have taken your place.

If you don't decide now, you may catch yourself buying U. S. Steel stock,falling in an overcrowded swimming pool with your tux on, playing Pete Seeger albums and pasting up "We Want Barry" stickers all at the same time.

Richard McKenna

One Man's Tireless Quest For Education

The text of an address, entitled "New Eyes for Old: The Quest for Education," delivered before the University Faculty Club on Dec. 11. Mr. McKenna is author of the forthcoming novel, "The Sand Pebbles."

By RICHARD McKENNA

I feel privileged and a bit awed to be standing here in these circumstances. I told Dr. Kunstmann that I would talk about the quest for education. When I began to marshal my thoughts on the subject they were neither as many nor as sure of themselves as I had hoped they might be. A bit of wisdom I have learned recently came to my aid. I did not get anywhere in writing until I learned only to write of matters which I knew about from direct personal experience. So I will limit my remarks to my own quest for education and the great part played in it by the University of North Carolina. That has the added virtue of reducing the complexity of the subject by a factor of about three billion, or whatever the population of the Earth was at the last estimate.

For most of my life the word education has, to me, meant book learning. I understand well enough now the notion of character-formation contained in the word. But I must understand also that not one of the billions of people whom I am conveniently leaving out of this discussion has reached or will reach maturity without gaining that kind of education, no matter how deficient he may be in book learning. His whole society is his teacher and no one can play hooky from that school. Of course there is much talk about good and bad character. I am not competent to tread among those razor blades. A few years ago I was puzzled by the public dismay over the TV quiz scandals. I had not known until then that much book learning was supposed to be coupled with greater moral worth.

* * *

In my own formative years I never encountered the equivalent of Mark Hopkins; I know him best even now as a tall, glass-headed structure in San Francisco within which almost anything might happen. Yet the other end of my log was by no means untenanted. Lumberjacks and miners, old cowboys and Indian fighters, Basque sheepherders and Mexican section hands all sat there. As a boy I was drawn to old men and to men of exotic origins. Later there were old sailors and beachcombers of a dozen nationalities and many Japanese and Chinese in Far Eastern seaports. I have forgotten most of their names. No single one of them stays in my memory as a tremendously impressive individual. Yet I am convinced that in their aggregate they would outweigh Mark Hopkins. I think men's characters are more formed by their casual daily encounters with other ordinary people, as ball bearings are brought to perfect sphericity by randomly tumbling against each other in a barrel, than by any skilled institutional machine work.

No man has to go questing after a moral education. Some kind of moral education, and commonly the most useful kind, is going to be unavoidably thrust upon him. In a course in Anthropology here I was pleased and amused to learn the distinction anthropologists make between the overt and the covert value-systems of a culture. Their methodology is much older than the science which uses it. First they ask a representative sample of the people what they would do in various hypothetical situations involving choice, and they make notes of the answers. Then, saying nothing, they observe what the people actually do when they are confronted with similar real situations, and they make a different set of notes. I think in our own culture that kind of anthropological fieldwork is perforce begun by every child at about the age of five. When he reaches a point, if ever, where he can be once more unconscious of the discrepancy, his moral education may be said to be complete. Insofar as our society has institutionalized means of anaesthetizing the pain caused by the split in our moral personality, perhaps one might after all speak of a quest for moral education. Since I never undertook that quest, I must disqualify myself from further remarks upon it. I will talk only about book learning.

My early book learning came to me as naturally as the seasons in the public school of the little town in which I grew up. I did well, but I think I studied primarily only to please my teachers. I seemed able to appease my curiosity about the nature of things simply by looking at the world around me without much discrimination. Quite early I began to find a special charm in an unpeopled world, the waste of lava rock and sagebrush desert surrounding my home. I was much alone in that desert and I never felt lonely. I was often more purely happy at such times than I think I have ever been since.

For many years I felt obliged to think ill of myself and hold those memories a guilty pleasure. Then I met Thoreau and later, here at the University, I met William Wordsworth and I have been relieved of that small pain.

When I was a very young man I went to China as a United States sailor. I had no very keen regrets that my education, in the sense of supervised book learning, had ended. My modest store was still greater than that of most of the men among whom I lived. I was busy learning military life and steam engineering without the mediation of books. I learned how to be alone on a ship at sea simply by leaning on the rail and looking out to the horizon. The sea yielded me the same curious pleasure that the desert had. I found that I could wander the streets and temple courtyards of Oriental cities much as I had once lingered in the desert. A screen of strangeness stood between me and the busy human living I observed. I could be tolerated as observer without being demanded to participate. So then it seemed to me that I could and often did participate in their lives with the same strange sympathy I knew how to feel toward forms in the desert. They would feel it too. Without a word of language in common, possibly by virtue of that, we could often exchange smiles or join in laughter or make a little game with children. No human interaction has ever seemed more real to me.

* * *

That was education, but it was not book learning. In connection with book learning, I want to recount just one memory of that other sort. It is a memory that often forced itself to my attenion in the years when I was learning that I would have to attend a university.

There was a little bar, run by a Japanese man and his wife, in the Wanchai district of Hong Kong. It had only two tables and six or eight chairs and it was clean and neat and orderly beyond the average of such places. I never saw anything really rowdy go on there. The unique feature of the place was a large wire cage on a shelf at one side of the room. In the cage were four white rats.

The rats were the entertainers. They were lean and hollow of flank and their eyes were a fierce red. They would prowl the straw litter in the bottom of their cage and from eyes red with hatred they would watch the sailors drinking beek at the tables. When a customer passed near their cage they would press against the bars, squeaking faintly and hoping to get a nip at him.

The sailors relished the helpless hatred of the rats. Often a man would tease them with a finger through the bars. The rats would fly around inside their cage almost like birds, in a great squeaking rage, trying to catch the teasing finger. If the man kept it up long enough, one of the rats would usually catch his finger. Then we would all laugh while the mamasan came to unclamp the rat's jaws. The rats would not bite the mamasan.

When closing time was near, around midnight, the mamasan would put an egg into the cage. I think the rats were deliberately kept starved, because I never saw any water or any other food go into the cage. The egg made the best show of all. Instantly the rats would be at it. They knew there was food inside it. But they were not able to break the egg. They would bite at it, but they could not open their jaws wide enough to get a purchase with their teeth. Their teeth would just slide off. They would all be frantic to get at it at once. The egg would disappear inside what looked like a white ball of interwoven rats. The ball of rats would roll slowly around the floor of the cage, with a constant muffled squeaking and a constant writhing pulsation of its surface.

* * *

After a while they would break the egg, and no one ever saw just how they did it. Almost always it took them half an hour or longer. On the rare occasions when they broke it in a few minutes, the sailors felt cheated.

When the egg was broken, the rats would eat it. Afterward they would not fly at a man's finger with anything like their former enthusiasm. For that reason the mamasan seldom gave them their egg until about an hour before closing time.

I did not spend as much time in bars as this particular reminiscence might seem to indicate. If for no better reason, I simply could not afford it. I found time to read many books, but seldom with the sense of consciously seeking enlightenment. I felt that I was reading for entertainment. Books were hard to come by and I found entertainment in more than one unlikely volume. Some ships had no libraries. Others had only a few western stories. I could not often afford to buy a new book. But in the thieves' market of Hong Kong I would sometimes find a few books for sale among the other junk. There was quite a good second-hand bookstore in Shanghai. And I soon learned that in the scores of cheap bookstores in Japanese cities there would usually be, far back in the rear, a few second-hand books in English.

Thus I did not lack for books, although I had to read a weirdly varied lot of them. Finding them in my trips ashore, was one of my chief enjoyments. The only gripe I had was my trouble in keeping them once I had read them. Lockers for personal gear were designed to hold just the prescribed outfit of uniforms, provided that they were rolled or folded very compactly. There was no room for books. I would hide books away in crannies all over the engineering spaces the way a squirrel hides acorns. When I transferred to a new ship, I would just have to leave most of them. Now that I live ashore I will not relinguish any book and I have already had to move once to a larger house.

Very little of all that I read excited any sharply focussed intellectual curiosity in me. An exception was the frequent references one encounters to Nietzsche's statement that God is dead. That seemed to me a pretty enormous thought. I knew a beachcomber in Guam, a towering old Englishman who was said to have once been a scholar at Oxford, and I asked him about it. He confirmed the statement, but he could not explain it. He gave me a worn copy of "Thus Spake Zarathustra," to which I clung through three transfers, but I never did succeed in understanding it. I did not really try very hard to understand it. I was content to read it as I did poetry, simply to enjoy the excitement and wonder it could arouse.

* * *

The turning point came for me with World War II, when I was twenty-eight years old. I had long intended to serve out my twenty years and retire in the Orient, as many men did in those days. When I had to return to the States, with the uneasy conviction that those old days were gone forever, it was pot pleasant. My future was suddenly all uncertain. I had let myself become too deeply aware of the common humanity I shared with Chinese and Japanese to force myself easily into the mental and emotional state proper to wartime. My ship came into San Francisco in March of 1942 at the time when

To the Editors,

In reference to the December 18 issue of the Daily Tar Heel concerning "Dorms In Yack," I have nothing but admiration for the authors, Tom Dinero and Kelly Eanes. They are most perceptive, and seem to have gained both the tolerance and understanding they speak of. I have only to add that, along with your weejums, you take your Gant shirts and madras wallets.

Gunfire Arouses Integrationists At Tougaloo

JACKSON, Miss.—A shot fired into the home of a white couple who have been active in the civil rights struggle here "will only intensify our efforts against segregation," a student at Tougaloo College here said.

Joan Trumpauer, a white student at predominantly Negro Tougaloo Southern Christian College, reported that Betty Poole and Dorie Ladner, Negro coeds, were sitting in the front room of the campus home of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Salter when someone fired into the bedroom window of the Salter's nine-month-old baby.

No one was injured, but Miss Trumpauer said "if Dorie had been in bed, as she would have been an hour later, she certainly would have been shot."

Members of the NAACP, CORE and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) have been active in encouraging a boycott of downtown stores in Jackson. The group has sponsored picket lines and distributed leaflets asking Jackson Negroes to stay off Capital Street, this city's main business avenue.

Several incidents of harrassment led to the December 21 shooting. On December 13, six people—four Negroes and two whites—were arrested on Capitol Street while they were picketing in protest of what they said was discrimination in employment of store personnel, and segregated facilities in stores.

On Dec. 1, Miss Ladner and Tougaloo student Charles Bracey were arrested after white bystanders downtown shouted to police that the two students were wearing picket signs under their coats. They were released on $500 bond each.

A Review:

Talbert Examines Bard's Early Work

UNC News Bureau

In spite of the very large number of books written about Shakespeare, many new and important things remain to be said about the plays of the greatest English dramatist.

Just as the conductor of an orchestra attempts to interpret music in accordance with the composer's intentions, so the critic of Elizabethan literature attempts to interpret Shakespeare's dramas in accordance with what can be learned of his intentions.

Every year the facts of Elizabethan history and of Elizabethan thought become progressively clear, and as a result, the critic becomes increasingly capable of recreating the ideas and the methods of expression that were familiar to Shakespeare's contemporaries, that appear in Shakespeare's dramas with unique variations, and that illumine his development as a dramatist.

Thus Professor Ernest William Talbert of the English department of UNC has written two books devoted to Shakespeare's early plays. These dramas were composed from about 1590 to 1595-96 and stretch from The Comedy of Errors, Titus Andronicus, and the first part of Henry VI to A Midsummer-Night's Dream, Romeo and Juliet, and Richard II.

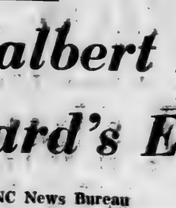
Because six of those plays dramatized English history and because the Elizabethan authorities were quick to suppress anything that might be applied to current politics, in his The Problem of Order, which was published in October by the UNC Press, Professor Talbert examines one of the most troublesome of questions, namely, the extent to which Elizabethan censorship might affect a playwright's artistry.

To understand the point of view of the authorities, for example, Professor Talbert first determines the political commonplaces that propagandists of all sorts were inclined to use when they wished to arouse the Elizabethans' emotions.

Against such a background, he places Shakespeare's representation of the deposition of Richard II and demonstrates how the playwright utilized those commonplaces to achieve, within the theater, a Janus-like political effect that excaped censorship but that, nevertheless, interpreted an important aspect of the political thought of the day.

In the second book, which will appear in the near future, Professor Talbert then considers Shakespeare's early work in the light of the experience of regular theater-goers familiar with dramas by Thomas Kyd, Christopher Marlowe, Robert Greene, and other Elizabethan playwrights. Upon such a basis, one can clearly perceive Shakespeare's increasing capabilities as a dramatist, and one encounters, once more, much that has never been pointed out and that illumines both Shakespeare's intent and his technique.

Professor Talbert has been on the regular and the summer staffs of Stanford University, the University of Idaho, the University of Texas, Duke University, and Northwestern University. He is co-author of Classical Myth and Legend in Renaissance Dictionaries: A Study of Renaissance Dictionaries in their Relation to the Classical Learning of Contemporary English Writers.



In addition to numerous reviews, he is the author of some forty scholarly articles and addresses on John Wyclif, Ben Jonson, and other authors of the late Middle Ages and the Renaissance.

He has been the English editor and the general editor for "Recent Literature of the of the Renaissance: A Bibliography and an Index" of Studies in Philology and he is currently on the board of editors revising J. E. Wells's Manual of Writings in Middle English.

UNC To Attend NSA Conference On Peace Corps

The U.S. National Student Association announced recently that USNSA, in cooperation with the federal government, will sponsor UNC delegation to the conference on the proposed "Domestic Peace Corps" at American University, Washington, D. C., on the weekend of Feb. 15-17.

NSA co-ordinator Harry DeLung has announced plans to send a UNC delagation to the conference.

The development of the domestic corps, proposed on several occasions by USNSA, has been made a definite project of the Kennedy administration. On Nov. 18, President Kennedy named several of his cabinet members to a special task force, headed by Attny. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, to study the proposal.

As conceived, the domestic peace Corps will operate in much the same manner as does the present Peace Corps—with an important difference: the domestic corps will work exclusively with those who the president has termed the "32,000,000 persons now living at a lower level than America is capable of providing for its citizens."

Possible areas where the domestic corps will operate are depressed areas, Indian reservations, urban slums, and emergency areas. It is expected that the new organization would be used to train badly needed social workers as well.

The domestic corps will select its volunteers in the same fashion as the Peace Corps, and the period of service is expected to be one to two years. As does the Peace Corps, the domestic group will search out specially talented young Americans for special programs.

Announcing the USNSA student conference on the domestic corps, USNSA president Dennis Shaul (Notre Dame) said "The staff of the Association believes that the last National Student Congress and the constituency of the Association have made it clear that there is now an active interest in the creation of a domestic peace corps in the American student community.

The type of programs today spreading across the nation at the youth and student level, such as those in tutorial work, in work with underpriviledged and retarded children, in work toward neighborhood renovation, or work with the elderly, is a clear manifestation of this.

"Our interest in the kind of activity which a domestic corps would undertake is long-standing, and our responsibility to take a role in the current discussion concerning it, and to do what we can to see it initiated is clear."

USNSA played a significant role in the formation of the Peace Corps in 1960 and 1961. Previous National Student Congresses had urged the development of such a group for several years, and when President Kennedy indicated interest in the project, USNSA threw full support behind the president, scheduling a nation-wide student conference also at American University to discuss the proposal.

UNC sent several delegates to the first conference.

SNCC Asks Action By Justice Dept. In Mississippi

Seven field workers from the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) asked the United States District Court in Washington this week to force Atty. General Robert F. Kennedy and FBI director J. Edgar Hoover to act aagainst local authorities in Mississippi who the plaintiffs said had failed to protect the rights of Negroes.

In their suit, the group asked for an order directing Hoover and Kennedy to use FBI agents, marshals and other federal authorities to prevent harrassment of Negroes and others pressing for equal rights in Mississippi.

They said that the suit was intended to "establish a precedent which will indicate to both officials that their powers are immeasurably greater than they probably realize . . ." The suit was filed by William Higgs, a Jackson, Miss. lawyer, and William Kunstler of New York.

The plaintiffs, all Negroes except Higgs, charged that Mississippi law enforcement officials have been intimidating, harrassing and physically attacking them and other Negroes who have been attempting to register to vote in Mississippi.

The Atlanta-based Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee has been conducting voter registration drives in rural Mississippi areas since August, 1961.

SNCC worker Sam Block has been arrested five times since he began work in Greenwood. He has been jailed in Clarksdale, Cleveland, Indianola and twice in Greenwood. He was beaten once in Tunica, Miss., and twice in Greenwood, and he and Willie Peacock, his partner in the Greenwood voting project narrowly escaped being lynched when they jumped from the second story of their Greenwood Office in July, 1962.

Charles McLaurin, who works for SNCC in Ruleville, has also been arrested five times and has had a $1500 price placed on his head by local whites.

Moses, who heads up the Mississippi project, was beaten by the son of a Mississippi police officer in August, 1961, and arrested a few days later as he accompanied three Negroes to the registrar's office in Liberty, Miss. Cobb, who works in Ruleville, was threatened this past summer by the town's constable, the brother of the confessed slayer of Emmet Till.

Watkins, who has spent 74 days in jail, was charged with "contributing to the delinquency of minors" and disobeying an officer. Lafayette Surney has been arrested twice, once in Indianola, the birthplace of the Citizens Councils, for passing out leaflets urging Negroes to attend to voting meeting. During one of Jesse Harris' arrests, whn he was charged with "contempt of court" after he sat on the 'white' side of a courtroom, he was beaten in jail.

Swim Defeats Fail To Bother Earey

By JOEL BULKLEY

In spite of the fact that Carolina's varsity swimming team suffered two narrow back to back losses in pre-Christmas meets, Coach Pat Earey reported yesterday that he is now more optimistic about his team's future than he was at the beginning of the season.

The Blue Dolphins, unbeaten in their first five meets, bowed to inter-sectional foes, Princeton, 49-46, and Navy, 50-45, before Christmas vacation.

The team began preparation this week for its next two opponents, Wake Forest and East Carolina, both of which will be met before the examination-week layoff.

Earey said that he is sure that the Tar Heels are capable of knocking off all of the rest of their eight opponents if they make up their minds to work hard.

Commenting on the team's two straight defeats, Earey said that they were so close that if we had collected another second or third place in any event we would have come home victorious in both meets. Referring to the Navy meet, in which our medley relay team was disqualified, he noted that the boys hurt themselves there. "They know what the rules are and its their job to follow them or take the risk of being disqualified," he added.

Records Fall

Carolina swimmers, Thompson Mann and Harrison Merrill, both bettered UNC and ACC records in the 200-yard individual medley and 500-yard freestyle events, respectively. Mann, an All-American from Hickory, Va., was clocked at 2:06.1 for the 200-yard race at Princeton, breaking Harry Bloom's old record of 2:07.5 which was set during the 1961 season.

Merrill, a sophomore from Atlanta, Ga., chopped 12.6 seconds off of another of Harry Bloom's old records when he completed the lengthy freestyle race in 5:26.4 at Annapolis.

Carolina's freestyle power almost pulled out a win for the visiting Blue Dolphins against its Ivy League opponent but Gardiner Green nipped UNC's Dick Woodrow in the 50-yard sprint to give the Tigers the win. Carolina swept first in the day's four other freestyle events. Green also copped the breaststroke race.

Merrill scored first in both 100 and 200-yard races to pace the losers. Frank Lea (500freestyle); Mann individual medley); and the Carolina relay team of Bill Bloom, team captain and brother of the former record holder, Woodrow, Mann and Merrill.

Ernie Oare (diving), Thad Adams (200 free.), Tate Kemper (200 breast.), Howard Cone (50 free.) picked up third places while Mike Bissell (500 free.) Bill Bloom (200 butterfly) and Mann (200 back.) added second places for Carolina.

GOOD PERFORMANCES

Again the Mann and Merrill combination scored heavily for the Tar Heels, this time against the Midshipmen. Both scored two first places to lead the Blue Dolphins. Mann took firsts in the individual medley and backstroke events while Merrill copped the butterfly and 500 freestyle races. Other winners for Carolina were junior Pete Swift in the 200-yard breaststroke and Bill Bloom in the 200 freestyle.

In the summarizing these two meets, Earey said that special praise was due the entire squad for its fine effort, although Barry King, Frank Lea, Bill Bloom and Tate Kemper deserved special mention.

Heels Defeat Irish, 76-68

61, called time out with six seconds left.

After a couple of passes on the throw-in, Cunningham took the ball near mid-court, and dribbled as if he were going to try to drive for the basket. Instead, he stopped shy of the circle, went up for a jumper, and followed through as the ball sailed cleanly through the cords.

Brown, whose dribbling helped to kill the clock after UNC got the lead in the overtime, was runnerup to Cunningham in the scoring race with 18. Poteet followed closely with 13. Cooke had 6, Respess 5, Shaffer 4, and McSweeney 2.

Behind Miller, who had 21, were Andreoli with 16, Sheffield with 12, and Sahm with 9 for Notre Dame.

Carolina, which missed three of its first four tries from the free throw line, made 17 of its last 18. That's the way the ball game was won. For the game, UNC was 24 for 30 from the line, and Notre Dame was 16 for 23. The Irish, who made 10 of their first 11, missed six of their last 12.

Both teams scored 26 field goals. UNC tried 59, Notre Dame, 44.

Matmen Sweep Pair Of Victories

By JOEL BULKLEY

Yesterday was a long and restless day for coach Sam Barnes and his varsity wrestling team but when it was over they had scored their first two victories of the season after three decisive setbacks and prospects were looking brighter.

In the first match of an afternoon doublebill in Woollen Gym, the Tar Heel grapplers edged Pfeiffer, 15-14 and then a half hour later return to defeat East Carolina, 18-11.

Coach Barnes noted after the final match had ended that he had used 13 boys that afternoon and had relied on only three to wrestle twice, thus giving everybody a chance to show their stuff.

Carolina opens its ACC schedule at home Monday night against the Cavaliers of Virginia. A freshman match is scheduled for 7 p.m. with the varsity contest to follow.

Gene Record, a senior and two year letterman from Brookline, Mass. made the most impressive showing of the day. He pinned his opponent in the first match and then won by a decision in the second.

Louis Arthur (123-pound class) and Bill Woodall (157-pound division) also wrestled twice and both split their decisions, winning one and dropping the other.

The Summary (first match):

123—Dickinson (P) pinned Arthur (UNC);

130—Ken Furr (UNC) won by a pin;

137—Merian (P) won by a decision over Russell Simmons (UNC);

147—Stokes (P) won by a decision over Willis Johnson (UNC);

157—Hand (P) won by a decision over Woodall (UNC);

167—Elliott Dworin (UNC)—Mauldin (P) draw;

177—Record (UNC) fall over Cheatam (P);

HW—Gerry Cabe (UNC) won by a decision over Ascher (P).

Second Match Summary:

123—Arthur (UNC) won by a fall over Lane (EC);

130—Joel Fishman (UNC) won by a decision over Smith (EC);

137—Colando (EC) won by a decision over Bob Crook (UNC);

147—Dave Wiles (UNC) won by a decision over Williams (EC);

157—Woodall (UNC) won by a decision over Randall (EC);

167—Walt Phillips (UNC) and Jones (EC), a draw;

177—Record (UNC) won by a decision over Linker (EC);

HW—Ed Fuller (UNC) and Perry (EC), a draw.

South Captures 33-27 Win

Rogers Hornsby Dies At Age 66

CHICAGO (UPI)—Rogers Hornsby, the greatest right-handed hitter in baseball history, died Saturday at the age of 66. The tough, uncompromising and outspoken Hornsby, who for almost a half century fought with the great names of baseball from Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis to Roger Maris, died at 10:05 a.m. CST at Wesley Memorial Hospital where he had been a patient since Dec. 9. The hard-bitten native of Winters, Tex., had served as a scout for the New York Mets in 1962.

Hornsby underwent surgery for eye cataracts, then suffered a stroke Dec. 15 while recuperating from that operation. A hospital spokesman said that Hornsby appeared to be making a good recovery both from the operation and the stroke until Friday night, when his temperature rose suddenly.

The Hall of Famer was survived by his widow, Marge, whom he married seven years ago, by a stepdaughter, and by a son by a previous marriage, Bill Hornsby of Nashville, Tenn.

Griffing Is Outstanding For Rebels

MOBILE, Ala. (UPI)—Quarterbacks Glynn Griffing of Mississippi and Gary Cuozzo of Virginia and a magnificent goal line stand in the final seconds paced the South to a 33-27 victory over the North Saturday in the 14th annual Senior Bowl game before 38,048 fans.

The Rebel victory offset a record-breaking passing performance by the North's quarterback Jerry Gross of Detroit and an outstanding running show by Iowa State's brilliant halfback Dave Hoppmann.

The game started out almost a duplication of last year's when the Rebels won by a 42-7 rout. The Rebs took a 27-6 halftime lead. But the North came back fighting to surge within a yard of tying the game in the final seconds.

North	6	0	7	14	—27
South	7	20	6	0	—33

South—Gambrtll 37 pass from Cuozza; Baker pass from Cuozzo.

North—Hoppmann 1 run (run failed).

South—Gambrell 24 pass from Griffing (Logan kick).

South—Baker 46 pass from Griffing (kick blocked).

South—Baker 5 pass from Griffing (Logan kick).

South—Kinderman 4 run (kick failed).

North—Katterhenrick 4 lateral from Snyder on pass from Gross (Jenks kick).

North—Snyder 35 pass from Gross (Jenks kick).

Lions Favored Over Steelers

MIAMI (UPI) — The Detroit Lions, still smarting over their divisional loss to the world champion Green Bay Packers, ruled a rugged eight-point favorite Saturday on the eve of their runner-up playoff game with Pittsburgh in the Orange Bowl.

It's a game designed solely to aid the players' pension fund with a $125,000 television payoff for the national picture tube tussle on CBS-TV starting at 2 p.m. EST.

But, while the winners each collect $600 against an individual $400 check for the losers, according to Coach George Wilson of the Lions —only team to conquer the world champion Packers this season— there's more than a $200 per man difference at stake.

Rough Game

"Call it pride, or call it whatever you want to," said the burly, easy-going Wilson, "but this will be a rough game between two fine defensive teams."

There's no doubt about it. The Lions have probably the greatest in the game in their "fearsome foursome."

This quartet includes end Darris McCord and Sam Williams and tackles Alex Karras and six-foot-five-inch, 300-pound Roger Brown. They made football history before a nationwide television audience with their one-sided conquest of the mighty Packers.

Pittsburgh meanwhile counted on the passing of Layne, the pass catching of Buddy Dial and the riotous running of fullback John Henry Johnson — a combination which swept the Steelers to a faster finish than that of any team in the league.

But the amiable Wilson was still counting on his defense to settle the issue of the game, which will also be carried by Mutual Broadcasting on a coast-to-coast radio basis, and around the world by armed forces radio service.

Meredith Plans To Leave School

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) — Negro James Meredith, under increasing pressure from slipping grades and shooting incidents involving his family, said Monday that "unless definite and positive changes are made" he will not register for the next semester at the University of Mississippi.

The statement by Meredith, whose entry into the campus last Sept. 30 caused rioting that killed two persons and injured hundreds, brought an immediate appeal from U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy that state and university officials meet the conditions.

Kennedy said if Meredith leaves the school "it would be a reflection" on the entire United States. He urged state and school officials "to make it possible for Mr. Meredith to continue his education without interruption."

He also urged Meredith to consider "hopes of many of his fellow citizens" before withdrawing.

Meredith, 29-year-old Air Force veteran, did not specify the conditions under which he would continue but said the changes he asked would have to "make my situation more conducive to learning." He noted that he was not quitting the school outright, "rather my decision is not to attend the university next semester under the present circumstances."

University Chancellor John D. Williams said he did not know what Meredith meant "and until I do I will have no statement."

Meredith made his announcement in a statement handed to newsmen before he left for his morning classes.

He said he has considered his course of action for some time and said his considerations included "all the elements pertinent to the 'Mississippi crisis' and its deepest meaning and of all the aspects of my personal relationships in it, and with it and to it."

Meredith, possibly referring to the rioting last September and to a recent incident where shots were fired at his father's Kosciusko, Miss., home, said "some pattern must be established so that those who are fighting for equality of opportunity and those who are fighting for the right to oppress can clash in the struggle without disaster falling upon either group."

His statement came only a day before a grand jury was scheduled to convene here to consider cases against 11 persons charged in connection with the 'Ole Miss riot, including Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker.

Kennedy said Meredith "is as free to leave the school as he was to enter it" but said he hoped Meredith will consider that "the energy and hopes of many of his fellow citizens have been involved in his admission and continued attendance."

Dock Workers Meet With Mediator

NEW YORK —(UPI)—Shippers and longshoremen met separately with federal mediators Monday in an effort to find common ground for face-to-face talks in the East and Gulf Coast dock strike that has thrown 100,000 men out of work and cost more than $400 million.

Assistant Secretary of Labor James Reynolds said the atmosphere has been "slightly improved" because of Sunday's joint talks by the wage scale committee—the first since before the strike began 16 days ago.

"The conduct of the meeting was a credit to both sides," he said, although it produced no real progress on the subject of wages. Reynolds said the meeting gave both the New York Shipping Association (NYSA) and the International Longshoremen's Association (ILA) a chance to state their current position.

The shippers Monday purchased a fullpage advertisement in the Christian Science Monitor stressing that the strike is a "peril to the nation" and would hurt the nation's competitive position in the world markets if the dockworkers' demands, estimated at $300 million a year, and added to cost of cargo-handling.

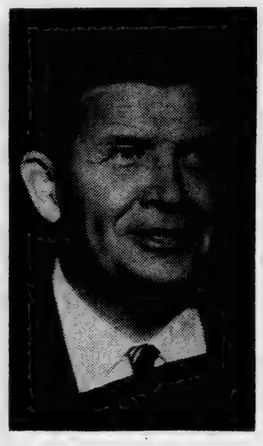
"No matter how efficient American industry may be—no matter how fast or efficient modern ships may be—the increased shipping charges will make our producers non-competitive," the advertisement said. "We lose the business, our industries lose orders, their workers lose jobs."

The strike affects an estimated 60,000 of the 75,000 longshoremen. Some dockers are working on military cargoes and other jobs approved by the ILA under the master strike plan. It also has added another 40,000 to 50,000 seamen, truckers, railroad employees and other workers.

Edward P. Tastrom, director of public relations and research for the NYSA, said the strike has cost more than $400 million nationwide.

White House sources said that President Kennedy might seek anti-strike legislation if the walkout is not settled soon.

The shippers and longshoremen still were far apart. The shippers have offered a 22-cent an hour package. Dockworkers are asking for a pay increase of 26 cents and fringe items that bring the total package to 50 cents an hour.



Frenchman Says U. S. Deserves To See Mona

NEW YORK (UPI)—Sending the Mona Lisa to the United States involved "great risks," but so did the World War II American landings in Normandy, French Minister of Culture Andre Malraux declared Monday.

Arriving here by plane from Paris, Malraux defended the French government's decision, against some popular and art expert opposition, to send the famous painting to the U. S. for exhibition in the National Art Gallery in Washington and at New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art.

"Certainly there were great risks in bring the Mona Lisa here," the 61-year-old French author told reporters, "but when the American boys landed in Normandy, there was risk, too.

"No country would have received the Mona Lisa the way your country is going to welcome it. Perhaps no country but France would have loaned the painting."

British Say Their Jets 'Hit' U. S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — London newspapers touched off a new controversy over Allied nuclear defense policy and the Skybolt program Monday by reporting that British jet bombers recently penetrated U. S. air defenses in a mock H-bomb attack.

Official U. S. and British spokesmen denied the report. They said the last time British bombers engaged in such an exercise was in Operation Skyshield II on Oct. 14, 1961. The spokesmen did not say whether any British planes slipped past U. S. defenses then.

The British press and radio reports pointed up the controversy over President Kennedy's decision to scrap the bomber-born Skybolt missile on which Britain had counted. More centrally involved is the role of the manned bomber in present day Allied defenses.

Four London newspapers carried reports stating that a few weeks ago 600-mile-an-hour British Vulcan bombers caught the U. S. early warning system napping and "devastated" such key target areas as New York and Washington.

One paper, the Daily Express, said Britain's Royal Air Force saw the exercise as "convincing evidence that manned bombers, even using free-falling H-bombs, will get through to most of their targets behind the Iron Curtain."

The Express also took note of the Kennedy-Macmillan plan to concentrate on the Polaris missile and to mesh British Polaris forces with a multi-nation striking force under NATO. The newspaper said the raid vindicated "the policy of the independent deterrent."

Denials of the reported H-bomb "attack" came swiftly from London and Washington. The British Air Ministry first said the exercise took place "about two months ago." Later, it said the exercise was held "around Oct. 14, 1961."

Shortly afterward, the Defense Department in Washington termed the British press reports "completely without foundation." Like the British, the department said the most recent joint exercise was on Oct. 14, 1961."

A department statement added that British Vulcan bombers frequently fly to U. S. bases, but not to test defenses. It said such flights are made only after the British planes file flight plans just as do commercial airliners.

U. N. Troops Seize More Territory

By DIETRICH MUMMENDEY

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo—(UPI)—Swedish troops of the United Nations Congo forces have swept 115 miles north of the U.N. Kamina Air Base to seize more territory of the secessionist province, a U. N. spokesman said Monday.

U. N. Undersecretary General Ralph Bunche, refusing even to talk with Katanga President Moise Tshombe, continued his military discussions in Elisabethville with the ranking U. N. officers in the Congo.

The Central government was moving to bring Katanga back into the Congo. Premier Cyrille Adoulla Monday signed official papers aimed at instituting Leopoldville control over Katanga and creating a single currency for the Congo.

Except for the swift advance of the Swedish strike force from Kamina, the military situation appeared quiet. There was no further reports of U. N. movements northwest from Jadotville along the 80-mile road to Tshombe's Kolwezi headquarters.

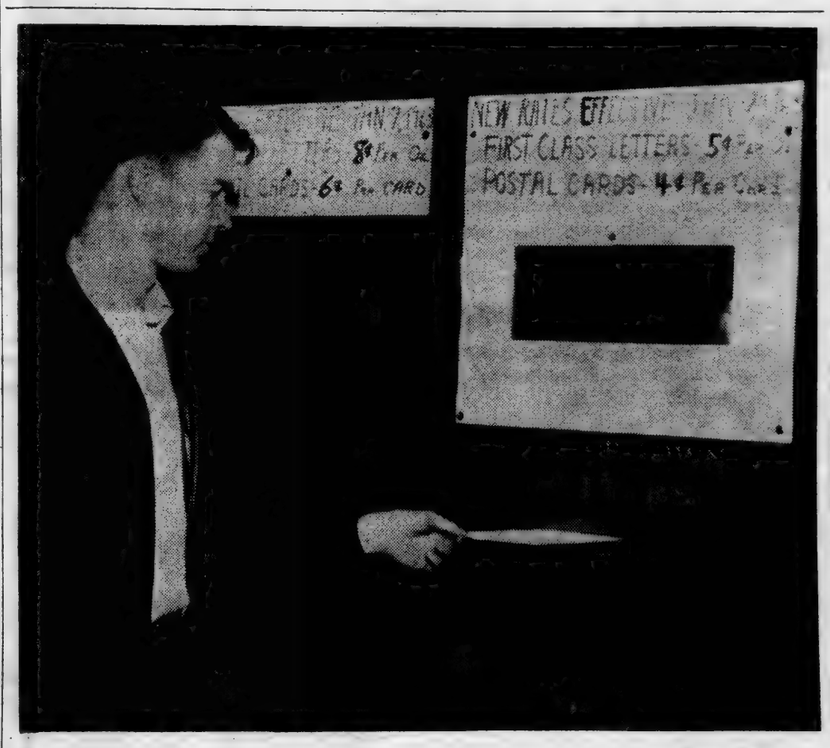
U. N. reports said the Swedish force had reached the town of Kaniama, 115 miles north of Kamina, without resistance. Kaniama is near the destroyed Lubilash Bridge which linked Katanga with the rest of the Congo to the north.

Katangese forces blew up the center wooden span of the Lubilash railway bridge last week. Respanning of the river would permit troops of the Central Congolese government to cross into Katanga if that became necessary.

The U. N. reports said the local tribal chief there had assured the U. N. of his cooperation.

Although no military action was reported in the Jadotville area, Bunche clearly stated the U. N. tough policy against Tshombe and mentioned Kolwezi as one of three military targets for U. N. forces. It appeared they were waiting only for arrival of more supplies and bridge equipment.

Bunche restated his tough policy in Elisabethville Sunday where he conferred on the situation with Ethiopian Lt. Gen. Kebede Guebre, U. N. military commander in the Congo, Indian Lt. Gen. Prem Chand, commander in Katanga, and Robert K. A. Gardiner of Ghana, chief of U. N. civilian operations in the Congo.



There were reports the British and French consulates in Elisabethville were trying to get Tshombe to fly there to salvage what he could of his almost fallen regime but no reports of progress.

Peru Junta Plots Against Rebels

LIMA, Peru (UPI)—Peru's military junta met in emergency session Monday to draft further measures against political extremists accused of plotting a Communist revolt.

Reviewed at the session was the government's "Operation Cleanup" under which hundreds of political opponents have been jailed. Informed sources said between 700 and 1,000 persons had been rounded up by security agents although the government estimated arrests at "about 300" persons. Police and troops used cars, trucks, trains and aircraft to pounce on suspended subversives and haul them off to jail for interrogation. The country was quiet after Saturday's imposition of a state of seige which the junta attributed to discovery of the revolt plot.

McCormack Predicts Administration Win

Tax Cut Plan To Succeed, Demo Says

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Speaker John W. McCormack, D-Mass., Monday predicted victory for President Kennedy in his battles for a 1963 tax cut and a House Rules Committee favorable to the administration's legislative program.

McCormack said he expected the 88th Congress convening Wednesday to grant the President's request for a top-to-bottom reduction in individual and corporate tax rates. Despite considerable opposition to a cut, McCormack added: "I would expect it this year."

The speaker also said he was optimistic about winning the Kennedy-McCormack battle with Chairman Howard W. Smith, D-Va., of the House Rules Committee. A showdown in this struggle for power is set for opening day.

Smith will try to trim the rules committee back to 12 members, a maneuver that would give him and his conservative backers considerable control over the flow of legislation. The President is fighting to keep it at 15 members, providing him with a friendly majority.

Invites President

Across the capitol, a bipartisan group of senators informally invited the President to join them in their attempt to make it easier to choke off filibusters. A showdown in this battle is not expected until a little later.

The invitation was extended by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., one of 10 Democrats and Republicans who opened their anti-filibuster drive at a news conference. Humphrey said he hoped the President would take the same interest in the Senate fight that he has in the House rules battle.

The President has said that a conservative victory in the rules struggle would mean emasculation for his program. He has not spoken out so far on the filibuster issue although he voted for anti-talkathon moves while a senator.

The bipartisan group is trying to change Senate rules so that filibusters can be ended by a simple majority of 51 votes rather than two-thirds of those present and voting.

There were these other developments as Congress prepared to open at noon Wednesday:

—Kennedy flies back to Washington from his Florida vacation spot Tuesday and meets shortly afterward with congressional leaders of both parties. The meeting will be devoted chiefly to defense and foreign policy aspects of the President's forthcoming State of the Union message. Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara were expected to participate.

—The President also was due to meet shortly, perhaps Wednesday morning, with Democratic leaders to discuss such domestic programs as tax cuts, medical care and aid-to-education. Figuring in this conference will be the fiscal 1964 budget which is expected to run about $99 billion.

—Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., checked in at his capitol office and said he wanted to be known as the "senator from Massachusetts" rather than as the President's youngest brother. He pledged support to most administration programs but said he would have opposed sections of the President's trade bill if he had been in Congress last year.

—Sen.-elect Abraham A. Ribicoff, former secretary of health, education and welfare, predicted that the new Congress would approve a medical care program under Social Security. He also endorsed the President's tax cut program.

Soviet Press Blasts Rift With Peking

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet press and radio Monday gave unusual prominence and publicity at home and abroad to the Moscow-Peking rift and the Kremlin's warning that the only alternative to "peaceful co-existence" with the West is thermonuclear war.

The official Soviet Communist party newspaper Pravda pulled few punches in a rare direct attack on Communist China. It criticized Peking for backing "dogmatic, divisive views" and told the Chinese that disunity in the international Communist movement cannot be tolerated.

Pravda's 10,008-word editorial, which filled two of the publication's eight pages, was broadcast to the world and throughout the Soviet Union by Radio Moscow. The radio termed the editorial of "immense fundamental significance."

The official government newspaper Iszvestia also called attention to the Pravda article and said it had aroused "fervent approval" and "immense interest" throughout the Communist world.

Western diplomatic observers speculated that Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev may have decided to turn the East German Communist party congress in East Berlin into a forum for a showdown with Chinese Communist chairman Mao Tze-Tung. There has been no indication yet from Peking whether Mao or premier Chou En-Lai would head its delegation to the Congress opening on Jan. 15.

Kennedy To Meet Defense Leaders

PALM BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — President Kennedy and Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson made plans Monday for the government's top military and foreign policy officials to brief bi-partisan leaders of Congress Tuesday on national security matters.

The White House announced that Secretary of State Dean Rusk, Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara and Central Intelligence Agency Director John A. McCone would take part in the leadership conference scheduled for 5:30 p.m. EST, shortly after Kennedy and Johnson arrive back in Washington from Palm Beach.

The President ended a long holiday by taking Johnson for a breezy yacht cruise Monday afternoon in which they discussed the 88th Congress which will convene at noon Wednesday.

The vacation White House made public this list of senators and congressmen who are on the attendance list for Tuesday's meeting with Kennedy, Johnson, Rusk, McNamara and McCone:

Senate: Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, Mont.; Democratic Whip Hubert Humphrey, Minn.; Democratic Conference Secretary George Smathers, Fla.; Chairman Richard Russell, D-Ga., of the armed services committee; Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen, Ill.; Republican Whip Thomas Kuchel, Calif.; and GOP Sens. Leverett Saltonstall, Mass., and Bourke Hickenlooper, Iowa.

House: Speaker John W. McCormack, Mass.; Democratic Leader Carl Albert, Okla.; Democratic Whip Hale Boggs, La.; Chairman Carl Vinson, D-Ga., of the armed services committee; Chairman Thomas Morgan, D-Pa., of the foreign policy committee; Republican Leader Charles A. Halleck, Ind.; Republican Whip Leslie Arends, Ill., and Rep. Frances Bolton, R-Ohio.

Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., of the Senate Foreign Policy Committee was invited but is out of the country, the White House said.

The President and Johnson both plan to fly back to Washington from here Tuesday — on separate Air Force jet planes — for the conference with Democratic and Republican leaders, a prelude to convening of the House and Senate Wednesday.

Kennedy invited the vice president to his ocean front home Monday night for dinner. Johnson flew here Sunday night from Detroit and visited with the President for about an hour after his arrival.

They were together for about an hour and three-quarters Monday afternoon on a cruise that combined relaxation with the legislative business at hand.

The meeting with Johnson aboard the White House yacht Honey Fitz was an informal affair, giving the two Democratic leaders a chance to compare notes on the 1963 legislative outlook. With overcast skies and comparatively chilly weather, it made it somewhat easier for the Chief Executive to break camp and head for the hot politics and cold weather of the nation's capital.

The president and Mrs. Kennedy were scheduled to take off from Palm Beach at 2 p.m. EST Tuesday for a late afternoon meeting of Republican and Democratic leaders with Kennedy at the White House.

The two-party conference is expected to be devoted largely to the defense and foreign policy sections of the Chief Executive's forthcoming State of the Union message.

Following the bipartisan meeting, a purely Democratic legislative leadership conference was expected in short order, possibly Wednesday prior to the opening of Congress.

JOSEPH FLUET

Fluet To Aid Promotion Of Maine

Maine Governor John H. Reed designated a UNC student recently to aid in a new program to promote Maine's economic interests.

Joseph E. Fluet, Jr., 18, of Sanford, Maine, a sophomore, was one of ten College Consuls appointed by Reed to promote the industrial and recreational advantages of their native state. The Consuls from ten different colleges and universities, will be supplied with basic and continuing information concerning Maine and will serve as the state's information contacts on their respective campuses.

Fluet and the other consuls met with Maine government officials during Christmas vacation, received the Governor's congratulations and were the guests of the Department of Economic Development at an orientation luncheon.

Economic Development Commissioner Lloyd K. Allen said the "trial" program would find Maine youth utilized for the first time in organized fashion to "sell" the state's merits. A list of students in other colleges throughout the nation, selected by their former high school principals, are being held in reserve to be called into Consul service dependent on the success of the trial program.

Fluet, a psychology major at the University, is a member of the YMCA Orphanage Committee, Navy Rifle Team and Delta Upsilon Fraternity where he won the best pledge award. A regular in the NROTC, he hopes to become a jet pilot in the Marine Corps.

Ike Favors Cutting Of Income Taxes

WASHINGTON —(UPI)—Former President Dwight D. Eisenhower said Monday he would like to see "a very substantial" cut in income taxes, but a cut accompanied by a reduction in federal spending "right across the board."

Eisenhower said all government spending was "going up too fast" and should be cut, particularly on non-defense items.

Junius Scales Freed: An Encouraging Sign

The President's Christmas Eve freeing of Junius Scales was a welcome and surprising action. For the first time since President Truman's veto of the Internal Security Act in 1950, the federal executive has refused to cowtow to Congressional investigating committees and their comrades-in-arms-and-money across the country, and has, instead, acted to preserve full civil liberties.

Over the opposition of the House Un-American Activities Committee and the Senate Internal Security subcommittee Scales was released. His sentence was commuted despite his refusal to "name names" for the FBI, to point the finger at former friends and associates whose only crime may have been a questionable "membership" or a controversial sympathy.

What then led the President to free the former chief of the Communist Party in the Carolinas?

—The President must have shared the doubts of many distinguished Americans as to the constitutionality of a conviction for "membership" in any group, even the Communist Party. This conviction was upheld by the Supreme Court by a narrow 5-4 vote and the chances are good that the new court will decide differently.

—Scales is the only person to have served a jail term under the "membership clause" of the Smith Act, other Communists having been acquitted on legal grounds. This point becomes more important since Scales quit the Party and repudiated Communism in 1957, four years before he finally was sent to jail.

—For Scales, more than for any other "civil liberties" case in recent years, there has been a strong, energetic campaign by many leading Americans to obtain a pardon or commutation. On the national scene such men as theologian Reinhold Neibuhr, historian Henry Steele Commager, Martin Luther King Jr., cartoonist Jules Feiffer, philosopher Sidney Hook, and Norman Thomas have requested that Kennedy release Scales. In North Carolina "Free Scales" aetivity was particularly widespread, with editor-author Harry Golden, playwright Paul Green and lawyer McNeill Smith being very active.

* * *

The Scales case was unusual and thus might prove a poor precedent for future civil freedom cases. In the future it will be more difficult for the federal executive to stand on the side of constitutional guarantees against the pressure of much of the Congress and the FBI. But that stand should be taken—even if it has to be initiated by a new Supreme Court ruling on the constitutionality of the Smith and McCarran acts.

The executive and its FBI should not require the "naming of names", should not expect these men to protect themselves at the expense of others, should not consider the taking of the Fifth Amendment as a suspect action. The President's Christmas Eve action should become the standard for future executive and congressional behavior in the field of civil liberties. (JC)

A Good Thing

We would like to take this opportunity to put in a plug for the North Carolina State Government Summer Internship Program.

Why? Well, primarily because of some things we've just heard.

What have we heard? Well, a past president of the UNC student body who participated in the program last summer called it, "The best summer job I've ever had."

And he went on to state that, ". . . contrary to what might be the general opinion, the interns do not work on the bottom of the heap. Rather, each student intern has the opportunity to work with a branch of the State Government in which he is most interested, and he works as a 'student consultant,' not as an errand boy."

We would infer, from talking to past participants and scanning the brief announcements, that this political internship is a rare opportunity to get "in" on the day-to-day functionings of a state government. A selected participant will have the chance to work integrally in some programs of any one of fifteen various agencies of the North Carolina State Government.

The regular work will be supplemented by evening seminars and weekly luncheons. To say nothing of those proverbial "bull sessions."

It would seem that whether you are an aspiring young politician or just an interested citizen, this program has something to offer you. If you intend to vote intelligently or campaign successfully, you might do well to spend six weeks in Raleigh.

Information and applications are available at the student government offices and from chairmen of the History, Political Science, Economics, Education, and Business Administration Departments.

Oh yes, one other bit of information . . . interns will be paid $75.00 per week. That alone seems a pretty good thing. (CW)

Buckley Backed; Otelia Hit

Academic Freedom: A Hollow Ring?

To the Editors,

I have viewed with much concern the series of events that have followed the appearance of Mr. William Buckley at Memorial Hall on Monday night, December 10. The reaction of the "liberals" was, of course, expected. It is quite natural that they would find his address most disturbing. The reaction of The Daily Tar Heel also is understandable, since the Editors reflect the "liberal" line of thought on this campus. What was not expected, however, was Mr. Henry Mayer's refusal to honor the Carolina Forum's contract with Mr. Buckley. And it also strikes me as strange that it took almost a full week for the Forum to take this stand. The Forum takes the position that it didn't get its money's worth because Mr. Buckley chose to give an address that appears in the current issue of "Playboy." The Forum contends that since his address was "not an original lecture" the Forum is justified in its demand for a "readjustment of the fee."

The case against Mr. Buckley is not that simple, however. For the students of this campus have been subjected to a tremendous propaganda campaign directed by the Editors of the DTH and the "liberal" element here at Carolina. Each day after Mr. Buckley's appearance, the DTH was filled with editorials, letters to the editor, and "news items" that attacked Mr. Buckley and the whole conservative position. The editorials were not only poorly written, irrational, and juvenile, but were an example of extreme poor taste. There is no excuse for the utter filth which appeared under the title "Conservatism and Compost, A View from a Distance", on the editorial page of the December 13 issue. Among the ramblings of the other editorials were vague comments about poor taste and bad manners. Tuesday the Di-Phi, in an frenzied attempt to prove its existence, issued a pompus statement of "censure" for Mr. Buckley's "vulgarity." The DTH withheld this news until Friday in order to set the stage for the Forum's statement via Mr. Mayer. It is now becoming clear that the reason for all of this activity is not what the DTH and all the campus "leaders" would have us believe. The only crime that Mr. Buckley is guilty of that he is not a "liberal." The "liberals" have created this whole hysterical issue in an attempt to discredit Mr. Buckley and the conservative position. Mr. Buckley's address was worth far more than $450 because he has exposed the true nature of "liberalism" for the entire campus to see.

Mr. Buckley fulfilled all the requirements of a visiting speaker. He challenged the students of this campus to think. He stimulated discussion. And he gave us even more. By presenting an address that was published in the current issue of "Playboy," Mr. Buckley gave everyone on this campus an opportunity to compare his views with the views of his antipode, Norman Mailer. Judging from the response that Mr. Buckley received from his audience, few present had read the "Playboy" article. Those present got an excellent lecture, and the unique opportunity to reread what they had heard at a latter date. As far as those present were concerned, they were hearing an original lecture. Mr. Buckley's lucid observations on the failure of "liberalism" at the Berlin Wall and in Cuba are important and deserve serious thought. Anyone who wishes to know what Mr. Buckley said can simply open a copy of "Playboy" to page 110.

One issue remains, however. Mr. Buckley was given permission by Mr. Mayer to change his topic to "The Nature of the Right Wing" upon his arrival at Chapel Hill. Now that Mr. Buckley is gone, are we going to injure the reputation of this University by refusing to honor our obligation to Mr. Buckley? I hope not. And I hope that those who dislike Mr. Buckley will not use their difference of opinion as justification to default on a contract. If they do, will we ever be able to claim that the University of North Carolina really stands for "academic freedom?" Indeed, the words will forever have a hollow ring.

Student Hits NAACP 'Cell'

To the Editors:

The constant agitations of the local NAACP cell are changing me from a liberal-minded Northerner into a bigoted Southerner.

I am in favor of granting the Negroes of our country their civil rights but along with these civil rights come the responsibilities of good citizens. So far the Negroes have shown themselves unwilling or unable to assume these responsibilities.

A prime example of this irresponsible attitude is Washington, D. C. Along with an increase in the colored population has come a very high crime and vice rate, which is still climbing. Simeon Booker, Washington bureau chief of Ebony, Tan and Jet magazines said, "Negro leadership in Washington has a responsibility to tackle the problem of rowdyism and juvenile delinquency, not by excuses or statements, but by planned community-wide programs. Integration demands responsible citizens, and we must take the first step."

When Negroes prove themselves morally capable to assume the responsibilities of good citizens their full civil rights will follow naturally.

O Great Otelia, You Know All–?

To the Editors:

I was so happy to read the letter by Mrs. Otelia Connor which appeared in the DTH on December 11. This showed me that people in this country know exactly what the communists are going to do. For many years I had felt that part of this was a closely guarded secret, but now I can see that we have nothing about which we need to worry.

Otelia stated that what she knew about Communists on campus she read in the papers. Tell me, does this hold true for all Communists? If so, then I have either been reading the wrong newspapers or have neglected to read thoroughly those which are available to me. I am afraid that I missed those stories telling our nation about Communist plans to blockade Berlin in 1948, then to build the Berlin Wall a few years later. I also missed the article by Tass reporter Khrushchev explaining how the U.S.S.R. planned to put offensive bases in Cuba. Evidently, I have missed the most important news stories of our time.

What the Communists have done in the past, without our knowing it, leads me to fear what they might have up their sleeve for the future. However, going by past records of the John Birchers, I cannot say that I fear what they are planning to do. Maybe a little conservatism would be good for the liberal persons who do not mind what the Communists are doing.

May I say that since Otelia Connor knows all of the Communists' plans for the future, why not let President Kennedy, Congress, and all of the free world in on the secret, so that we will have nothing to fear, or at least know what to fear.

On Meeting Books You Cannot Read; . . . More On UNC

By RICHARD MCKENNA

Second In A Series

Americans of Japanese ancestry were being dispossessed and imprisoned. The mood of the people, as I sampled it in the places where I went ashore, seemed to me almost that of a lynch mob. A few unpleasant experiences quickly taught me that it was dangerous to speak my thoughts and possibly a sin even to think them. I had to relieve my feelings with drunken mutterings to which no one listened. I ached with self-contempt and a shattering sense of opposed loyalties which I could not reconcile. I was undergoing a genuine crisis of faith and I began dimly to understand at last what Nietzsche was talking about.

I went all through the war in that state. Thinking back to it now, I am reminded of a verse from Kipling:

It is not learning, grace nor gear,
Nor easy meat and drink,
But bitter pinch of pain and fear
Which makes creation think.

For it was then for the first time in my life that I began to think, deliberately to think, as clearly and as coldly as I could. For the first time I began to read books in clear, conscious pursuit of the thought in them. I was no longer seeking entertainment only, but information and the hope of a way out of pain. I would no longer skip over a difficult passage after a brief puzzlement. I would worry at it for an hour and only leave it undigested, if I had to, with a sense of baffled defeat. I was gaining an entirely new conception of the nature of books and the way a man must read them.

The time was propitious for that change in my bent. The men around me were a cross-section of civilian America temporarily in uniform and there was always someone with whom I could discuss ideas. With my modest share of wartime prosperity I could buy any book that I wanted. The paper-bound armed forces editions began coming aboard ship. Few of them were froth and many were very solid books indeed. I had never before read so many books of worth and substance, one after another. And one of those armed forces paperbacks, I thought privately at the time, almost literally saved my life. Now I think a more accurate word would be salvaged.

* * *

That book was Thoreau's "Walden." I know it has long meant much to many people. But I doubt whether it has often happened that "Walden," or any other book, has come so providentially into the hands of a man so desperately in need of it. It showed me a middle way between trying to be a Nietzschean herd-man and trying to be a Nietzschean superman and failing at both. It not only gave me back my sense of personal worth and significance, it established that sense more firmly in me than I had ever had it since I had become a man. For the first time since childhood I knew again certainly that I had a right to exist, that I really did exist. I could read "Walden" with the emotional response proper to poetry and at the same time understand it rationally. The book seemed to me so radically subversive that I wondered how it could be permitted aboard any ship in wartime.

Well, I will not go on about "Walden." No doubt I have read many a better book when I was not so peculiarly ready to make a total response to it. Perhaps it is only possible to have a book-experience such as mine with "Walden" once in a lifetime and a great many other books can trigger and serve it. But for me it was "Walden," and from it I shaped a new future for myself. I planned to retire from the navy to a cabin in the Nevada desert, stock it with books, and live there as simply and richly as Thoreau had lived by Walden Pond. I began accomulating books for that purpose. I went on reading books with an even stronger will to know and to understand.

And now at last I come to something I hope may be of genuine professional interest. My design was to gain a formal education, to acquaint myself with all areas of thought, simply by reading books. I kept at it year after year, I was very resolute about it, and in the end I had to acknowledge failure. I was forced to conclude that, for me at least, there was no substitute for a college education.

I met books that I could not read. I spent months on some of them. I suspected that the treasure they withheld from me was proportional in richness to the difficulty of getting at it. I would start over again and again, trying to pinpoint the precise page and then paragraph and finally the single word at which my comprehension began to fail. I would squint and scratch my head and chew my pencil. I would writhe my feet and ankles in among the rungs of my chair and sometimes I would grip a book hard enough to tear it. When the unconscious physical expression of my frustration reached that pitch I would become conscious of it and relax and laugh.

At those times I would be irresistibly reminded of the Hong Kong rats so frantic to break their egg. Once I had laughed at them and now by some transhuman justice I was in their predicament. No rats were present to laugh at me, so I laughed for them.

To begin with, I had thought a dictionary would be all the help I would need. I did not give up that notion easily. I don't know how many times I looked up the word ontology and grasped at it as futilely as the Hong Kong rats would bite at their egg. I used to go into bookstores and look up that word in every dictionary they had, vowing to buy the first one in which I could understand the definition. I never found such a dictionary.

* * *

What I did discover was the existence of a kind of vocabulary of higher order, a fundamental outfit of ideas which the writers of the books I could not read assumed their readers to possess. The ideas would appear on the printed page only as a casual reference or a literary allusion, yet a full knowledge of them was necessary in order to follow the author's argument. I began to understand it as a kind of shorthand of thought which permitted the author to convey to the initiated clearly on one page what might require fifty pages to be made clear to my more limited comprehension. It was not enough to be literate in letters; one had also to be literate in ideas. When I had learned the hard way, I decided that I must attend a university before retiring to my desert Walden.

. . . A Funny Letter Happened To Us . . .

(Eds. Note: The Tar Heel always is interested in writings full of humor and amusement. For this reason the following letter from the Raleigh News and Observer is reprinted.)

To the Editor: Will Rogers said all he knew was what he read in the papers. All I wish I didn't know is just what I read in these now desegregated newspapers. Not since Moses married the Ethiopian woman has there been so much uproar and wrath in the camp. If our ancestors could come back here and see how we are running the country and carryin' on they would be greatly grieved that they ever fired the shot heard 'round the world, and if Honest Abe, the original freedom rider, could get back to the White House, I believe that he would strike out the Emancipation Proclamation on the grounds that the cure is worse than the disease.

A man who has property and decides that he wants to use it in a public way to make money, soon finds out he doesn't own it. While the people were licking the lollypops of socialism, Cousin Ike, the great crusader and his head reformer Justinian Warren, confiscated all property under the liberal construction of the general welfare clause of the Constitution. This great liberal construction of the general welfare clause nullified the rest of the Constitution, except habeas corpus and it left it pretty shaky. Judges can nullify the habeas corpus by making bonds so high that nobody can sign one except Nelson A. Goldwater or John F. Rockefeller.

Socialism is infiltrating so fast that The Saturday Evening Post comes out on Tuesday. The public debt has gotten so high that we don't count up any more, we use the countdown. Congress has thrown such big chunks of our money all over the world that tax collectors are trying to collect taxes before we know what the amount is going to be.

If Patrick Henry was living today he would say, give me death, this kind of liberty is too much for me. But in spite of all our self made tyranny and in the midst of our confusion, the true Christian can be happy and full of great joy. He knows that the world is sick with the kind of disease that the weak disciples can't heal. It will take the personal return of the Lord. Keep looking up.

Money Comes To Chapel Hill For Scientists And J-School

A $15,400 grant from the National Science Foundation has been given to a UNC professor of botany Dr. Victor A. Greulach. He will be one of 30 participants in the Foundation's conference on plant physiology.

The National Science Foundation has given grants totaling $406,000 to colleges and universities in support of 24 conferences for teachers of science, mathematics and engineering.

The School of Journalism of the University of North Carolina has received a grant of $1,000 from Reader's Digest Foundation to finance individual grants to students writing news and feature articles during 1963.

* * *

Expenses incurred in gathering material and doing research for articles will be covered at the discretion of Dean Norval Neil Luxon. The grant specifies that allocations from the fund are "intended to enhance the values of the journalistic training and experience of your students."

Dean Luxon said that grants will be made to students in courses in Reporting Public Affairs, Feature Writing, Communication and Opinion, International Communications and Comparative Journalism, and others.

A $20,000 grant from the National Science Foundation has just been awarded to Dr. Elizabeth A. McMahan, assistant professor of Zoology at UNC.

Awarded Jan. 1, the grant is for three years of research on termite behavior and colony organization. Practical applications of the study may lead to more effective methods of pest extermination.

Banking Film To Be Shown Here Tonight

"The Road To Better Living," a film on mortgage banking, has been donated to the University by the Cameron-Brown Company of Raleigh. The film was produced by the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, a national organization of mortgage originators and investors.

Its first showing will be tonight in Carroll Hall at 8:00. Mr. Claude E. Pope, vice president of Cameron-Brown, will make the presentation to Mr. J. B. Flynn of the Business School, who will accept on behalf of the University.

The program is being co-sponsored by Alpha Kappa Psi and Delta Sigma Phi, professional business fraternities. All students and faculty members are invited to attend.

UNC Graduate Named Tulane Grad Dean

Tulane University has appointed an alumnus of the University of North Carolina to the post of dean of the Tulane graduate school effective Feb. 1.

He is Dr. John L. Snell, professor of history at Tulane, a specialist in modern European and diplomatic history.

Born in Plymouth, N. C., and raised in Columbia, N. C., Dr. Snell received his bachelor of arts degree in 1946, a masters degree in 1947, and his doctor of philosophy degree in 1950. All degrees were received from the University of North Carolina.

Dr. Snell will succeed Dr. Robert M. Lumiansky, who received his doctor of philosophy degree from the University of North Carolina in 1942.

Dr. Lumiansky requested to be relieved of administrative responsibilities to devote fulltime to teaching and research.

The thirty-nine year old Dr. Snell began his teaching career at North Carolina. He later served on the history faculties at the University of Tennessee, University of Wichita and the University of Michigan. He joined the Tulane faculty in 1953.

Satellite Launched

VANDENBERG AFB, Calif. (UPI) — The Air Force launched a secret satellite Monday — possibly of the Discoverer series — toward polar orbit.

In a brief one-sentence announcement by the Air Force Systems Division, a spokesman said only that the satellite employed a Thor Agena booster combination — the same as that used in all Discoverer launches from this Pacific Coast missile base.

EDUCATION SENIORS

You are required to take National Teacher Examinations. Bulletins of information complete with applications may be obtained from the University Testing Service, Room 019, Peabody Hall. Applications must be mailed by January 15th to avoid late fees. In case of doubt, come to room 101 Peabody Hall.

Mexican Teachers To Visit Here As Part Of Exchange

To further an exchange of ideas and materials related with teacher education, 30 Mexican school teachers will be the guests of the UNC School of Education today through Saturday.

As a part of an "interinstitutional affiliation project" established in 1957 between UNC and the Escuela Normal Superior in Mexico City, the teachers will attend special meetings and lectures at UNC.

Included in the program will be special lectures in Spanish for non-English speaking teachers; bus tours of the campus, Duke University, the L. & M. Tobacco factory, the State Capitol, and N. C. State College; visits to University classes: seminars; a tour of the Morehead Building and a planetarium show: and a party given by Phi Delta Kappa and the Student NEA.

Sponsors of the project are the Frank Porter Graham Chapter of the Student National Education Association, the Beta Theta chapter of Phi Delta Kappa Fraternity, the UNC School of Education, the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education and the U. S. Information Service. Dr. Arnold Perry, dean of the School of Education, arranged the visit.

United States Steel has set up a $2,775,000 program of aid to education.

Orientation Head For Women Sought

Interviews are being held this week for all women students interested in applying for Women's Coordinator of the Campus Orientation Program.

Applicants should sign up for interviews in the office of Graham Memorial as soon as possible, chairman Archie Davis announced. They are being held from 2 to 5 p.m. in room 212.

Interviews will be served on a first come first served basis. Davis stressed the need for a capable person to fill this responsible and challenging position.

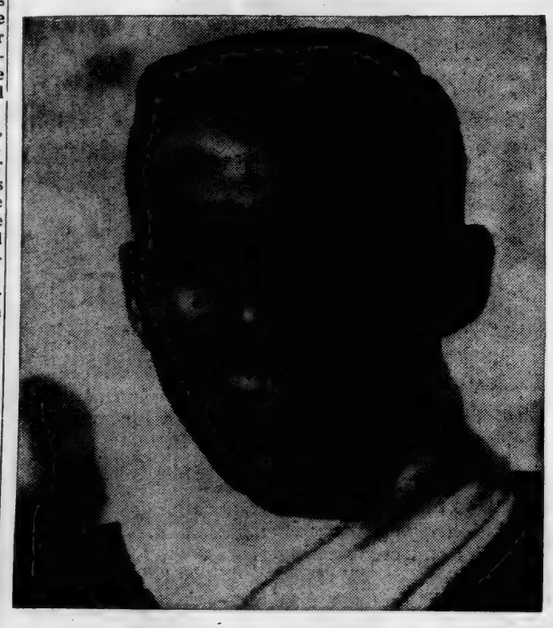
Former Tar Heel, Jimmy Beatty, Is Nation's Top Amateur Athlete

By JOEL BULKLEY

"In American athletics today, Jim Beatty is one of the finest examples of the saying that hard work is its own reward," commented varsity track coach Dale Ranson yesterday.



Ranson was referring to the recent announcement by the AAU in New York that miler Beatty was to be this year's recipient of the Sullivan Award for the "amateur athlete who, by performance, example and good influence did the most to advance the cause of good sportsmanship during the year."

Beatty, a 1956 graduate of UNC, starred for the same coach Ranson on the cross-country, indoor and spring track teams during his three years on the varsity. While doubling as a one and two-mile runner here, he won 11 individual ACC titles and added three second place finishes in his five appearances in the NCAA championships, along with two firsts in the Penn Relays.

It was last February 10 in Los Angeles, however, that the former North Carolinian made his greatest effort. He became the first miler to break the four-minute barrier indoors with a 3:58.9 performance.

The little, five-foot-six, 140-pound whiz became the 22nd track star to win the award, being named on 329 of the 636 ballots in a poll of amateur sportsmen, former winners of the award and sportswriters. Last year's winner was another track standout, Wilma Rudolph.

Coach Ranson said yesterday that he and the University of North Carolina were proud to honor Beatty this past fall with a banquet here and a presentation during the half-time of the UNC-Wake Forest football game in late October.

Jim Beatty

Besides the Sullivan Award, which he will receive in New York in February, he has been honored by the states of California and North Carolina as their "athlete of the year." Also ABC television, the Helms Foundation and the Los Angeles Times have tabbed him "Mr. Athlete of 1962. He was the only athlete listed among the Top Ten Young Men in the country by the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Ranson noted that former Hungarian Olympic track coach Mihalev Igloi, Beatty's present tutor at the Los Angeles Track club, deserves a great amount of credit for Jim's recent successes. It has been his guidance that has helped Jim achieve the National AAU indoor championship for the past two years and the outdoor championship in 1962. Ranson added that Mr. Igloi was at Chapel Hill from January to May in 1957.

Although his plans for the future are indefinite now, Beatty may enter the Pan-American Games to be held in Brazil in April and may compete in the 1964 Olympic Games in Tokyo, Ranson reported.

The 27 year old Beatty is the first runner to hold simultaneously all American records from 1,500 meters to 5,000 meters and his seven record performances this past year are unparalleled in American track annals.

UNC Ranks 12th In Basketball Ratings

From UPI Reports

North Carolina's Tar Heels made their way into the nation's top dozen in this week's United Press International basketball ratings after polishing off Yale and Notre Dame in their final non-league games of the regular season.

For the third straight week, Cincinnati (11-0) was a unanimous choice for the top spot in the balloting of the 35-man UPI board of coaches.

Loyola of Chicago won three games last week and ran its record to 13-0, the best in the nation, but remained 60 points behind Coach Ed Jucker's Bearcats. Cincinnati scored a 63-50 triumph over Wichita (ranked eighth last week) for its 29th consecutive victory dating back to last season.

Georgia Tech, with a 9-0 record, and Mississippi State (9-2) were this week's newcomers to the top 10 group as Kentucky and Oregon State dropped out. Georgia Tech jumped all the way from 13th place to seventh for its first appearance of the season in the select group. Mississippi State advanced from 11th place to eighth.

There was no change this week in the top four rankings, Illinois (9-1) and Arizona State (12-1) retaining the No. 3 and 4 spots. Ohio State (9-1) moved up one notch to No. 5 and Duke jumped three places to No. 6.

Wichita (9-3) and UCLA (10-4) completed the top 10 ground in ninth and 10th places.

The coaches based their ratings on games played through Saturday night, Jan. 5, prior to Monday night's Illinois-Ohio State game.

Wichita fell only one notch after losing to Cincinnati but UCLA dropped from fifth to 10th after a pair of narrow defeats at the hands of Washington.

In points, distributed on a 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis for votes from first to 10th places, Loyola had 290, topping Illinois by 71. Arizona State had 177 points, Ohio State 159 and Duke 157.

Oregon State, 10th last week, dropped to 11th place, followed by North Carolina. West Virginia and Colorado State University were tied for 13th place, with Kentucky, Auburn, Colorado and St. Joseph's, Pa. filling the ratings between 15th and 18th. Stanford, Wisconsin, California and Utah State were tied for 19th place.

Cincinnati goes on the road this week to play North Texas State and Tulsa while Loyola's only game is against Marquette. Arizona State entertains two Rocky Mountain visitors, Brigham Young and Utah.

Duke and Georgia Tech each take on a pair of unranked teams, the Blue Devils meeting Navy and Clemson, while Tech plays Georgia and Mississippi. Wichita faces a pair of tougher opponents in St. Louis and Bradley.

FORUM AGREES TO PAY BUCKLEY'S FULL FEE

Protest Made To Agent In Letter

By Kinnon McLamb

Carolina Forum Chairman Henry Mayer has notified William F. Buckley Jr. and Buckley's agent that the full $450 fee will be paid for his controversial Dec. 10 speech, although he told him "we most assuredly feel that your moral obligation to The Forum has not been met."

The concession followed nearly a month of controversy and correspondence between Buckley and Mayer, who charged that the conservative editor of the National Review had violated the spirit of the contract by reading from an article published in Playboy magazine. Buckley had been expected to speak on the topic, "Freedom and the Welfare State."

In a letter addressed to Mrs. M. Catharine Babcock, Buckley's agent, Mayer stated that although the Forum does not believe that it has been treated fairly, it does not intend to counter such conduct with undignified behavior of its own.

"We will therefore honor our written contract to pay Mr. Buckley $450 for his Chapel Hill participation," Mayer added.

The letter was written after consultation with Inman Allen, student body president, and Student Body Vice-President Mike Lawler.

Following is the full text of the letter:

"Dear Mrs. Babcock:

"You have denied the Carolina Forum's application for an adjustment of Mr. William F. Buckley's fee on the grounds that your agency only obligated itself to produce Mr. Buckley for participation in a program.' The contract to which you refer also contains the phrase, 'if the above is in accord with your understanding,' and since our understanding was that the program was to have been a lecture by Mr. Buckley, The Forum is not at all certain that this obligation has been faithfully discharged.

"We requested Mr. Buckley's services as a professional lecturer. We selected a topic, 'Freedom and the Welfare State,' from Mr. Buckley's standard set of lectures. We heard, however, the reading of an article currently available in published form. A lecture is a specific formulation of a speaker's views presented orally to an audience. Regardless of the age of the speech, or the number of times it has been delivered, it is unique because it is a presentation not elsewhere available. The reading of a published article is not a lecture. The distinction should be clear.

"If, in requesting permission to deviate from the original lecture topic, Mr. Buckley had explained to me that his alternative was the Playboy article, I would not have accepted the change. No such explanation was offered, and consequently, The Forum believes that Mr. Buckley's participation was not in accordance with our understanding. Thus, although the written obligation to appear on a program may have been met, the understanding concerning our contracted lecture was not honorably fulfilled.

"It is indeed a pity that The Forum's business discussion with your agency had been distended & discolored by the lengthy letter Mr. Buckley addressed to the UNC Student Body. You, if not your employee, realize that The Forum is questioning only our contracted understanding and is not implying any substantive criticism of either a personal or political nature of Mr. Buckley's reading.

"In arrangements of this sort, both parties have obligations both written and understood, which should be met. Although The Forum does not believe that it has been treated fairly, it does not intend to counter such conduct with undignified behavior of its own. We will therefore honor our written obligation to pay Mr. Buckley $450 for his Chapel Hill participation, although we most assuredly feel that your moral obligation to The Forum has not been met. Our business is to promote student discussion through the presentation of controversial speakers. Your business is business, and I would assume that both organizations have acted in a manner befitting their respective functions.

"Sincerely yours,
"Henry E. Mayer"

A Discussion Before The Speech

UNC President William Friday Talks With Sanford

Tshombe Surrenders To Thant Ultimatum

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI) —Katanga President Moise Tshombe bowed Tuesday to secretary General Thant's ultimatum to restore peace in the Congo, high diplomatic sources reported.

The ultimatum of Dec. 31 gave Tshombe two weeks to negotiate Katanga's return to the Congo as a defeated power or face further U. N. military action.

The diplomatic sources said Tshombe today publicly stated his desire to reestablish peace, to accept Thant's plan for reuniting the Congo and to abstain from any attack on the U. N. forces.

The sources said Thant expressed his satisfaction that his main conditions had been met.

The diplomatic sources said Tshombe made his statement over Radio Katanga and that the message was received in Brazzaville, in the former French Congo. Talks on Katanga's return to the central government could start as early as Wednesday, the sources said.

ELISABETHVILLE, Katanga, The Congo (UPI) — A solemn and sad-eyed Katanga President Moise Tshombe gave up Tuesday and came to Elisabethville to talk peace. He was promptly snubbed by United Nations Under Secretary Ralph Bunche.

It appeared that Tshombe had waited too late to save his tottering regime although his gendarmerie was reported to have put teeth in his threats of a scorched earth policy by mining the dams and power stations he still controls at Kolwezi.

Bunche advanced his departure several hours to avoid the embarrassment of telling Tshombe he did not want to see him. Bunche was backed by Secretary General Thant who put Tshombe on notice the U. N. would have no dealings with him unless he proclaims his allegiance to the central Congolese government.

The Belgian-owned Union Miniere in a statement issued in Brussels indicated Tshombe might have a powerful bargaining weapon. It said Tshombe's gendarmerie had placed explosive charges at dams and power stations in the Kolwezi area and that their destruction would be "fatal to the economic life of Katanga and the Congo. It said the hydro-electric stations there supply three-quarters of Katanga's electricity and that they were completely at the mercy of the gendarmerie.

U. N. officials here made it clear Tshombe was acceptable only as a beaten foe ready to negotiate.

Informed diplomatic and U. N. sources said the best he can hope to salvage from the political wreckage of Katanga is the provincial presidency of South Katanga under the direction of Premier Cyrille Adoula's Central Congolese government.

The outlook for Tshombe was dismal. The U.N. forces have occupied almost every strategic mining center in Katanga except Kolwezi and the central government in Leopoldville has placed administration of the secessionist province under a Leopoldville man.

Educational TV Boost Is Planned

By MARY REGAN

A group of prominent citizens met recently in Asheville to encourage the development of the statewide educational television network recently recommended by the North Carolina Commission on Educational Television. The group called for the inclusion of Western North Carolina communities in the inital development of the network.

The Commission plan recommends the activation of the necessary additional channels to effect full statewide coverage of educational television programs.

WUNC-TV, Channel 4, a member of National Education Television, is the only North Carolina television station devoted strictly to educational programs.

One of the NET series carried by WUNC, "The House We Live In", can be viewed every Tuesday evening at 8:30. This series is an examination of moral, scientific, and theological evaluations of man in relationship to the environment that he is now able to alter or destroy substantially.

On Jan. 15, Arnold J. Toynbee states that spare time may well be the origin of all civilization. On Jan. 22 Theodosius Dobszhanzky discusses whether natural selection is working as we want. A.M.M. Payne points out on Jan. 29 that civilizations have often unwittingly destroyed themselves.

"The Biblical Perspective," a program originating at WUNC, can be seen at 9:00 p.m. on Thursdays. Dr. Bernard Boyd, professor of Biblical Literature will discuss the problem of the authority and relevance of the Scriptures.

"The Biblical Concept of Judgment" will be discussed tomorrow night and "Does the Bible Teach Immortality?" on Jan.17.

Monday nights at 7:30, WUNC carries discussions of the order and fairness in court decisions and other legal topics discussed for the non-lawyer. Dr. Thomas Christopher of the University School of Law moderates "With Due Process".

This month's discussions include "A Legal Approach to Divorce"—A discussion of divorce system, on Jan. 14; Jan. 21, "Criminal Law"—an analysis of fundamental concepts in criminal law; and Jan. 28, "Justice in the Courtroom"—A discussion of what justice in the courtroom means to the judge and to the lawyer and what the court is trying to do in settling disputes.

"Tempests In Our Teapot" (WUNC) is an analysis of political theories and government at all levels. Dr. Gordon Cleveland, UNC Department of Political Science, is host every Tuesday night at 9:00.

January programs include "Crisis in the Halls of Justice and Court Improvement," or "Justice: Not only Blind but With an Arm in a Sling;" "Taxes: Who Buys the School Roads, When, Where, Why, and With What" and "Taxes: Are There Better and Worse Kinds?"

Musical programs presented by Hill Hall are on the air at 7:30 p.m. on Thursdays and programs from the Woman's College School of Music at 8:00 p.m. Wednesdays.

Federal Jury Looks Over Walker Case

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI)—A federal grand jury met behind closed doors Tuesday to consider charges brought against Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker and 10 others arrested in connection with the University of Mississippi rioting. For the first time in the history of the Northern Mississippi Federal District, two women were included on the 16-member panel that will decide whether indictments should be returned.

Those taken into custody during the "Ole Miss" rioting were confronted with a wide variety of charges, including rebellion, insurrection and conspiracy to oppose the authority of the United States.

The violence broke out when U. S. marshals, acting under federal court order, escorted James H. Meredith—the first Negro student in the school's history—onto campus.

Meredith hinted Monday he would not remain at the university next semester unless "definite and positive changes are made." He did not specify exactly what he had in mind, but apparently referred to the harassment which he says had made it difficult for him to study.

A crowd of about 200 student jeered the Negro student Monday shortly after he made the statement. They taunted him with shouts of "goodbye James," and "publicity hound."

By Tuesday, however, things had calmed down again and Meredith drew only a few stares as he walked the campus en route to classes.

'Look Beyond Campus,' Sanford Tells Faculty

Governor Asks For More Cooperation

By HARRY W. LLOYD

Governor Terry Sanford yesterday asked the UNC faculty to take a greater interest in the furthering of every phase of North Carolina's education program. "All projects," he said, "from the lowly illiterate's needs to the problem of awarding doctoral degrees, should fall within your sphere of interest."

The Governor spoke to the members of the Faculty Club in the club's lounge.

"The faculty member cannot shut himself off from the needs of the state," Sanford said. "Our problems are your problems, and your problems are ours."

The Governor spoke to quell disturbance that has arisen over the problem of further consolidation of the university system in the state.

"As the University becomes larger and more complex, and as the problems of the State become more pressing, the relationship between the University and the State certainly is going to change," he said. "That is part of a frontier situation, for we are not finished with either State or University, nor have we defined finally the relationship which binds them together.

Free from Pressure

"Let me assure you that I well understand that the University must insist on its right to be free of political nagging and pressure; at the same time, it must be bound by loyalty to the life of the people."

The Governor said that the University must realize its dual responsibility by binding itself to the people of the state, but nevertheless looking beyond this state's borders to "the larger community of learning."

"This involves the balance between what is old and what is new," he said. It is not part of the old concept of universities that this relationship between a people and a university be so close. Yet it is part of the older concepts of this University.

Areas of Concern

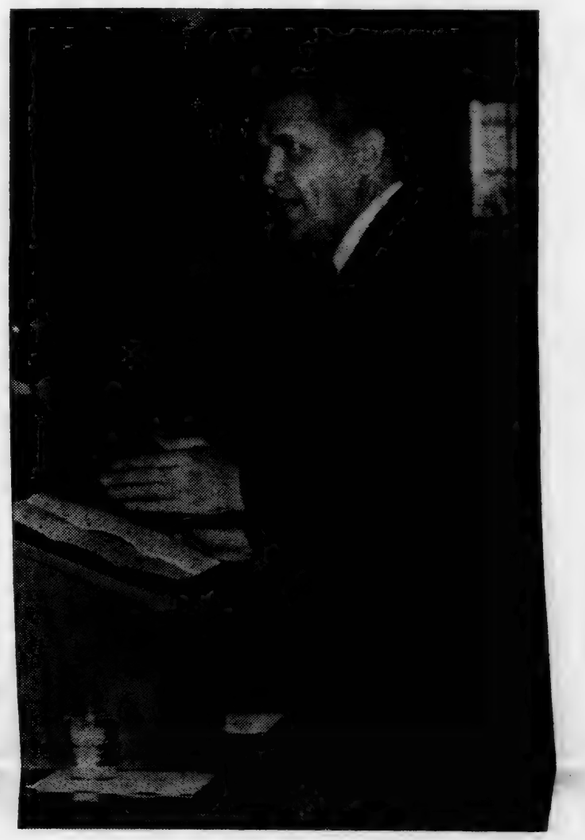
"I invite you to participate even more fully in the solutions which must be found for our people in the State and South, as we move toward the 21st century."

He mentioned three areas of concern for each faculty member, so that each citizen of the state might be given" a chance to develop fully all that is his own."

The first area was that of adult education. "I take the statistics concerning the illiteracy rate of our people, and I worry about them. So do many of you," he said.

"I believe your response is 'what in the world can we do?' Most of us hold with Edward Kidder Graham when in 1915 in his inaugural speech he said that 'the State University is the instrument of democracy for realizing all of the high and healthful aspirations of the State.'"

Sanford praised the local effort to increase literacy among university employes, "to be known as Jones University in Chapel Hill," he remarked, alluding to the current controversy over changing the name of the consolidated university. "Later we hope to have 'Jones University at Asheville,' or other North Carolina cities. I don't think we could get a Jones University at Raleigh."



Secondly, he asked for efforts to improve public school education, which must come, he said, with an increase in the number of teachers. He said that the University had not been meeting its quota as regards to training the proper number of teachers.

Schools Related

"The University and the public schools are related, are blood kin," he said. "The University is resourced in the public schools, and the public schools are resourced in the University. They go up or down together," he said, quoting Frank Graham's inaugural address.

The third plank he mentioned was that of university extension work. "We need to give more and better instruction to ambitious adults who never got to college." In this field we stressed the importance of educational television, night schools, and the Extension Division of the University.

"Just as our problems are immense, our opportunities are great. Our people are ready to move ahead. We will need your help every step of the way, your help as thinkers, as teachers, as citizens. We will need the help of Carolina alumni, who will, I trust, continue to have the same inclination toward state service which has so distinctly marked past generations of alumni of this institution. That inclination will be born, if it is, in your classrooms."

Congress To Open Session 88 Today

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Democratic - controlled 88th Congress opens Wednesday with President Kennedy apparently assured of victory in his first test of strength—a battle for control of the powerful House Rules Committee.

At a pre-opening party caucus, House Democrats overwhelmingly endorsed the President's request that the committee be kept at 15 members. This would assure the administration enough votes to block any committee attempt to pigeon-hole Kennedy legislation.

House Republicans were set to oppose what they called the President's attempt to "pack" the committee. But with some defections expected on both sides, a Kennedy triumph appeared likely at the opening day showdown.

The test was scheduled to come shortly after Speaker John W. McCormack, D-Mass., gavels the 258 House Democrats and 176 Republicans to order at noon. Democratic leaders predicted an administration victory by at least 10 votes—five more than in a similar 1961 test.

JFK Holds Briefing

An opening day rules fight also could erupt in the Senate where the 67 Democrats and 33 Republicans again will be asked whether they want to change Senate rules to make it easier to cut off filibusters. But indications were this batttle would be delayed until after the President delivers his State of the Union message, tentatively set for Monday.

The President returned Tuesday from a 19-day Florida stay for a White House meeting at which leaders of both parties were briefed on the 1963 outlook, chiefly in the foreign affairs and defense fields.

Participating in the session were Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara, Secretary of State Dean Rusk and John A. McCone, director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

The President was scheduled to meet Wednesday morning with just the Democratic leaders to thresh out domestic issues that are certain to give him the most trouble in the new session. Among them are his tax cut plan, aid-to-education and medical care for the aged.

Senate Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., predicted the Senate would pass the administration's medicare bill at this session. But he said it might be election-year 1964 before the House acted.

University Friendship: Heavens, Mr. Helms

We do not mind having our errors brought to our attention, heaven knows we commit a few. And we do not mind being on the receiving end of some practical jokes, for heaven knows we indulge in a few of those also. But as for pure nonsense, well, we would attempt to steer clear of that type of petty indulgence.

Granted, we are not always successful in avoiding the non-sensical, and this too is brought to our attention, but we attempt to at least keep our heads above water and out of the sand.

It would seem that there are other souls laboring in the communication media who would do well to build a raft and buy a shovel.

On Monday, January 7, 1963, Mr. Jesse Helms, on his T.V. picture show, concerned himself with a brief talk that had been delivered in Carroll Hall on Tuesday, November 13, 1962.

Mr. Helms (so we heard — we don't watch the show) read part of the so-called "speech" and noted that it had been delivered to the Carroll Hall audience by a Mr. W. W. Taylor, a Raleigh attorney and a former member of the North Carolina General Assembly.

Mr. Taylor had been kind enough to come over to Chapel Hill to serve as one of three panel members for an open discussion on "Radical Movements in Chapel Hill," a program sponsored by the National Student Association. Mr. Taylor addressed his comments to the topic of academic freedom, among others, and prefaced his remarks with the notation that they were offered as a "friend of the University."

That much we all seem to agree on.

However, Mr. Helms (so we heard—from someone who is able to watch the show) went on to close out his performance by saying that (and this is the implication, if not the exact wording) the speech "was not reported from Chapel Hill," and that perhaps "the University was not interested in Mr. Taylor's friendship."

Well, once again we must admit to not being any too sure of what Mr. Helms means; indeed, is anyone,

All we would like to do at this time is mention the fact that the story about Mr. Taylor's "speech" was reported in the DTH. There was a three-column picture of the panel and a twelve-inch story on page one, November 14, 1962.

The story began with a direct quote from Mr. Taylor, and closed with a reference to Mr. Taylor. The story was 82 inches long and 33 of them were concerned with Mr. Taylor. (He was one of three panelists. . . . In the picture, Mr. Taylor is the man with the pipe in his mouth).

We felt that it was sufficient coverage . . . sufficient at least to indicate that the University might be interested in the "friendship of Mr. Taylor."

Good heavens! We'd even be interested in the friendship of Mr. Helms. (CW)

All Quiet on the Right

The Carolina Forum's decision to pay William F. Buckley Jr.'s $450 fee, and more importantly, the manner in which that decision was made, are befitting the reputation of the University and student government.

In Mr. Mayer's letter yesterday to Catherine Babcock, Mr. Buckley's agent, he brought out several intelligent points and carefully refrained from making other points.

—There is a difference between a speech which has been given many times previously but "is unique because it is a presentation not elsewhere available", and a reading of a published article (such as the conservative editor treated the UNC students with).

—The Forum, with little comment, accepted the fact that Buckley fulfilled the technical obligations of his contract (which no one ever denied), but claimed he had not "honorably fulfilled" the spirit of the agreement.

—Mayer's letter did not enter into a sideshow battle of words with Mr. Buckley himself (which, surely, Mr. Buckley would have won, being a master of verbiage, if not thought).

—The letter did not attempt a legal hair-splitting as to whether Buckley did "participate in a program" or not.

The conclusion of this entertaining, but exhausting, battle of the students vs. carpetbagging Buckley, is welcome. The Forum has paid Mr. Buckley his full fee — as it had to, of course (unless it wished legal action), but has gentlemanly stated the reasons it withheld the money as long as it did.

. . . And we wish Mr. Buckley a successful Easter. (JC)

Rules . . .

The President's efforts to retain membership of the House Rules Committee at 15 cannot be seen as an isolated event.

It is not strictly a battle between liberals and conservatives, or between Mr. Kennedy and the GOP-Dixiecrat coalition. In the Rules fight the President seeks to take another step toward representative democracy, in the same spirit as the reapportionment of state legislatures and the recognition of the voting rights of previously disenfranchised citizens.

The Kennedy effort to keep Rules Committee membership from being reduced to 12, is not a mad power-grab. Even with 15 members last year the committee killed bills for school aid, urban affairs, mass transit and youth employment.

The President, simply, is seeking to insure a Congress where Congressmen can vote as they will for what they will (hopefully, with the President, of course), and not be unnecessarily restricted by a handful of Congressional autocrats. (JC)

"Last One In's An Old Obstructionist!"

Must Read Creatively

Passive Students: Doing What Is Expected

By RICHARD MCKENNA

Third In A Series

I knew that it would require several years but I expected it to save me a great deal of time in the long run. I meant to come out of it equipped to read and understand in a week books that might otherwise tantalize me for a month and evade me at the end of it. I meant to develop a metaphorical set of teeth and gape of jaw that could crack any egg in print.

* * *

Let me say that I found the University of North Carolina abundantly able to supply what I lacked. I can now read almost any book in English that I wish to read. In addition I can tell quite soon whether any particular book is to me worth reading. I no longer assume that anything difficult is good for me in direct proportion to its turgid impenetrability. I remember ruefully now certain almost worthless books into which I poured Herculean efforts in the old days. Those eggs were shell all the way to the center. Nothing like that can fool me now.

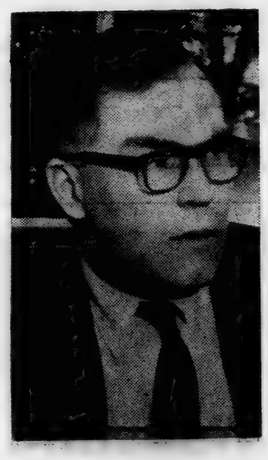
* * *

Thus I found the University of North Carolina able to supply what I knew I lacked. But I found here also other gains for which I had not bargained. I discovered other lacks of mine which I had not realized until I knew them being supplied me. And I now think those were the more important.

* * *

Each new thing I learned seemed to fit as a bridge between two things that I already knew. I had brought to the University a great, chaotic rat-hoard of miscellaneous information. As my studies progressed, I could appreciate how it was all being subtly rearranged into some kind of form and order. It was being made more useful and available to me and charged with renewed interest. It took me more than a year to understand clearly what was happening and then I learned the principle of the organizing scheme. I put to myself the problem of how to state in one sentence what I hoped to gain from the University. The answer was no longer that I wanted to learn how to read books. The new answer was itself a question: What is a man? The answer to that question was what I sought both from the University and from all the books I meant to read afterward.

* * *



From the moment I began my studies the appearance of the world began to alter for me. I mean that quite literally. I started the summer of 1953 with a course in physical geology. I was fascinated to learn the origin and history of land forms. The many slow processes that were shaping the face of the earth all around me, hitherto unknown and unnoticed, caught my eye everywhere I walked. There was a granite boulder in front of Battle Dorm that was a perfect example of spheroidal weathering. I passed it every morning and nodded to it. Sometimes, walking home up Franklin Street in a heavy rain, I would loiter for half an hour to watch part of the life history of a river valley in a rivulet cutting across the gravel sidewalk. In my mind I might be assisting at the creation of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. Thus the simplest, most unregarded things took on a new and vital interest for me. It pleased me to see change everywhere in seeming permanence. Nothing is fixed. Nothing lasts forever. That was what those poetic symbols of permanence, the very rocks themselves, were saying in stony dumb-show. There is nothing like physical geology to stretch a man's time-sense out to the breaking point.

* * *

Almost every course I took added its own kind of increment to the process I am describing. I only have time here to mention a few of them. For instance, that same beginning summer I took English 21 and discovered "Paradise Lost." We were required to read only parts of it but I read it all and some parts repeatedly. Later, in a full semester course on Milton, "Paradise Lost" became and remains for me one of the finest approaches to the secret of What is a man? that I am ever likely to find in English. But at first encounter, even with the aid of the University, I could not crack that shell.

* * *

With my first fall semester I continued geology and started botany. Botany opened for me new windows on living things. Insensibly through the years my vision had been dulled by familiarity. I looked through a microscope into the fine structure of leaves and flowers and stems. I discovered the whole world of meaningful form and color, of beauty and wonder, that lies beyond the reach of natural human vision. The cumulative experience of it sharpened my natural vision to a finer discrimination than it had ever had. What had before been a mass of unregarded green all around me as I walked became a crowding of individual forms all beautifully interrelated and full of meaning. With natural vision we see only surfaces and infer solidity. In the strangest kind of way I felt that I was learning to see in three and even in four dimensions. In the same way that I could see solidity by inference, I began almost seeing down into the piled strata of the earth, into the busy micro-structure of leaves and flowers, back through time to the seed of a plant or the form of a hill a million years ago. That vision of the mind's eye fused unbidden with the natural vision and infused the whole with wonder. I thought how William Blake could see the world in a grain of sand and heaven in a wild flower and I suspected that I might have broken into that realm of poetic experience through a door not open to men until the last few generations.

RICHARD McKENNA

* * *

By the time I knew surely that I was seeking the answer to What is a man? I was almost through with the physical sciences and well launched into the social sciences. Anthropology was another great breakthrough for me, this time through the screen of stereotyped familiarity hiding from me man and his works. It taught me new ways to look at familiar experiences. That was true of all that I learned in the University. In some measure, great or small, each course contributed to making all things new. It even made the past new. All of my memories cried out for reworking under a different light, one I had not known how to cast on them before. As I had begun by pestering Dr. White with questions about land forms remembered from my travels, so I ended by pestering Dr. Honigmann with my reminiscences of military life in China. For one term paper we were asked to write a brief anthropological description of our home towns. I had been so long gone from my home town that I wrote up a ship instead. I am now expanding that term paper into my second novel.

* * *

I never did expect to learn any education to forward a man along the way I wanted to go in the world. I have affirmed that for me the University of North Carolina was all that I had expected and far more. But I could not help knowing that many of the youngsters in the classes I at final or complete answer to What is a man? I would almost instinctively have rejected any that was offered me. The nearest thing I have to an absolute conviction is the sense that man himself is neither final nor complete and never will be in all of linear time. I always knew that I would have to put together the most satisfactory master-answer that I could from my own insights and the partial answers I could learn from other men and their books. I sought as many partial answers as I could get from science, because science is not shackled to absolutes. When some seemingly fundamental principle of science requires revision the scientists are free to revise it or scrap it without the necessity of burning large numbers of helpless people. Science leaves man room to grow and to go on discovering himself.

* * *

I was graduated from the University seven years ago and I am still busy on my quest and I do not expect to complete it any time soon. One of the many partial answers I learned in the University, however, has become so important a foundation stone for me that I would like to give it specific mention here. I found it in Dr. McCurdy's course on Personality. It is the concept of a man named Andras Angyal, who deserves to be better known than he is. He requires the whole of a rather difficult book to develop it fully so of course I cannot hope to present it adequately in a paragraph, but I will try.

* * *

Briefly and badly, then, any human life from birth to death can be understood as a gestalt in time. The linear sequence of any man's experience and behavior forms a meaningful pattern, just as do the sequential notes of a musical composition. They form a mosaic distributed in time rather than in space. The arrangement is governed by the same principles as a spatial gestalt and closure can come only with death. A human life is an integrated whole which is more than the sum of its parts. But the wholeness is not achieved, nor is the final degree of integration achieved, until death. Therefore any experience, no matter how far back it seems to lie along the time-track, is not complete either. It will not be complete until the gestalt is closed and each experience making it up is given its final significance by virtue of its place in and contribution to the whole.

* * *

The individual human past is not immutable. Everything in it is still happening and will not cease to happen until the gestalt is closed. Every past experience is subject to change, as the configuration of the forming whole is changed. Each man of us is living his own personal work of art, cannot avoid doing so, cannot evade artistic responsibility for his product, because that is one of the fundamental consequences of being human.

* * *

When I first met that thought I found it a very huge one. I have since improved my grip upon it by alternate approaches through existential philosophy, but it is still the scientific formulation of it which for me affords the most conviction. It is not a new thought. I realize now that I met a form of it once in the days before I came here, in Bergson's "Creative Evolution." That book was one of the eggs I could not crack. The thought is older than Bergson. It is contained in the proverb "While there's life there's hope," which no doubt goes back almost to the dawn of language. I never fully understood that proverb, simple as it is. It was just words. I know also that there are older and more traditional paths to something which at bottom is probably much the same as Angyal's concept, but I never found much conviction along those paths. All through this talk I have been describing the paths that I did find open. If I had come away from the University of North Carolina with nothing more than that one key bit of wisdom, my time and money would still have been very well spent.

* * *

Such wisdom as I have gained tells me that it would be wise if I stopped talking at this point. But I feel obliged to comment, however briefly, on the current controversy over American education. I will not be as bold as Admiral Rickover. I have already said as much as I know of my own knowledge: that there is no easy and perhaps no possible substitute for a university tended were not finding it anything like the enthralling experience it was to me. I observed only those few who chanced to sit near me in class and to whom I sometimes talked. I have not thought at all deeply about what I observed and what I have to convey is no more than an impression.

* * *

Overwhelmingly, my impression was of passiveness. Some of the boys seemed dutifully to sit there expecting the professors to give them an education much as they would expect a barber to give them a haircut. Others sat braced as grimly as they might in a dentist's chair. They were finding it unpleasant, but they were going to sweat it out. Whatever the emotional tone, however, the attitude seemed predominantly passive. They were undergoing an education, not undertaking it.

* * *

What I am calling passiveness is a more subtle and deeply-founded quality than I can readily convey. Probably no adjuration from without nor anything less than the most desperate act of will from within can much relieve or change it. It seems to be a kind of fundamental life-attitude which colors all effort, no matter how great. I sometimes think it springs from a self-identity founded on thingness, on a sense of the self as object plastic to events which happen to it. There is possible another sense of the self as process, as continuous event, over which the man has a measure of control and for which he has a full measure of responsibility. Probably they are complementary aspects of something unstateable in words and too much one-sidedness either way might be regrettable. I just do not know enough to talk about it.

* * *

Even the best and most eager of the students I observed, however, seemed not to be free of what I am calling passiveness. In some measure they were all doing what was expected of them and as a reward for it they expected to receive their education gift-wrapped in a piece of parchment at graduation. They seemed to lack the full pleasure of discovering their education as they went, of living it day by day, of being lured on by the continuous, exhilarating wonder of it, knowing no greater lure than that.

* * *

In my own thinking I link that passiveness with underdeveloped imagination. I am more pessimistic than Admiral Rickover. I fear it will not be enough no matter how expertly Johnny learns to read unless he also learns to read creatively. By reading creatively, or by listening creatively to a lecture, I mean getting up the same order of spiritual sweat as the writer or lecturer. I mean trying desperately to match him stride for stride instead of assuming that it is possible to get there by riding on his back. Those who can do it already will know what I mean; no amount of verbal amplification can make it clear to those trapped too much in passiveness.

* * *

I fear also that, increasingly these days, Johnny takes his bent toward passiveness and away from imagination long before he encounters the alphabet. His toys grow more elaborate and differentiated each year, restricting the freedom of his imagination. They tend to pre-program his play. His dolls and teddy bears and monsters are becoming animated and vocal with batteries and transistors. They no longer give him even the small pleasure and reassurance of winding up a spring. The toys are threatening to become more real than the children.

* * *

Yet if he did not have such toys, any normal child could could make do with a stick and a tin pot and a bundle of rags transfigured to order for any play-occasion by the unhampered power of his developing imagination. In healthy measure his toys would be his own creations. His play-worlds would be his own creations with himself in command of them instead of subject to them. Soon enough anyway the adult thing-world would close in on him. But if he had been able to play creatively, he might find it easier later in life to read and to listen and to look at the world creatively.

* * *

What I have just said springs from too insufficient base of observation to be taken at all seriously. It is the most tentative of suggestions. I have already talked myself into a position where I may be accused of wanting to shoot Santa Claus and bring American children up like starving rats. So I had better pipe down and batten my hatches. But if anyone has any questions, I will be glad to answer them as best I can.

'Books USA' Plan Goes Into Effect

BOOKS U.S.A., which will provide American books for foreign countries, was kicked off by Edward R. Murrow, Director of the United States Information Agency at a press conference in New York Dec. 14.

Murrow stated this non-profit plan, announced by five American paperback publishers, will make it possible for individuals or groups in the United States to purchase packets of paperbacks for shipment to the countries of their designation and then be distributed to libraries, schools, and other centers through the USIA. The BOOKS U.S.A. program went into effect January 1st.

Murrow stressed the need for books in underdeveloped countries, stating "Millions of men, women and children around the globe suffer the emptiness of life without books. Books are capsules of knowledge. The hunger of people abroad for knowledge is insatiable. Books are the tools of truth and freedom."

The paperback publishers conducting this program are Bantam Books, Inc.; Dell Publishing Co., Inc.; Fawcett Publications, Inc.; New American Library of World Literature, Inc.; and Pocket Books, Inc. Each of these companies will make library packets available which contain ten titles they publish in the United States. Several companies will provide three or four different packets. The books have been selected as reflecting representative American literature and life. Among the titles included in the packets are John Steinbeck's THE RED PONY, Mark Twain's LIFE ON THE MISSISSIPPI, THE SEA AROUND US by Rachel Carson, INTRUDER IN THE DUST by William Faulkner, ABRAHAM LINCOLN by Carl Sandburg, A HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES by William Miller, PROFILES IN COURAGE by John F. Kennedy, BABY AND CHILD CARE by Dr. Benjamin Spock, DEMOCRACY by Henry Adams, and FOUNDATIONS OF AMERICAN CONSTITUTIONALISM by Andrew C. McLaughlin.

The price of each BOOKS U.S.A. library packet, normally $5, is $4 which includes $3 for the cost of the books, plus $1.00 to cover packing and mailing costs. The American donor will ultimately receive acknowledgement of the gift by the overseas recipient. The 24 countries included in this program are: Argentine, Brazil, Ceylon, Chile, Finland, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Korea, Liberia, Malaya, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Rhodesia, Sudan, Tanganyipa, Thailand, Trinidad, West Indies, and Uganda.

'Man Vs. Machine' Subject Of Speech

A leading psychologist will discuss who makes the best decisions —men or machines—at a University of North Carolina Department of Psychology Colloquium Thursday, January 10, at 2 p.m. in room 105 Gardner Hall.

Dr. Ward Edwards of the Engineering Psychology Laboratory at the University of Michigan is a specialist in decision-making behavior. The title of his address is "Men Verus Machines as Probabilistic Information Processors."

The colloquium is open to the public.

Public Exhibition Of Paintings Pushed

The paintings, sculpture and drawings of gifted North Carolina artists will soon be an integral part of living and working in the School of Public Health of the University. Plans were begun this week for the selection of art works to be put on year-long exhibition in the corridors, conference rooms and offices of the school's new building.

The exhibit, to be repeated annually, will offer a pleasant, spacious facility for long-term showings of the work of the state's artists and will help create an appreciation for what such works can do to enrich the everyday life of all people. There are more than 1500 running feet of suitable wall space in the new building for the exhibition.

"It is the hope of the faculty of the School of Public Health that continued intimate contact with works of art will make an impression upon staff and students in the school to the extent that they would thereafter want to maintain in their office and in their homes something of the art and cultural heritage of North Carolina," said Dr. Daniel A. Okun, chairman of the school's committee for the exhibition.

"Art works to enrich the bare walls of public rooms and hallways and to replace the diplomas which clutter offices will, we feel, develop a warmth in the building and bring a recognition of the place of art work in the everyday life of all of us."

Assisting the School of Public Health in the administration of the exhibit is a group of North Carolina artists and art faculty. In a letter to their colleagues this week, the advisory committee members urged fellow artists to participate in the program by submitting one or two works. "We feel that an effort such as this is the beginning of a more formal support of art and artists by public agencies," they said.

It is expected that each piece of work submitted will be for sale, though this is not necessary, officials said. The artist is requested to put a price on work intended for sale, and no commissions will be retained by the school. Works for exhibition will be received during January and February, 1963, and the exhibit will be held from March 1 through December 31.

Artists who wish to participate must fill out a form, which may be obtained by writing Dr. Okun at the School of Public Health. Insurance against fire and theft up to 80 per cent of the work's value will be arranged for by the school.

It is expected that all works submitted will be exhibited, according to Dr. Okun, but the school reserves the right to reject any work which is felt to be unsuitable and will also make decisions as to locations of works submitted.

"The University does not have funds at this time for incorporating art work into its buildings nor is it reasonable to expect that in the near future funds for purchasing the paintings and sculpture required for a building this size will be available. However, the exhibiting of works of art will create the type of building we would like to have ultimately, and the gradual acquisition of works by purchase from among those exhibited will assure that in time the School will have a permanent exhibit. It is also hoped to demonstrate that public buildings, particularly in the University, are a proper setting for works of art and benefit by their display."

It is expected that class groups will purchase several pieces each year from the works exhibited for a gift to the School of Public Health.

The advisory committee aiding the school with the exhibition is composed of Ben F. Williams, curator of the North Carolina Museum of Art; Dr. John Allcott, professor of art at UNC; Mrs. Irene Reichert, Chapel Hill artist; Joe Cox, professor of painting in the School of Design at N. C. State College; Robert A. Howard, associate professor of art at UNC; Dr. Joseph C. Sloane, professor of art and director of the Ackland Memorial Art Center at UNC; Edward Wilson, of the Art Department at North Carolina College and secretary-treasurer of Associated Artists of North Carolina; and Robert M. Brodersen of the Duke University Department of Art.

January 31 has been set as the last date for receiving Submission Forms from artists and February 28 is the deadline for receiving the work to be exhibited. It is hoped that the exhibit will be open by April 1, in time for the art to be shown during the dedication of the new building. April 6 and 7, at which time announcement will be made of work selected for purchase by the School of Public Health.

UNC Profs Use Computer For Identification

Two UNC geologists are pioneering in the use of the computer for the speedy identification of minerals in sedimentary and metamorphic rocks.

David S. Snipes, a Ph.D. candidate in the UNC Department of Geology, and James R. Butler, assistant professor, are the authors of an article in the current issue of "Southeastern Geology" which describes their computer identification technique.

The computer the authors are using for their experimentation is UNC's Univac 1105.

Snipes and Prof. Butler have developed a program to feed into the computer enabling the computer to pick out the minerals in a rock. Eighty minerals have been included in this program, including most of the important rock-forming minerals of fine-grained sedimentary and metamorphic rocks and other minerals which are interesting from an economic point of view or for purposes of rock classification.

In testing their technique, the authors submitted a total of 92 rock samples to the computer. Their results were "very good" according to Snipes and Prof. Butler.

"Almost without exception, the major minerals were correctly identified by the computer method," they report.

The traditional method of identifying a rock's minerals by x-ray diffraction is to check each of the many lines in the x-ray pattern against a card file of known mineral patterns. This is comparable to checking a fingerprint against a file of several hundred fingerprints. The rocks are usually made up of several minerals, which would be analogous to several fingerprints superimposed on one another.

The geologist's task is to to separate these lines in order to identify the minerals present. In addition to being tedious, exacting work, the geologist faces a problem when the lines of different minerals overlap.

Castro Fears Red Control Of Army

NEW YORK (UPI) — Private dispatches from Havana reported Tuesday that Fidel Castro is trying to organize an army loyal only to himself because of growing alarm over Soviet control of the Cuban armed forces.

The Havana sources — Western diplomats and others — said Russians not only control the defensive rocket weapons furnished Cuba by Moscow but also heavy artillery, coastal patrol units and other modern equipment.

Both the Cuban air force and its government-controlled civilian counterpart are reported almost entirely dependent on Soviet personnel for maintenance as well as flight training.

Castro was reported actively engaged in a campaign to get former members of his disbanded 26th of July movement back into the armed forces. He also was reported appealing to students.

The sources said Castro's "pitch" to his followers was that the country had been "betrayed" by the Soviets in the recent crisis, coupled with appeals to patriotism and offers of promotions for re-enlistments.

Combo Party For Students Set At WC

An open house combo party will be held this Saturday at Woman's College in Greensboro, sponsored by the IDC and the Freshman Class.

The "Dail and the Del-hearts" combo will provide the music for this "last big blowout before exams."

A one dollar fee will provide transportation to and from Greensboro, and will also cover refreshments and entertainment.

Before the party there will be open house in dorms at WC, Jackie Harrel, Freshman Class president said yesterday.

A bus will leave at 5:45 Saturday afternoon from Y-Court. Tickets may be purchased at Lenoir Hall, Ehringhaus dorm, and after Wednesday night from all dorm presidents.

Southeast Asia Is Topic Of Seminar

On Feb. 7 a group of UNC students will travel to Washington by bus to participate in a seminar on the topic "China and the Tensions or South East Asia."

The seminar, which is open to all students, will entail a briefing session prior to the trip to Washington, and a series of meetings at the Capital with members of the State Department and Senate Foreign Relations Committee, journalists, and embassy personnel. Evenings will be free.

Applications for the seminar may be picked up at the Y office any time prior to Jan. 13, and are due by Jan. 15. The seminar will cost approximately $20.

Radio Panel Will Discuss Mass Media

"Today's Revolution: the Mass Media," an exploration of the most significant developments in human relations and education in modern time, will be the topic of WUNC radio's "Carolina Roundtable" on Thursday, January 10, at 7 p.m.

The effects and potentials of mass media on the thoughts and actions of the peoples of the world will be discussed by Dr. John Adams, associate professor of Journalism at the University of North Carolina, Dr. John S. Clayton, associate professor of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, J. A. C. Dunn of the Chapel Hill Weekly, and George Hall, station manager of WUNC-TV, Raleigh. Dr. Wesley H. Wallace, acting chairman of the department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, will moderate.

Audience questions can be directed to the panelists as usual by telephoning the WUNC radio studios at 942-3172 during the program. WUNC is heard at 91.5 on the FM dial.

UNC Debaters Tie For Tops In ACC Meet

The University of North Carolina Debate Team received honors here Saturday in the Atlantic Coast Conference Debate Tournament.

The varsity negative team, Mack Armstrong and Haywood Clayton, with a 5-1 record, tied Wake Forest for first place. The topic was: "Resolved, that the non-Communist nations of the world should establish an economic community."

The ACC Debate Tournament, in its tenth year, was conceived and set into operation at the same time as the familiar athletic conference. Approximately 60 debaters participated in the two-day meet representing the University of North Carolina, Duke University, The University of South Carolina, The University of Maryland, The University of Virginia, Clemson, Wake Forest, and Washington and Lee, who substituted for State College at Raleigh.

The University of North Carolina novice affirmative team, John Stone and Sam Jackson, tied Wake Forest for first place. The UNC novice negative split team of Barry Hyman, Dave Sentelle, Jimmy Rogerson, and Dick Brodeur, tied Duke University for third place.

A certificate of excellence in debate speaking was awarded to Armstrong. Armstrong and his partner Clayton recently swept the field at New York University taking a 5-0 record against Lehigh, Maryland, Pace, Hofstra, Dartmouth.

Dr. Donald K. Springen, Director of Debate at UNC, and Executive Secretary of the N. C. High School Debating Union, was host this year for the ACC Tournament.

Sale Of Painting Aids Sommer Fund

An oil painting has been donated to the Art Department of the University to be sold to benefit the Sommer Fund. It is an oil on canvas by Neal Thomas, Winnabow artist, who has a master of arts and has exhibited widely throughout the state in both open and invitational shows.

The painting is now hanging in the main entrance foyer of the classroom wing of Ackland Art Center. Untitled and non-objective, the multi-colored painting measures 37 by 46 inches. The sale of the canvas will be by "blind auction." In this method of auction, the individual pledges the amount of money he is willing to pay for the painting and places the pledge (but not the cash) and his name and address in a sealed envelope. At a specified time the bids are opened and the highest pledge takes the painting.

The canvas can be seen and bids will be received at the Center until February 1 at 4 p.m. All people desirous of owning a quality oil painting that would enhance a home, office, or business setting, should drop by the Art Department and leave a sealed pledge. All bids will remain confidential.

The Sommer Fund is a memorial to the late Dr. Clemens Sommer, professor of art history at the University for many years whose untimely death occurred last year. Purpose of the memorial is to recognize outstanding work in art history. At the 1963 June Commencement exercises a prize of $50 will be awarded for the best undergraduate paper in the history of art. Eventually a memorial scholarship will be established.

John Schnorrenberg, assistant professor of art history and treasurer of the Sommer Fund, said contributions are still being received and are most welcome. Checks should be made payable to John Schnorrenberg, treasurer, Sommer Fund, and addressed to him at the Art Department of the University.

Tar Heels Meet First Big Four Foe Tonight

Billy Leads UNC Against Deacons

By ED DUPREE

There's no victory bell or old wicker chair at stake, only Atlantic Coast Conference prestige, when North Carolina's Tar Heels clash with Wake Forest at Winston-Salem at 8:00 tonight.

Dean Smith's men, ranked 10th nationally by the Associated Press and 12th by the United Press International, meet a solid Demon Deacon club that has won four straight ACC battles over N. C. State, Virginia, Maryland and Clemson. Only the Clemson game was played at home, where Bones McKinney's boys are tough.

Highlighting the Baptists' 5-4 record is an easy victory over strong St. Joseph's of Philadelphia. The Deacs have bowed to Minnesota, Marquette and Florida in other non-league outings.

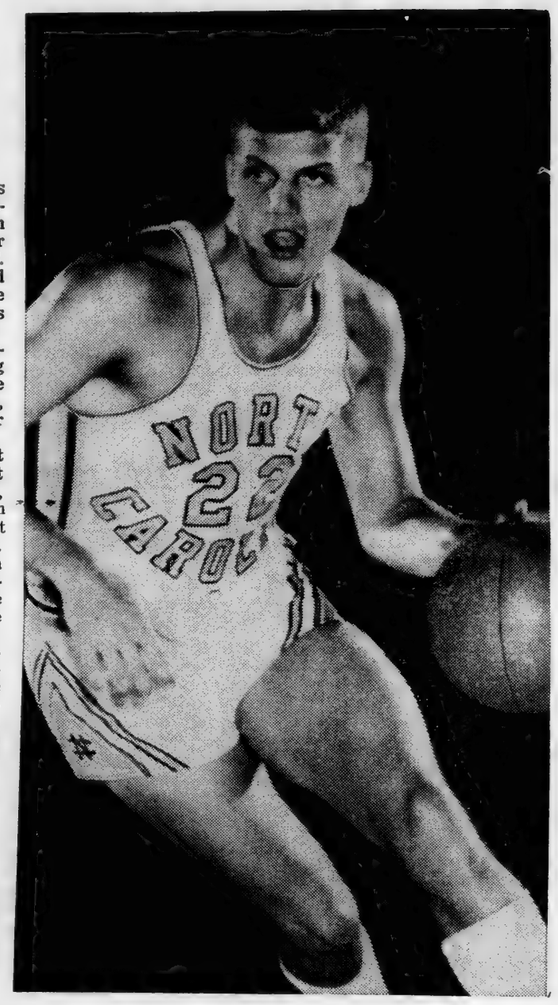
Coach Smith looks for the contest to be a tough one. He pointed out yesterday that Wake's big man, 6-10 Bob Woollard, is an off-on player. "He was on against us last year," the Tar Heel coach added.

"The Wake Forest record is a good one," Smith continued, "considering who and where they have played." (The three non-conference losses were all on the road).

The fourth loss on the Wake record was a wild-scoring 113-87 defeat to Duke in a non-conference clash between the ACC foes. Going into tonight's game, UNC, Wake and Duke are all unbeaten in conference play, so the contest could affect the league standings.

Pacing the Tar Heels in their quest for a 7-1 record will be Billy Cunningham, one of the hottest sophomores in the nation with an 18.5 average.

Brooklyn's Billy has bombed the nets for better than 25 points in three of the last four games—28 against Indiana, 29 against Yale and 26 against Notre Dame. His tremendous rebounding overshadowed a 13-point night against Kentucky.



The Tar Heel guard combination, co-captains Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet, has contributed better than 30 points a game. Poteet has a 16.3 average and Brown has his for 15.3 points a contest.

Rounding out the starting lineup are forwards Charlie Shaffer and Ray Respess with 10.6 and 8.0 averages, respectively. Mike Cooke (5.7 average), Bill Galantai and Bryan McSweeney are the top reserves.

Missing from the Baptist lineup for the first time in four years is Len Chappell, Wake's bread and butter for three seasons. Big Lennie, now with the pros, helped Wake win four of seven games against Carolina teams. UNC holds a 72-29 lead in the rivalry.

Joining the lanky Woollard in the Deacon starting quintet are Richard Carmichael and Frank Christie at the forwards and guards Dave Wiedeman and Butch Hassell. Richard Herring, Ronnie Watts and Al Koehler are the best of the reserves.

Wake has had a different high scorer in almost every game and the shooting is better than last year when the Deacs finished third in the NCAA playoffs. McKinney's troops are strong under the boards, so Cunningham, Respess and Shaffer will have their work cut out for them in that category.

Football Deaths Made Decline In 1962 Season

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—An encouraging decrease in football deaths—30 per cent lower last year than in 1961—was disclosed Tuesday in Dr. Floyd R. Eastwood's annual report to the American Football Coaches Association.

And Eastwood said the figure could be lower if there were closer regulation of gang-tackling, head tackling and face-blocking.

Eastwood is chairman of the Football Fatalities Committee for the coaches. He said football deaths totaled 37 in 1961, but dropped to 26 in 1962.

Problem Is Tremendous

Seven of 19 deaths attributed to direct participation in football occurred by mid-September, and Eastwood said the "whole problem of pre-season training is tremendous." He said that most teams had played at the most only one or two games by mid-September.

The report urged more and better supervision of football contests, citing the fact that in 31 years, 23 per cent of fatalities have occurred in unsupervised sandlot play.

Recommendations, in addition to closer regulation of controversial playing techniques, included complete physical examinations by a team physicians both before and during the season; regulation of high school competition by an age-height-weight system, and a spring practice period for all teams at least 10 to 30 days.

College Games Safer

None of the fatalities directly attributable to football play were in the college sport, and only two were indirectly attributable to college play. There were 12 high school deaths directly attributed to football, 6 in sandlot and 1 in semi-pro. Of the seven indirect four were in high school play and one, semi-pro.

Eastwood also cited conclusions that included the fact backfield players incurred more fatal injuries than linemen, with defensive players subject to somewhat more hazards than those in offense.

The present game of football is faster, demands more motor skills, greater conditioning and is more widely participated in than a decade ago," said Eastwood.

Eastwood is counselor at Los Angeles State College and started compiling an annual report on football deaths in 1931.

Dolphins Visit Wake Forest

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Carolina's varsity swimmers return to Atlantic Coast Conference action this afternoon in Winston-Salem in a meet with the Deacons of Wake Forest.

The Blue Dolphins, holders of a 5-2 season record, including a perfect 3-0 mark in the ACC, expect an easy victory today, according to coach Pat Earey. UNC has easily taken the measure of Clemson, South Carolina and Duke in league competition.

Wake Forest mentor, Leo Ellison will have only five lettermen on hand today when his squad tangles with the formidable Blue Dolphin team which is fresh from near-victories in meets at Princeton and Navy. Carolina's five-meet unbeaten string was snapped when they suffered two straight setbacks to these two intersectional foes, by a total margin of eight points, prior to Christmas vacation.

UNC's "M and M" boys, Thompson Mann and Harrison Merrill, will head Earey's lineup card today. Both bettered school and ACC records in the 200-yard individual medley and 500-yard freestyle events, respectively on their recent road trip. Merrill also figures to compete in the 200-butterfly while Mann may be entered in the 200-backstroke race.

Other starters will include Thad Adams (200 freestyle); Dick Woodrow (50 freestyle); Ernie Oare (diving); Bill Bloom (200 freestyle); Tate Kemper (200 breaststroke); Frank Lea (500 freestyle); Mike Bissell (500 freestyle); and Pete Swift (200 breaststroke).

Richie Ashburn Trades Bat For Mike, Returns To Phils

TILDEN, Neb. (UPI) — Richie Ashburn, who parlayed whistling speed with bullseye batting to become a major league star, said Tuesday he will trade his glove and bat for a microphone.

Ashburn said he was regretfully quitting after 15 years in the big leagues to become a color and inside baseball commentator for an announcing team which will handle broadcasts and telecasts for the Philadelphia Phillies next season.

"I hated to quit," he said at his home here. "But it's a good opportunity. Probably better than I could have hoped for after getting off the field. And I'd have to quit pretty soon anyway."

The 36-year-old outfielder for the New York Mets spent a dozen years with the Phils and was one of the players who helped the surprising 1950 Whiz Kids to the National League championship.

"It'll be like going home to return to Philadelphia," he said. "We've got a lot of friends there."

Ashburn, whose sharpshooting from the plate won him a pair of National League batting titles, said the lack of success by the 10th place Mets last season had nothing to do with his decision to quit.

"The fans were good and Casey (Manager Casey Stengel) was all right. The bad season didn't bother me," he said.

What did bother him, Richie said, was the probability that he would have more bench time next season. He twice led the National League in games played and once ran his string of consecutive games to more than 700.

"I want to be out on the field. That's the best part of the game. It's only good if you're playing," he said.

Ashburn turned in a sparkling career in the majors, highlighted by a lifetime batting average of 308. He was over .300 nine times, including .306 last year. He won the league batting crown with .338 in 1955 and with .350 in 1958.

Track Team Opens Season In Richmond Meet Friday

By LASZLO BIRINYI

Carolina's indoor track team will open its season Friday in the Richmond Invitational meet at Richmond, Va.

Coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton will not take the entire Tar Heel team to Richmond. John McNinch will run the 50-yard dash, Milton Bauguess will be entered in the 50-yard high hurdles, Carmine Lunetta will compete in the two-mile run and Charlie Little will handle the one-mile chores.

Jerry Stuver, who is recuperating from a leg operation, is a doubtful starter in the 880-yard run.

In addition, there will be UNC relay teams participating in the one and two-mile events.

The Tar Heel group will leave Chapel Hill Friday at noon and return the same day for a dual meet with N. C. State Saturday.

Coach Ranson is very disappointed in the fact that many of his lettermen and top prospects have failed to attend practice or have done so irregularly. He stresses that regular practice is the key to success and is hopeful that all eligible track men will report as soon as possible.

Individually, here is the breakdown of the various events: Tom Brooks, David Henry, Ronnie Jackson and Joe McLamb—all football halfbacks — along with McNinch and Ray Roberts are the dash men. McNinch has run the 60-yard dash in 6.5 seconds.

Bob Hart is the cream of the crop in the 600-yard event, which he covered in 1:13.4. Other 600 men are Don Gabriel, Maurice McDonald, Perry McCarty, John Pleasants, Lloyd Roghelia and Carlyle Stull.

Hart also leads in the 880 where his best time is 1:56.0. Bob Bennett is only one-tenth of a second behind Hart in time trials. Others in the middle-distance event are Jim Fullward, Obie Whichard, Little and Stuver.

Little is the leading man in the mile with a fine 4:17 time, but here again Bennett is a close second, only three-tenths of a second behind. Worth Helms adds depth to the mile situation.

The two-mile fun features three of Carolina's outstanding runners from the ACC cross-country championship team—Larry Henry, Jerry Smith and Carmine Lunetta—along with Bill Graham and Dave Radford. Lunetta's 9:27.6 time is the best thus far.

Milton Baugess tops the hurdlers with an 8.2 time in the 70-yard lows and 9.3 in the highs.

In the field events, Heath Whittle holds the year's best pre-season pole vault leap of 14 feet, one inch. Tom Clark's 6 foot, 4 inch jump leads the high jumping group of Clark, Bill Croom, Reinard Harkema and Ed Martin.

Croom, Pleasants and Whittle are the broad jumpers, while Bill Graham, William Hunter, Tom Henley, William Warren and Bob Lacey handle the shot put chores.

TICKETS AVAILABLE

Tickets for the Carolina-N. C. State basketball game on January 15 will be available to University faculty, employees and student athletic ticket holders at the Athletic Office in Woollen Gym. They will be distributed on a priority basis.

People whose names start with A-M will be able to pick up tickets today. Any remaining tickets will be available on a first-come first-served basis to anyone with a pass card beginning Thursday. A similar procedure will be in effect for the Wake Forest game to be played on February 9.

Frosh Basketballers Play Demon Deacon Yearlings

Two games on consecutive nights is a tough assignment for any basketball team, and especially so when the opponents are your two biggest rivals.

And that's just what has faced UNC's freshman basketball team these past two days. Ken Rosemond's cagers were in Durham last night for a game with the Blue Imps and tonight travel to Winston-Salem where they will play a preliminary to the important ACC varsity clash.

The Tar Babies took an unblemished 5-0 record into the Duke game last night, but this evening's battle may be only for second-place honors in ACC freshman competition. The Duke team appears to be the definite class of the area.

Carolina, 4-0 before Christmas, beat the Elon College Jayvees 63-51 in its only holiday match.

Jimmy Moore and Jimmy Smithwick paced the scoring attack with 14 and 11 points, respectively. Johnny Yokley was also in double figures with 10 while Ray Hassell added nine and Bob Bennett and Bill Harrison contributed six apiece.

Bennett, who got 11 rebounds against Elon, Smithwick, Hassell and Yokley will probably start tonight. The fifth starter may be Earl Johnson.

After tonight, the Tar Babies return home against the State College frosh on Jan. 16.

New PARKER ARROW

This pen can save you important money on cartridges. And last longer. Ours are BIGGER and last longer (each is good for 8 or 9 thousand words). But, even if you didn't save a dime, this pen would be worth the price. It's a Parker.

Only Parker gives you a solid 14K gold point, tipped with plathenium—one of the hardest, smoothest alloys ever developed. It should last you for years no matter how much you use it.

This pen won't leak the way the cheap ones do—it has a built-in safety reservoir. It must meet most of the tough specifications we set for $10 pens.

The Parker Arrow comes in black, dark blue, light blue, light grey, and bright red, with a choice of four instantly replaceable solid 14k gold points. A beautifully expressive gift.

Dorms Plan Last Affair With WC Before Finals

The Last Blowout is coming Saturday.

Scores of cars and a chartered bus will descend upon the campus of Woman's College at 7:00 o'clock Saturday night for one last evening of socializing before exam study begins. An open house in one of the dorms and a combo party featuring Dell and the Dell-Hearts are the highlights of the night.

The project is being sponsored by the Freshman Class of Carolina and the Interdormitory Council. Transportation tickets for the Last Blowout are available at Ehringhaus Dorm, Lenoir Hall, or from dorm presidents. The price is one dollar. The bus will leave Y-Court for W.C. at 5:45 p.m., January 12. It will return to the University at midnight.

HARRY'S NEW SIGN—Harry Macklin, owner of Harry's Grill, looks at his new sign with Chapel Hill Building Inspector Don Archer. The old sign violated a new ordinance which limits the size of merchants' signs. According to a local authority there are still many businesses that have "illegal" signs.

4 Students OK After Bout With Carbon Monoxide Gas

By JOEL BULKLEY

Two UNC students were released from Memorial Hospital yesterday and two others were held in the infirmary after suffering carbon monoxide asphyxiation in their off-campus home early Wednesday morning, hospital authorities reported.

The two released were Phil Deaton, a medical student from Greensboro and Malcolm Kilpatrick of Burlington. John Dunne of Spartanburg, S. C., and Randolph Isley Jr. of Burlington were referred to the infirmary and were expected to be released today.

All four reside at 53 Barclay Road in a home built by Deaton's father.

Gas Heater

According to the Dean of Men Dallas Cameron, one boy got up at 3 a.m. to study and turned on the gas heater without allowing for ventilation. After studying for about half an hour, he began to feel dizzy, his head ached, his speech became incoherent and he felt nauseous. He woke one of his roommates who was suffering from the same symptons.

One boy managed to call the long distance operator, who in turn summoned Dr. Fred Patterson, the police and an ambulance to the Barclay Road address. All were given oxygen and treated at Memorial Hosptial.

Hospital authorities reported all the students were in good condition.

Chapel Hill Police are investigating.

Vote Margin Much Larger Than Hoped

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Democratic-controlled 88th Congress opened Wednesday by handing President Kennedy a House Rules Committee victory that could make it easier for at least part of the administrative's controversial legislative program.

Barely three hours after the new Congress convened, the House approved an administration proposal that permanently established its powerful Rules Committee body. The move was designed to retain administration control of the committee.

The vote was 235-196, a far bigger margin than Democratic leaders had counted on and way above the 217-212 cliff-hanger by which the Kennedy administration won a similar fight two years ago.

Before the showdown vote, the House defeated 249-183 a Republican move designed to restore conservative control of the committee and the machinery that sends legislation to the floor for a vote.

Victory Not Assured

The administration triumph did not assure Kennedy victories in his battles for such controversial proposals as an early tax cut, medical care for the aged, and federal assistance for schools.

But it did give him assurance that his proposals, if approved by House legislative committees, will have a good chance to clear the Rules Committee hurdle and thus come to a vote in the House.

He had said in advance of the vote that his program was "through" if the Rules Committee was allowed to drop back from its temporary membership of 15 to its former membership of 12.

In the 12-man committee that prevailed before 1961, a conservative coalition controlled the group. The administration charged that too many of its key bills were bottled up by the coalition.

Albert Leads Fight

In debate proceeding the showdown, the administration fight was led by House Democratic leader Carl Albert, Okla. He urged the House to "make the Rules Committee the servant rather than the master of the House."

Leading the opposition was House GOP chieftain Charles A. Halleck, Ind., who called the committee change unwise, unnecessary and "highly improper." He denied administration charges that the committee constituted a roadblock to legislation.

Rep. Clarence J. Brown, R-Ohio, ranking Republican on the Rules Committee, accused President Kennedy of trying to "pack" the committee much the same way that the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt tried to pack the Supreme Court in the 1930's. He said both actions were morally wrong.

Attorneys Quarrel On School Question

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (UPI) — Attorneys arguing the Prince Edward County school integration case clashed in open court Wednesday over the issue of whether the U. S. Constitution requires the operation of public schools.

The arguments lasted for more than two hours, after which judges of the 4th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed to take the case under advisement.

"We would like to see the text in the constitution that required that public schools be operated," Collins Denny Jr., attorney for the county school board, told the court.

Attorneys for the Negro plaintiffs countered that Prince Edward County officials are in "open defiance of the courts" in keeping the county's schools closed to avoid integration.

Robert L. Carter, representing a group of Negro children denied classrooms by the school closings, told the court it had no choice but to order Prince Edward schools reopened, or all others in the state closed so long as the present situation prevailed.

He referred to the fact that Prince Edward's schools are closed, while others in the state continue to operate at taxpayers' expense.

Robert D. McIlwaine, an assistant attorney general for Virginia, told the court that the right of local option—leaving it up to individual localities whether they want to operate public schools—has been a part of Virginia law since 1869.

But Warns Against Further Attack

Tshombe Calls Off Fighting

ELISABETHVILLE (UPI)— Katanga President Moise Tshombe called off his war against the United Nations Wednesday and announced he is prepared to make piece with the central Congo government. But he warned he would wage a "scorched earth" policy if the U. N. attacked his Kolwezi stronghold.

Sources at U. N. headquarters in New York said Tshombe might be permitted to have a key role in the Congo's political future if he agreed to return undamaged the key airbase and industrial town of Kolwezi, 160 miles northwest of Elisabethville.

While Tshombe formally made his peace moves, vicious new fighting broke out in the neighboring Kasai province of the Congo between rival tribesmen. At least 370 persons, including two whites, were reported killed in the Kasai fighting and whole "strings of villages" were reported ablaze.

The Kasai fighting appeared to have no connection with the situation in Katanga except for the fact that withdrawal of U. N. troops from Kasai to reinforce U. N. troops in Tshombe's province had given feuding tribesmen a chance to go on the warpath.

Declaration Broadcast

Tshombe made his peace declaration in a statement issued in Elisabethville Wednesday morning just a day after Katanga's leading tribal chiefs deserted him, branded him a traitor and called on the Leopoldville government to send in troops to crush him.

Wednesday's formal declaration followed a broadcast over Tshombe's radio Katanga Tuesday night and monitored in the neighboring French Congo in which Tshombe also declared he had given up the fight against the U. N.

"I have returned to Elisabethville with the sole purpose of restoring necessary calm and peace in Katanga and its people," Tshombe said in Wednesday's statement.

But Wednesday afternoon Tshombe told a news conference in this U. N. controlled capital that the Katangese have every major industrial installation in Kolwezi mined and ready for demolition.

Kolwezi is the site of the big Katanga air base. It also has a big chemical plant owned by Union Miniere, the Belgian firm that controls all mining operations in Katanga province.

In Leopoldville, U. N. Undersecretary Dr. Ralph J. Bunche told a news conference Tshombe only has about a week left before the deadline set by Thant Dec. 31 to implement Thant's plan to end Katanga's secession.

Bunche told newsmen he could not say whether the U. N. military operations in Katanga had been completed. But he indicated that a further advance of U. N. troops beyond Jadotville toward Kolwezi posed serious transportation problems and meant overcoming obstacles such as wide rivers and demolished bridges.

Bunche evasively answered a question as to whether there was disagreement between the United Nations and the Congo central government about Tshombe's return to Elisabethville. He admitted Central Premier Cyrille Adoula had protested against Thant's statement that Tshombe could return safely to Leopoldville.

Tshombe's Future Uncertain

Leopoldville observers said the U. N. position is to allow Tshombe to carry on as provincial president if he fulfills his pledge to cooperate with the central government.

Tshombe announced at his news conference he will go to Mokambo Thursday to consult with members of his government there and to bring back thousands of Katangese refugees huddled along the Northern Rhodesian border.

Tshombe said he had written to the United Nations informing it of his intentions. But Tshombe's plan to join his minister in Mokambo may be frustrated because U. N. troops were believed planning to drive along the Northern Rhodesian border shortly to clear out pockets of Katangese gendarmes who were reported to have cut the railroad in several places.

Congo Interior Minister Cleophas Kamitatu said that in Bakwanga, a south Kasai diamond-mining center, tribesmen had attacked army patrols and there were "numerous" other victims in other parts of the province.

Awning, Sign Bans Perplex Merchants

By BILL DOWELL

What does it feel like to be on the sunny side of the street?

Pretty hot, if the street is Franklin Street and you're a merchant.

Several store owners will go before the board of aldermen Monday to protest an ordinance banning awnings lower than eight feet and signs extending more than five feet out over the pavement. The Ordinance which was passed last year and went into effect last Tuesday, was responsible for the removal of signs up and down Franklin Street in recent weeks.

The restrictions placed on signs cost several shop owners from a hundred to a couple of thousand dollars in alterations, but the restrictions placed on awnings may cost even more than that.

Lacock's Shoe Store faces a crisis due to the inability of an awning eight feet high to provide shade for sit display window. Any shoes for its display window. Any shoes bleached by the sun and ruined for sale. To Lacock, who ordinarily places several hundred dollars worth of shoes in the window, the ordinance is no laughing matter.

Danziger's Old World Gift Shop faces a similar problem. In this case the candy display in the store's front window melts under the glare let in by the eight foot awning.

Comments from store owners have ranged from indifference on the part of shop owners who were unaffected by the ordinance or who have already yielded to it, to strong objections by those who are affected by it.

One owner remarked that he didn't know there were any eight foot men living in Chapel Hill, even on the basketball team.

Hedgepeth Urges Students Utilize New Flu Vaccine

"The U. S. Public Health Service has predicted an abnormal increase in cases of influenza for January and February, and an epidemic in this area is a definite possibility."

Dr. E. McG. Hedgepeth of the UNC Infirmary, in making this statement, recommended that students take advantage of the new shipment of flu vaccine just received.

The vaccine should be taken "as soon as possible," if it is to be effective during the most dangerous period. The treatment is administered in two shots, with a two-month interval. It is effective for one year.

These shots may be had now at the infirmary during office hours, 9:00-11:30 a.m., and 2:00-5:00 p.m., Monday-Friday at a cost of $1.00.

As College Board members, they will report news from their colleges to Mademoiselle. They are eligible to compete for the twenty Guest Editorships that will be awarded by the magazine in May. To win one of the top twenty prizes, they must submit a second entry to show their specific aptitudes for magazine work.

One Piedmont Crescent

UNC Completes Research

After six years of study under a $527,000 Ford Foundation grant, The Institute for Research in Social Science at UNC has completed a report on the metropolis known as the Piedmont Crescent.

Nineteen big-and-little towns and cities in 16 counties in the mid-South form this crescent of unique urbanization that is changing the life of people in the region and bursting the bounds of metropolitan growth in North and South Carolina.

The Piedmont Crescent is a series of cities and "built-up areas" stretching from Raleigh on the north and east, to Durham, Burlington, Greensboro and Winston-Salem to the west, and southward to High Point, Salisbury, Charlotte, Spartanburg and Greenville, South Carolina.

Authors Stuart Chapin and Shirley Weiss have found, briefly, that:

A—The people in the Crescent possess greater per capita wealth than people in other parts of the Carolinas and the South.

B—The rate of population growth is greater than the national average.

C—Most of the in-migrants to the Piedmont Crescent come from other parts of the South. Six out of seven new people coming into the region come from small towns or farms of the Carolinas and other southeastern states. They come for jobs in new and expanding industry.

D—The Crescent is a "way station," with the tide of migration continuing, with especially young Negroes departing from the area.

Kenan Professor Rupert B. Vance gave the region its name 30 years ago, and the authors reveal that they have borrowed Dr. Vance's terminology in calling the 16-county section "The Piedmont Crescent."

The Crescent is rapidly changing. Under the impact of a modern highway system, a new "transportation corridor" roughly parallels the old railroad system that originally gave the Piedmont Crescent its urbanized and industrial characteristics.

Seven cities received concentrated attention from interviewers. These were Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Burlington, Charlotte and High Point.

"With the new interstate system of superhighways tending to stretch development out along the system's main axes," said Dr. Chapin, "the cluster pattern may well give way to belts of continuous urban development."

Although it comprises only 11 per cent of the land area of the two Carolinas, the 16 Crescent counties have more than 29 per cent of the two-state population, 36 per cent of the retail sales, 49 per cent of the value added by manufacture, and 55 per cent of the wholesale sales.

"Compared with the South Atlantic Region and the nation as a whole," writes Dr. Chapin, "these 16 counties have a considerably larger share of manufacturing and wholesaling activity than would be indicated by their share of the nation's population."

There Is More Hope In The South – Somehow

"I think the race problem probably will be solved in the South before it is in the North.

"Why, Primarily because Southern people have a warm, person-to-person relationship with Negroes that I do not find in the North."

A Methodist minister who has served both Northern and Southern pastorates expresses this view in a recent issue of a church magazine article.

The minister verbalizes this ironic and confused situation which many Americans concerned with racial discrimination feel, but rarely discuss in public. This view sees the South as somehow healthier within the context of its racial squabbles, sees the South as somehow a little better off than the rest of the country, and sees somehow, that when the South solves this problem, it will be cleaner and more complete and more natural.

A Negro civil rights worker expressed the Methodist minister's attitude from a different view. "The South will solve the problem before the North," he said. "In the North the hatred is silent and subtle. In the South things are out in the open."

What the minister and the Negro are NOT saying must be emphasized as much as what they are. They are not saying "Everything will work itself out, if people just give it time and don't agitate". They are not saying there is national, regional and local levels. And they are not saying that the South can afford to content itself with, "The North discriminates too, so nobody can criticize us . . ."

What they are saying has to do with hypocrisy and with tradition. In the South the politicians say, "We don't want colored people to go to the same schools as us, just cause we don't want 'em there." In the North the politicians say, "Due to the geographic apportionment of the various sociological and economic interest groups within the broader range of the population our school board has reluctantly been unable to attain our much desired goal of complete integration . . . but we think three fine Negro children in a school of 2,000 is a good first step . . ."

The hypocrisy of those who espouse equal rights and practice discrimination has been built into a tradition of hypocrisy within many Northern communities. In the South the tradition has to do with physical separation of the races — and the hypocrisy is subconscious and but still part of the tradition. As the Methodist minister said, "The very families that would object to allowing Negroes to come to church for worship are the families that want to bring them as servants to weddings and to funerals, and have them sit in with the family."

In the South the chances seem better that the tradition can be altered and the hypocrisy submerged. "The real agony for the South," said the minister, "is to preserve (the Southern) warmth for Negroes while shifting it out of the traditional master-servant context into a normal pattern of human relationships."

So, there is a strange brand of hope in the South that exists nowhere else in quite the same form. It will require the common efforts of all Southerners and all Americans, to preserve this indefinable feeling of "warmth" within a more egalitarian and humane Southland. (JC)

Future Executives

If there is any one educational concept that has gone by the boards, it is the understanding of the desirability or acceptability of that proberbial "gentleman's C."

For generations past, the mark of a real collegiate gentleman had too often been a record long on extra-curricular participation and short on "A's" or "B's". It was almost axiomatic ;oddballs made "A's" gentlemen made "C's". And it was understoo dthat the gentlemen were the future business leaders of society.

Well, since Sputnik, many individuals above and beyond the concerned educators have been burying the gentleman's "C." And it is with a great deal of satisfaction that we note the following:

With a modified bit of institutional advertising, The Bell Telephone System has recently been running, in weekly magazines, excerpts from an address by the Board Chairman of A.T.&T.

The address, delivered to "a midwestern college audience," apparently answers, at least to the satisfaction of A.T.&T., the question now posed by major corporations: "What kind of man handles a business challenge best,"

The Chairman of the Board put it like this:

"We took the records of 17,000 college men in the business who could fairly be compared with each other, and, examining their records, sought the answer to the question: 'To what extent does success in college predict success in the Bell System?' . . .

". . . The results . . .

". . . The single most reliable predictive indicator of a college graduate's success in the Bell System is his rank in his graduating class."

We usually expect to hear statements of this nature by university professors; and because we expect them to say such things, we too often ignore them.

The future executive of tomorrow would do well to listen at least to the "president" of A.T.&T. (CW)

Views On Name Change - No, No, No

Name Won't Change Facts

To the Editors,

What's in a name?

As a student of Philosophy here at the University, I have been led to the conclusion that there is usually a very loose connection between "words" and "the world;" that is, that there exists more of emotion than of scientific description in the use of words. Consequently, a word usually serves as a vague lable for an "object" which we SENSE.

Take the traditional example: the word "table." To define even that symbol — "table" — would require much more effort, in my opinion, than you Governor Sanford, or you President Friday, or you Chancellro Aycock, are singley or collectively capable of. This is not meant as an insult to anyone; rather, it should be considered as a fact, the basis for this fact being simply that we human beings do more "perceiving" of objects than of "defining" them. We "sense" the relationship that exist between the object's parts and we label this "relationship of parts" by the vague but common-sense word "table." Thus words, used either strictly or vaguely, apply not to things in themselves but to the intangible relationship that exist between tangible parts.

Now applying this bit of truth to the word "Carolina," or to the phrase "The University of North Carolina," or to the more brief symbol "UNC," what do we discover?

First of all we discover that "Carolina" applies not to certain bricks and mortar geographically located on "the Hill," but rather to the intangible ISness of a relationship that exists between one part of this campus and another part between this campus as a complete entity and "the Village," between this campus and its village as a distinct unit surrounded by "outside" North Carolina. The truth of these statements can be physically sensed immediately, and after even the briefest sojourn ere, can be known mentally also. This spot on Earth is somehow different and, to some, more dear than any other area or combination of areas could possibly be.

Secondly, we discover that the word "Carolina" applies also to an intangible "way of life," a way of life that, because of differing environments, could not possibly be reproduced anywhere else. It is the "Carolina" way of life. It is the way of life lived here, on this spot in space.

You three leaders—Governor Sanford, President Friday, Chancellor Aycock—know that it's different here. You have "sensed" the difference, as well as has everyone else here. You know that we at "Carolina" have a good thing. You know it and you want to share it with "others." I applaud your hidden motives. I applaud this, the Real Reason for your desire to include within "Carolina" other institutions which meet our standards—"University standards."

But I strongly disagree with your method; that is, "name changing." To the outside world, a name change is nothing more than that—a switch in names. But to those immediately involved, it is much more. It is evidence that even yet there lingers within our society (as seemingly exemplified by you) a primitive belief in magic; a belief that the correct word or combination of words will, somehow, be an aid in accomplishing a desired end . . . namely what, sirs? I am against changing the name of an institution as much as I am against changing the name of an individual, for in both cases is involved an intangible "personality." I have talked to no one who favored your proposed change in names. (I wish more students would take the trouble to publically voice their opposition.)

These then are the opinions and thoughts of one "Carolina" student. I understand that "State" students are greatly opposed to this "switch-witch" party also. They have their reasons; I have mine. But the fact which I would like to make plain is that we do have reasons—reasons which are plain, and not hidden. Frankly, I do not understand the "reasons" for the proposed change in names. Please, let those people who favor the name change make plain their reasons to us the masses. The situation reminds one of the old country preacher who insisted on addressing his congregation as "we christians" when, clearly 50 per cent of his "flock" are not Christians. Like unto this is our present situation; some people want to say "we of the University of North Carolina" when, clearly the proposed change would merely expand our Holy Name to include the heathens.

State Student Position

To the Editors,
(To Whom Directed: General Assembly of North Carolina)

Whereas the Board of Higher Education of the State of North Carolina with the full approval and endorsement of William C. Friday, President of the Consolidated University of North Carolina and Governor Terry Sanford; has recommended that the established name of North Carolina State College be changed to a completely new and unknown name of The University of North Carolina at Raleigh, and

Whereas, several leading North Carolina politicians and educators have endorsed a proposal to abolish the names of two great North Carolina institutions of learning and to adopt the name of a third for a common nomenclature for all three with the city locations tagged on for distinction between the three, and

Whereas, North Carolina State College has had its present name since 1918 and has been incorporated in the Consolidated University of North Carolina since its formation in 1931, and

Whereas, the name North Carolina State College has become nationally and internationally prominent with an enrollment of approximately 8,000 with 1,000 graduate students; more than 300 foreign students from 50 countries; with Master's degree programs in 35 fields of study; doctoral programs in 22 fields; and an international reputation of academic excellence; experimentation with new ideas and methods; research programs the results of which have received wide publicity, outstanding and imaginative faculty; and complete, even-expanding physical facilities including an unusual array of teaching and experimental equipment, and

Whereas, the proposed name change, University of North Carolina at Raleigh would undermine to a large extent this reputation and would be a tragic step backward for higher education in North Carolina; a waste of the sacrifice, time, effort, and the tax-payer's money which has gone into the establishment of North Carolina State's name, reputation, and prestige, and

Whereas, the new name implies, and once in effect, would imply that State has been demoted to the Raleigh branch of the institution in Chapel Hill, therefore stifling school spirit and student initiative and making State less attractive to prospective students, and

Whereas, the objectives of Governor Sanford, President Friday, and the Board of Higher Education can be realized without the proposed change in name, and

Whereas, the tradition and identity connected with the names of the three schools have become too deeply established, for such a drastic change; for just as University of North Carolina at Raleigh is completely unacceptable to the students and alumni of State, so would the name North Carolina State University at Chapel Hill be rejected by the alumni and students of the University of North Carolina, and

Whereas, the change from North Carolina State College to North Carolina State University would preserve the identity of the school and at the same time more accurately describe its functions and services to the people of North Carolina, and

Whereas, many other states with efficient and effective programs of state-supported higher education have named their Land Grant Colleges in a similar fashion to what we propose, for example: Michigan State University and University of Michigan, New Mexico State University and University of New Mexico, Colorado State University and University of Colorado, Iowa State University and University of Iowa, Oklahoma State University and University of Oklahoma, Pennsylvania State University and University of Pennsylvania, Ohio State University and University of Ohio, and

Whereas, the Consolidated Universities can operate and function as planned even if the name is changed to North Carolina State University instead of University of North Carolina State University instead of University of North Carolina at Raleigh, and

Whereas, identical nomenclature would cause unnecessary confusion among the three schools, especially with people outside North Carolina, and

Whereas, North Carolina State College has built a name in the minds and hearts of the farmers of this state because of its never-ceasing services in all one hundred counties to aid them in the field of agriculture so that they can maintain the economy of the state, and

Whereas, North Carolina State College has also established its name across the country and across the world in the region of technical knowledge and research and with a change in name the identity of the institution in these fields would be lost, and

Whereas, no extra benefit will be given to the taxplayers, citizens, and voters of North Carolina, with the name University of North Carolina at Raleigh that they would not receive with the name North Carolina State University.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that we, the Student Body of North Carolina State College, do sincerely, urgently and respectfully request that the General Assembly of North Carolina take appropriate action to insure the continued operation of North Carolina State College, either under this name, or under the name North Carolina State University; that the General Assembly take the necessary action to make it impossible for the Trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, the Board of Higher Education, the Administration of the Consolidated University of North Carolina or any other agency, department, board or administrator to force the name University of North Carolina at Raleigh on North Carolina State College, that the General Assembly create for themselves, and for the benefit of the citizens and taxpayers of North Carolina, under the powers vested in them by the Constitution of the State of North Carolina, and the obligations of their office, a Committee of Inquiry to thoroughly investigate the maintenance, management, organizational structure and administration of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, and that such Inquiry be open to the press and to the citizens of North Carolina.

Be it further resolved that copies of this resolution be sent to every member of the 1963 General Assembly of North Carolina, the President of the North Carolina State College Alumni Association, the Governor of North Carolina and to the Press.

Respectfully,
Floyd E. McCall, President
Student Body
North Carolina State College

More On WFB: Betrayed Or Not?

To the Editors:

The most distrubing thing about the controversy centering around William F. Buckley is the marked display of ignorance, (dare I say it?) nay, the affluence of stupidity with which certain Carolina students (notably those associated with the Carolina Forum and the DTH) have dimmed the intellectual reputation of our University. For the controversy which they have produced is nothing more than an uninformed "liberalism" decked out in the clothes of indignation; a chance for these individuals to exercise their mouths and to be "somebody" at the expense of U.N.C. and Mr. Buckley. It is a controversy which vanishes at the approach of anything even remotely resembling the proverbial "common sense."

Much has been said about Buckley's "indiscreet language." Although it seems he has defended himself well enough in his letter, the question remains, "Why should he have to?" The responsibility for whatever language he might use falls directly on the Carolina Forum, who originally engaged him. Why? Because it was the duty of the Forum to know "what they were buying." Surely Mr. Buckley has not been so scarce that he can be classified as an unknown? The Carolina Forum knew very well what road William Buckley's views and language would follow before they hired him. If they did not, then they were unforgivably negligent and deserved much worse than they got. But this, remember, is typical of big-mouths. They always shift the blame to someone else.

Something else which gnaws at the back of one's mind—did Mr. Buckley know BEFORE he delivered his speech that he would be asked to make a financial compromise? Did some discerning member of the Forum or of the DTH approach him and say, "Mr. Buckley, if you deliver that speech we will raise hell and demand that your fee be cut?" One very seriously doubts that this happened. Contrary to what the "clever Clod" would have us believe, Mr. Buckley was betrayed. If he had known that he would be dragged through the mud, then he would have delivered the original speech without hesitation. A professional speaker may be caught with his zipper open, but never with his pants down.

And last, William F. Buckley is a prominent man, no matter how controversial he is as a person. He is in the forefront of politics and in a position to know precisely what he is talking about. It strikes one that the Carolina Forum was fortunate to get him for $450.00 (a price which no doubt included his transportation.) Indeed, compared to the fees of men no more prominent than himself, such as those of the "illustrious" Martin Luther King and of Norman Cousins', his fee was very reasonable.

All this furor has been caused by the "motor mouths" of the Carolina Forum and the DTH. They have attacked a reputable man in Mr. Buckley and have actually caused him the trouble of defending himself. They have afforded Mr. Buckley's enemies, men like Harry Golden, a chance to attack him. What they have done, they have done not out of a sense of concern for themselves. They damaged the reputation of our University, both morally and intellectually. In the future, guest speakers will be more hesitant in accepting invitations to lecture here.

Unfortunately, those in a position of responsibility in our student government have thrown in with these upsurpers; they have wallowed in inertia and let the damage be done. But at least we, the student body can recognize these persons for what they are—not indignant, but cheap; not constructive, but destructive; not big, but small.

—John C. Morrison

LOGIC . . .

To the Editors,

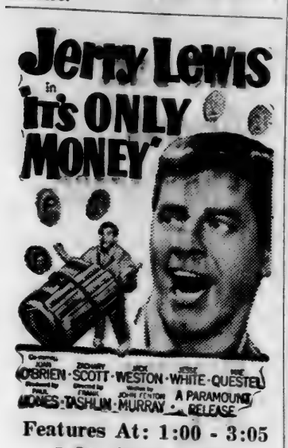
Mr. Buckley's question, "What on EARTH is a 'deductively and empirically true argument?'" deserves an answer. First, a deductive argument, according to Irving M. Copi in "Introduction to Logic," p. 133, is "one wrose premises are claimed to provide conclusive evidence for the truth of its conclusion. Every deductive argument is either valid or invalid," Copi continues, "valid or invalid," Copi continues, "vales to be true without its conclusion being true also, invalid otherwise."

A good example of a valid deductive argument is:

All apples are green.
This is an apple.
It is green.

While this argument is valid, common sense tells us that it is not true. It is not true because, in the reality of the sensual world,all apples are not green.

Thus, for an argument to be true as well as valid, it must correspond to reality. To find out whether a deductive argument corresponds to reality, one must make an empirical study of reality. One must find out whether, in fact, all apples are green. If all apples are green, the argument is a deductively (valid) and empirically true one. If all apples are not green, the argument is only valid. It is true in a reality containing only green apples, but false in the sensual reality around us.



Again, what I had hoped to hear from Mr. Buckley was a deductively and empirically true argument. I didn't hear one.

I must apologize for accusing Mr. Buckley of running for president. Since he considers Henry Mayer a modern-day Judas, it would seem that he considers William Buckley a modern-day Christ. Of course Mr. Buckley does not want to be president. He already considers himself God. This is probably just as well. I for one would rather see his name on our currency than on White House stationery.

— Piedmont Crescent —

growth in the Carolinas between 1950 and 1960 occurred in urban places, contrasting with the experience in cities of the north where many central cities are losing population.

Labor Mobility

"Labor mobility" — people moving in and out and up along the economic wage scale — is noted in the Piedmont Crescent. "While Crescent population has been following a constant growth rate which has amounted to an increase of 20 per cent (the national rate is 18 per cent) over the past two decades, this growth has been well below the potential of the region," said Chapin and Weiss. The drawback has been outmigration of young people and their families.

The labor mobility study indicated that the Crescent may be viewed as a migratory "way station," the authors assert. Young white workers move into the 16-counties area from other parts of the South. At the same time Negroes from 20 to 40 and whites in their 40's and 50's are moving out to other regions of the nation.

The social scientists predict that the Crescent will make an even stronger showing in employment growth "in the immediate future." In the long run, however, there are signs of levelling out, and this trend will continue unless there is considerable strengthening of the industrial bases and more productive industrial establishments.

Education The Key

Authors find that young men with as much as a high school education have improved their economic status, moving from the blue collar class of their fathers to white collar jobs in the Piedmont Crescent. Social scientists find a high degree of satisfaction among those who live in the Crescent in regard to their living conditions there.

Negro in Politics

"Negro Political Participation" in Durham and Winston-Salem are compared by Bradbury Seasholes and Frederic N. Cleaveland. Findings reveal participation in city government to be about the same — one Negro a member of the city council in each city, with election from a predominantly populous Negro residential section.

In Durham an aggressive Durham Committee on Negro Affairs (D.C.N.A.) is influential in politics and as a pressure organization.

In Winston-Salem much progress has been attained by the "conference" method of inter-racial cooperation. Negroes in Winston-Salem have achieved by petition and discussion with white leaders what has been accomplished in Durham by stronger political action and aggressiveness.

The NAACP and the Urban League are active in Winston-Salem. "In Winston-Salem the implied therat of court action has been a more important force than elsewhere, including Durham, in moving white leaders to seek compromise," writes Cleaveland and Seasholes. "Because of this, Winston-Salem NAACP officials have been seen less often in courtrooms and more often in conference rooms with city officials and prominent businessmen."

The Urban League has promoted better job opportunities for Negroes in Winston-Salem. The influence of ministers and teachers is improtant in Winston-Salem. In Durham more influence is exercised by Negro businessmen.

Political influence of Negroes through mass media is slight in Winston-Salem. But in Durham there is a weekly newspaper published by Negroes. An effort to extend its circulation to Winston-Salem was not successful among Negroes in that city.

Negroes in Winston-Salem have not been very successful in challenging white leadership, politically-speaking, but at the same time they have been the beneficiaries of a fairly enlightened white leadership policy in racial matters, according to the authors.

In contrast to Winston-Salem, community leadership in Durham is much less securely in the hands of the old-type first family leaders. The D.C.N.A. has "tended to alarm Durham whites," perhaps encouraging white leaders "to conclude that paternalism is a luxury they can no longer afford under conditions that threaten the very fabric of their control."

R. J. Reynolds "Negro" Plant

Attention is given to a new and separate tobacco manufacturing plant in Winston-Salem, a part of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company in which Negroes have been given supervisory positions in a building devoted to Negro labor altogether. The policy has permitted an upward extension of the job ceiling for Negroes in the city.

The Piedmont Crescent studies began in 1956 with the half a million dollars grant from the Ford Foundation. The conclusions indicate that many things remain to be accomplished in regard to development in the area, and that the verdict of history will tell what success is achieved in further sound industrialization to bring more economic opportunity for the people who live in the Crescent.

Professors Chapin and Weiss suggest the need for formal negotiations and planning, bringing in recognized leaders who will look at the entire area.

The Piedmont Crescent is not only a phenomenon interesting to planners who see in the Carolinas a new form of metropolitan growth. It is a vital concern of all of North and South Carolina and the people of the South who are directly and indirectly affected.

The authors have shown that the Crescent is something of a "way station." Equally in transition, is the task of planning for the region's future growth. Crescentites are only a part of the way to a solution of the problems. But the Chapin, Weiss, Vance, Noland, Ashby, Pfouts, Cleaveland team and others in the Institute for Research in Social Science have charted the way.

Cavaliers Beat Wrestlers 25-2

By MARTIN KRUMING

Carolina's varsity wrestling team absorbed its fourth defeat of the season Monday afternoon as they were trounced by the Virginia Cavaliers, 25-2, in Woollen Gym.

The only Tar Heel points came in the 130 lb. division with sophomore Ken Furr registering a draw.

Captain Jerry Cabe lost, 2-1, in the heavyweight class while 177 lb. Gene Record bowed 3-2.

Head coach Sam Barnes termed this meet a "bitter defeat" and added he had never had a better Carolina eight man effort. "All I can say is that we have a lot of work to do."

This was Carolina's first ACC match and this Saturday they battle the State Wolfpack in Raleigh.

"At the beginning of the year State was expecting to do real well," Barnes said. "They have four good men but we should pull it out."

State's strength lies in the 137, 147, 167 and heavyweight divisions. Cabe will be wrestling Fountain, a grappler whom he defeated last season. "Fountain is having a whale of a season and it should be a good match," commented Barnes.

So far this season Barnes has been relying on four and five sophomores each match. These include Furr, Dave Wiles in the 147 lb. class, Bill Woodall at 157, Russell Simmons at 157 and 167 lb. Elliott Dworin.

During the semester break the Tar Heels travel to Charleston, West Va. to battle the West Virginia Mountaineers in a preliminary to a basketball game.

The freshmen grapplers have a 1-2 slate with losses to the 87th Airborne Division and the Washington and Lee JV's. They defeated UVA, 17-3.

Outstanding on the Tar Baby unit are Paul Wellstone at 123 and 177 lb. Jack Robinson. Wellstone, from Arlington, Va., was runner up in the Virginia state championships and is undefeated this season.

Wake Forest Beats Tar Heels By 78-70

By ED DUPREE
Special to the DTH

WINSTON-SALEM—The Wake Forest College Demon Deacons continued their domination of Carolina Basketball teams by pulling away from the Tar Heels in the last six minutes of the game here last night, 78-70.

The Baptists overcame a 58-52 Carolina lead at the 10 minute mark, and captured their third straight victory in the rivalry. Big Bob Woollard and Frank Christie led the balanced scoring attack with 18 points each. Little Dave Wiedeman added 14 while Ronnie Watts and Butch Hassell put in 11 points each.

Billie Cunningham continued his sensational scoring for the Tar Heels, but his 25 points were not enough. Cunningham scored 19 of his points in the second half after sitting on the bench for 8 minutes of the first half with three personal fouls charged against him.

Mike Cooke, number six man on the team, came off the bench in the first half and led the Tar Heels to a 35-32 half time lead. The UNC guard blistered the net with amazing accuracy, and scored 12 of his 14 points in that first half.

Ray Respess was the only other Tar Heel to hit double figures. He connected for 11.

Wollard scored six straight Wake Forest points at the start of the second half while the Tar Heels scored three and tied the score at 38-38. Cunningham hit a foul shot to put Carolina into the lead and Larry Brown made it 41-38 with a lay-up.

The Deacons tied it up again 43-43, and Wiedeman popped in two more to give Wake its first lead of the second half. It was nip-and-tuck from there until Wake made its late surge.

Ray Respass hit a fast break lay-up; Christie countered with a hook; and Respass hit a jump to knot it again at 47-47.

Then Billy Cunningham, the talented Sophomore from Brooklyn, took charge and scored eight points in a Tar Heel surge that pushed them a 57-52 lead at the ten-minute mark. Charlie Shaffer hit a foul shot to give Carolina the biggest lead of the game at 58-52.

The Carolina freshmen won their game, 64-60.

Duke Beats Carolina Freshmen

UNC's freshmen couldn't stop Duke's high-scoring Steve Vacendak Tuesday night, and that was the story of the ball game as the Tar Babies dropped their first start in six tries, 70-57.

Vacendak, a 6-1 guard from Scranton, Pa., got 25 points to maintain his personal per-game average while putting on a tremendous shooting exhibition.

The frosh star hit nine of 13 attempts from the floor and seven of 10 from the free throw line and, with his back court teammate Frank Harscher, sent the Blue Imps rolling from a 23-20 halftime lead to their sixth straight victory.

Carolina's slow-down tactics had held the score down in the first twenty minutes when the Tar Babies continually kept the ball looking for the good shot.

But Duke started running at the start of the second period and built its lead to 43-32 midway through the final half when Vacendak scored on a three-point play.

Harscher had 13 points for the Blue Imps while Bob Bennett led UNC with 15. Bennett fouled out for the first time this year late in the second half.

Scoring:

Duke (70) Vacendak 25, Marin 10, Liccardo 11, Harscher 13, Allen 0, Murray 11, Zimmer 0, Hay 0.

Carolina (57) Bennett 15, Mirken 4, Smithwick 0, Hassell 8, Yokley 6, Harrison 13, Moore 11.

Frosh Tankers Win 3rd

By BILLY HATFIELD

The Baby Blue Dophins started the new year off as they ended the old with an impressive 65-29 win over Grimsley High School of Greensboro Tuesday afternoon in the Bowman Gray Pool.

Taking first places in all but one event and breaking a school record in the 100-yard breaststroke, the team's effort was up to par even with the loss of sprinter Dick Chance, out for the season with an infected ear drum, and backstroker Al Schreiber with infected tonsils.

Sandy McNairy, Dick Boardman, Scott Taylor, and Fred Lipp wheeled a first in the 200-yard medley relay as did Taylor when joined by Brilliant, Hall, and Bennett, in the 200-yard freestyle relay.

John Sheldon copped a first in the 200-yard freestyle and 400-yard freestyle events and Murphy turned the same trick in the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle.

Rick Form, after taking first in the 200-yard individual medley, came back to set a freshman school record in the 100-yard breaststroke with a time of 1:07.4 breaking the old record set by Bill Boardman.

In the diving competition Guy Smith of UNC again won first place with Grimsley picking up second and third spots.

Lipp turned in a fine time of 58.8 in winning the 100-yard butterfly and McNairy took a second in the 100-yard backstroke behind Rudd of Grimsley.

The baby tankmen's next meet will be with the East Carolina College freshmen who they defeated earlier, 78-14, on January 16 here at Chapel Hill.

Cleveland Browns Fire Paul Brown

CLEVELAND — (UPI) — Paul Brown, general manager and coach of the Cleveland Browns of the National Football League, was fired Wednesday.

Cleveland President Arthur Modell, announced Brown's dismissal as coach and general manager.

"Brown will remain as a vice-president of the Browns and will assume other duties," Modell said.

Modell made no announcement as to a new coach or general manager.

Brown's release as general manager and coach apparently brought to at least a temporary end one of the most brilliant and colorful coaching careers in pro history.

Brown was the head coach of the Browns when they first started operation in the old All-America Conference in 1946. For four years Brown's Cleveland team was the powerhouse of that circuit, winning 52 games and losing only four with three ties.

When the All-America Conference folded, Brown and the Browns moved into the National Football League and won six consecutive Eastern Division titles. During the past season, one of the Browns' poorest under Brown, Cleveland won 7, lost 6, and tied 1.

Through 13 NFL seasons, Brown's teams won a total of seven division titles and three world championships. In the NFL under Brown, Cleveland won 115 games, lost 49, and tied 6.

Students Differ On Buckley Affair

By MARTIN WILSON

There is still much controversy over the Carolina Forum's withholding of William F. Buckley, Jr.'s speaking fee, a poll among students and professors showed. Many wouldn't even talk about it.

The fee has been paid and interviewees were asked their opinion of Forum chairman Henry Mayer's refusal to pay the fee until a "readjustment" could be obtained.

Barry Craig, a senior philosophy major, said: "Although at first I thought the Forum might have a case, it seems to me now that Forum Chairman Henry Mayer was very ill-advised in withholding the fee, and he has successfully cast shadows upon the integrity of UNC. In the future, I suggest Mr. Mayer consider a contract as a contract, or substitute a program of prior censorship."

Clement Ford, a senior business major agreed with the Forum's position. "It's unjustifiable that Buckley should try to pawn off a second-hand speech. He seems to be an opportunist trying to capitalize on his conservative position."

Fred Anderson, senior history major: "I feel that withholding the fee was a sage move and drew attention to the intellectual short-changing in reading an article. But the debate which has been raging over Buckley was worth the fee."

Two geography professors who didn't want to be identified due to classroom arguing which they felt would result said: "The Forum ought to live up to its contracts. In the future, the Forum should be more sure of itself. If you make a contract, live by it."

Mike Doctor, a junior major in political science and history: "I thought the Forum was right morally and wrong legally. The Forum handled itself very well. I only wish Mr. Buckley had handled himself as well as the Forum in this matter."

Dr. David Monroe, professor of political science, said he couldn't answer very well because most of his information was hearsay. Speaking as a former attorney, he said: "All I can say is that where there's a contractual relationship which has been complied with, it seems it's binding that a speaker should be reimbursed according to that contract. As far as I know, the amount he is paid is never conditioned according to the feelings of his audience."

Ken Byerly, associate professor of journalism: "Apparently the Forum had no choice but to pay. But I believe they should have reached a decision on this sooner."

Patti Perrin, member of the Carolina Forum and a junior journalism major: "The original decision to withhold Buckley's fee was made without the advice and consent of the Carolina Forum. We were simply never consulted. Personally, I never favored withholding William Buckley's fee."

Glen Johnson, political science instructor: "I thought it was morally but not legally justified. Therefore, I feel the protest was wise, but the decision to pay was equally wise."

Billy Burwell, a medical student, thought the Forum's position was dishonorable. "It's one of the worst things I've ever heard of. It seems somebody was trying to 'get' Buckley."

Public School Administration Program To Grow

An expansion of course offerings in public school administration by the Consolidated University was announced today by President William C. Friday.

Beginning in February, graduate courses in school administration will be offered at the Woman's College in Greensboro and at State College in Raleigh as well as at the University here and the UNC Graduate Center in Charlotte.

The courses to be offered are parts of the new Two Year Graduate Program in School Administration which was initiated at the University two years ago. The total program provides for 60 semester hours of graduate work in school administration and in related courses in political science, business administration and other fields. The program has been approved by the National Commission for Accreditation of Teacher Education (NCATE). Public school superintendents and principals who complete the NCATE approved program will be eligible for the new advanced certificates in administration and the higher state salaries provided by the North Carolina state Board of Education.

All courses are to be offered through the UNC School of Education and the University Graduate School. Members of the staff at Chapel Hill will commute to Raleigh and Greensboro to teach the specialized courses when qualified staff members are not available at the University branches in those cities. The intra-university program will be coordinated by a committee composed of Vice-President Donald B. Anderson; Dean Arnold Perry of the University School of Education; Bryant Kirkland, Education Dean at State College; Kenneth Howe, Education Dean at the Woman's College; Charles Milner, Director of University Extension, and Alexander Heard, Dean of the Graduate School.

India Charges Chinese Violated Own Ceasefire

NEW DELHI (UPI) — India charged Thursday that Communist Chinese troops fired on Indian stragglers 34 times in an 11-day period ending Dec. 2, in violation of the Communists' own cease-fire.

The charges were made on the eve of talks between Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and a neutralist peace mission headed by Ceylonese Premier Mme. Sirimava Bandaranaike. The mission's aim is to get India to agree to negotiate the border dispute with the Communists.

In Jakarta, Indonesian Foreign Minister Subandrio, who took part in the first half of the mission in Communist China, said Peking has accepted the proposals of the six neutral nations "as a basis for further negotiations."

India officials have objected in particular to the neutrals' willingness to let Chinese troops stay in territory they have occupied in the northwestern border state of Ladakh. India has said it will not hold peace talks under such conditions.

The charges of cease-fire violation were made by the Indian Foreign Ministry. They covered the period between Nov. 21 and Dec. 2.

Bill Introduced In SL Asks Better Athletic Scheduling

A resolution urging improvement in athletic scheduling was introduced in Student Legislature last night.

According to Ford Rowan, author of the resolution, the poor football scheduling of home and away games and the scheduling of both the Duke football and basketball games during student vacation periods prompted the action.

The resolution recommended that "Student Legislature go on record as urging that major athletic events with Big Four opponents not be scheduled during student vacations."

The resolution, which also would put the legislature on record as supporting athletic teams, will be voted on at the next session.

Also under consideration last night was a re-worded "bad check" bill. The bill, which would make the writing of bad checks an honor council offense, has been re-written several times because of technicalities.

U. S. COLLEGE ENROLLMENT

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Census Bureau reported Thursday that total enrollment in U. S. schools and colleges reached 48.7 million in the fall of 1962—a 2.1 per cent increase over the previous year.

It said the upward trend in enrollments recorded in recent years was continuing but that the rate was slowing down.

NYU Offers BA Graduate Grants

Fellowships in comparative administration totaling $6,600 each will be available at the New York University Graduate School of Public Administration for the 1963-64 academic year, Dr. Ray F. Harvey, dean of the School, has announced.

Granted under a provision of the National Defense Education Act, the fellowships are available for students who are seeking Ph.D. degrees in public administration and who intend to teach at universities in this country or at institutes of public administration abroad.

The fellowships are granted for three years and provide $2,000 the first year, $2,200 the second, and $2,400 in the final year, plus $400 per year for each dependent. The University will pay the recipients' tuition.

Inquiries should be addressed to Dean Ray F. Harvey, NYU Graduate School of Public Administration, 4 Washington Square North, New York 3, New York. Applications must be completed and sent to Dean Harvey before January 31, 1963.

Washington Seminar Topic In China, Southeast Asia

Applications for the Washington Seminar, sponsored by the UNC YM-YWCA, must be submitted by Monday, Jan. 14.

The Seminar, Feb. 7-10, will be devoted to "China and Tensions in Southeast Asia."

The seminar schedule will be centered around talks with Richard Dudman, correspondent for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch who recently returned from Southeast Asia; Lee St. Lawrence, director of the Asian program for the Peace Corps; Senator John Sparkman (Ala.); and officials at the Pentagon and State Department.

Schedule

Thursday, Feb. 7—Leave UNC at 6 p.m.

Friday — Morning Session with Pentagon and State Department spokesmen, and Senator John Sparkman in the afternoon. The Alabama Senator is a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and is former chairman of a foreign relations sub-committee.

Saturday—A visit in the morning to two embassies (preferably India and Burma), at 1 o'clock meeting with Richard Dudman and a conference at 3 p.m. with Lee St. Lawrence.

Sunday, Feb. 10—Leave Washington at 10 a.m. to return to Chapel Hill.

Miss Anne Queen, Secretary of the YWCA, is chairman of the seminar committee and will go to Washington with the group.

The cost of the seminar will be approximately $18, including transportation, hotel, and registration fees. Travel will be by chartered bus.

Anyone may apply for the seminar. The only requirements are attendance at a briefing session in Chapel Hill prior to the seminar, and attendance at all the meetings in Washington during the seminar.

Applications are available at the YMCA office.

Billy Sol Says He Will Preach Gospel

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI) — Billy Sol Estes, convicted swindler and bankrupt financier, said Thursday he is going to "preach the Gospel" in answer to "many calls and demands."

Estes, a deacon of the Church of Christ, said he does not know when he will return to Texas, where he was convicted on charges growing out of a multi-million-dollar fertilizer-grain storage scandal.

On a tour collecting nickels and dimes for a Nigerian school, Estes was scheduled to deliver a sermon Thursday night at the Edison Road Church of Christ in Cleveland, Ohio.

He spent the night and most of the day here after telling 200 Negroes in a modest church Wednesday night that "if you follow Christ's life there will be no problems."

Estes declined to grant an interview to Indianapolis newsmen. But he said there had been many calls for him to make appearances in one of his favorite roles —as a lay preacher.

"I'm just going to preach the Gospel," he said.

Estes mentioned the Nigerian mission fund only briefly Wednesday night in his pulpit appearance at the small church in Indianapolis.

"It is a very good thing," he said.

His sermon was entitled "The Simple Plan of Salvation," and he listed five steps to salvation—several times stressing the need for repentence.

He ended the sermon with an eyes-closed, hands-upraised prayer in which he asked God to help His listeners be "good Christians."

Students OK

Two UNC students, who narrowly escaped death by carbon monoxide asphyxiation Wednesday morning in their off-campus home and were held overnight in the University infirmary, were released yesterday. They were reported in "good shape."

The other two occupants of the home at 53 Barclay Road who were stricken Wednesday were released the same day.

Those released yesterday were John Dunne, a sophomore from Spartanburg, S. C., and Randolph Isley Jr., a second-year student from Burlington.

Chapel Hill Fire Chief J. S. Stewart reported yesterday that insufficient ventilation caused asphyxiation of the four students. He noted that he had inspected the residence and had found it well insulated. This insulation and weather-stripping was completed on Tuesday. He said that the house was heated by a vented air heater which was properly installed and in good working order. A partial vacuum, which gathered deadly carbon monoxide gas from the only available source of ventilation, the chimney, nearly caused the boys to suffocate.

U. S. Communists Condemn Chinese

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Communist party of the United States charged Thursday that the "erroneous and dangerous" policies of Communist China threaten world disaster.

The party issued a 2,300-word statement supporting the "peaceful coexistence" policy of Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev.

The American Communists endorsed Khrushchev's handling of the Cuban crisis as a "triumph for courage, reason through negotiation and compromise which advanced peace aspirations of all mankind."

Chinese charges that Khrushchev bowed to American imperialism in a "Munich" amount to "unbelievable and irresponsible slander," the statement said.

Communist Chinese leaders "have failed to grasp the realities of today" in viewing the threat of nuclear war as a "paper tiger," it added.

"The threat in the Cuban crisis posed the possibility of final, total disaster for millions . . . the United States, as well as the Soviet Union, eastern and western Europe, and China," the party said.

POSTGRAD COURSES

Anthropologist To Discuss Race In Talk Jan. 16

One of the country's foremost authorities on race, Dr. Earl W. Count, will speak in Carroll Hall, Wednesday, Jan., 16 at 8 p.m.

Dr. Count, professor of anthropology at Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., will examine the misconceptions of race in his talk, "An Anthropologist Looks at Race."

At present the only way to define race is by biological criteria, skin color, hair form, height and weight, rather than from a social stand-point, according to Dr Count. A race gains it characteristics not from emotional experiences but through an environment, he says.

These and other topics will be discussed by Dr. Count Jan. 16. His talk is sponsored by the Department of Sociology and Anthropology.

Speed Traps Anger Georgia Motorists

ATLANTA (UPI)—Residents of Georgia's most notorious speed-trap sites pleaded Wednesday for state action to rid their localities of politicians who fatten their pockets by preying on tourists.

Residents from Reidsville, Ludowici, and Sewanee—small communities situated on busy U. S. 301, a main route to Florida — voiced these please before a legislative committee studying ways of ridding Georgia of speed traps.

Harry V. Chapman, a rural letter-carrier from Ludowici, said more than $200,000 a year is collected in traffic fines in Long County.

A speed trap in Tattnal County was said "virtually to have killed the tourist business" in the area and the Sewanee police department was accused of operating solely to catch motorists rather than to protect citizens of the town.

Lowndes County Sheriff Jewell Futch, president of the Georgia Sheriff's Association, said his organization will sponsor a mandatory anti-fee bill in the General Assembly that would place all sheriffs in the state on salaries and eliminate compensation by fines.

FREE FLICK

"Houdini," starring Tony Curtis and Janet Leigh, will be the G.M. Free Flick tonight. "Houdini," was produced in color by George Pal. This is an authentic story of the man considered the world's greatest magician.

The many tests of Houdini's "magic" make interesting film fare and his life, filled with adventure and travel, adds to the scope of the picture. Showings will be at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. in Carroll Hall. I.D. cards are required.

Sports-Writer Rumor: "Preposterous"

We have noted with dismay, indeed almost with shock, the manner in which various sports writers around the State have handled with what might be termed their "responsibilities" in connection with the public's interest in the proposed consolidation and name changes for the University's three branches.

We are thinking specifically, at this time, of a column which recently appeared in the sports section of the Greensboro Daily News. It was written by their Sports Editor, and it was published Tuesday, January 8.

That's when and where — but "why?" we will never know.

* * *

The article, the editor, was concerned about a "rumor which is making the rounds in connection with this new movement to consolidate even more the three branches of the Consolidated University."

The column began with a quotation from president Friday: "If we are to be one university. . . ." And it went on to relate the essence of that quotation to a ridiculous rumor "that all intercollegiate athletics will be concentrated at one branch, and that this will be at Chapel Hill."

After leading off with the words of president Friday, the Daily News Sports Editor asked that the reader "Remember them as I take the liberty to report a rumor. . . ."

We would like to point out that it was, indeed, quite a bit of liberty. The handling of such "rumors" must always be a very tricky business. Most often they are founded on misinformation and they lead only to further misinformation; they rarely, if ever have basis in fact.

And, furthermore, we would like to submit the notion that one does not merely "report" a rumor. It would seem that you either start, perpetrate, or dismiss rumor . . . you do not "report" it. By the very act of putting their warped and misinformed notions into print, you give them, almost automatically, a degree of credence which they did not formerly possess.

* * *

What in the world would prompt one of the State's most noted and respected sports editors to, even left-handedly, give public credence to rumors that can do nothing but confuse issues and, indeed, his own readers?

As the saying goes; "It's beyond us."

Especially when we note that the editor states in the column that: "Athletic facilities might figure into the details when the planning gets down to the work table, but they are much less important, at the moment, than adherence to the basic principle of higher education in North Carolina." (bold face added).

If the columnist-editor recognizes that fact, and if he believes that it is true, what in the world prompted the "report" of an absurd rumor?

It was rumor that would have been best handled when summed up and dismissed, as it was by president Friday, as being "Preposterous." (CW)

Clean-Shaven Pirates?

Manteo, N. C. has carried Patriotic Americanism to a pretty silly extreme. The promotors of the Lost Colony and all the other rigamorole which occurs there every year, have banned "ragged type beards" on all the town's "pirates."

The reason for the ban? — The beards remind people of Fidel Castro. Therefore: no beards.

In place of beards the pirates are asked to wear mustaches or sideburns.

We remind Manteo that Joseph Stalin and Adolf Hitler had mustaches and Elvis Presley wore sideburns.

And, anyway, if Manteo wants its pirates to be realistic, why not let them wear Castro-type beards? Who has been a better pirate lately than Fidel? (JC)

The Daring Young Man...

The DTH received a clipping yesterday of a wire story on the President's battle to keep House Rules Committee membership at 15. The story reported a speech criticizing "liberal groups for giving the American public a false picture of the House Rules Committee."

With the clipping was a short note, "Dear Mr. J. C.: Do you dare to print the whole truth?" There was no signature.

To reiterate an oft-made point: the Tar Heel will print any letter of student opinion on any subject at any time—IF the letter-writer "dares" to identify himself.

Unfortunately, experience proves, as Harry Golden put it, that the "world's biggest nonconformist is the person who writes a letter to the editor—and signs it." (JC)

UNC "Vigorous And Challenging Education"

By RUSSELL KIRK

More than 40 per cent of American high school graduates seek some sort of "higher" education after leaving high school—though much of this is simply advanced vocational training, and at least half the young people who enter colleges as freshmen never obtain degrees. Yet whatever the quality of the higher learning in America, more of our rising generation enter college than anyone, anywhere in the world, would have thought possible before the Second World War.

Doubtless one reason why so many students push on to college is the lamentably low level of performance of the average American high school: in order to learn anything intellectual or useful, one needs nowadays more than a high school diploma, which used to mean something but today is no more than a certificate of minimium sociability. So the average college, catering to untrained minds, is not superior to the respectable high school of a generation or two ago.

LOST SCALE

This "rising tide of enrollments" presents grave problems to our better universities and colleges, particularly state—supported insitutions. For one thing, the humane scale is lost when a campus expands to accommodate five or ten or twenty or even thirty thousand undergraduates. Genuine higher education always has been a matter of personal relationship and compact academic community: Professor Mark Hopkins on one end of a log, and a student on the other end.

The University of North Carolina, at Chapel Hill, experiences these characteristic difficulties. Always one of the half-dozen better state universities, and manifesting a peculiar character almost unmatched among state institutions, Chapel Hill (for the name of the little town is virtually synonymous with the University) has been a vigorous and charming center of real study.

Walking today on its old campus, with its early buildings of a faded yellow brick, any visitor must be impressed with the strength and beauty of the University—something that ought not to be allowed to perish.

Yet how long can this old character endure? Last June, Chapel Hill awarded 2,150 degrees—nearly as many as were granted, altogether, in the first century of the University's history. And the present enrollment, it appears, may be doubled by 1975 or so. "It is not good to be educated in a crowd," wrote Lord Percy of Newcastle, who knew much about the educational conundrums of our century.

NEW APPROACH

North Carolina is endeavoring to lessen this pressing difficulty by establishing a "Consolidated University"—Chapel Hill, the State College at Raleigh, and other state institutions—which will allocate functions to the different branches of the state's system of higher education, and divide the total student—population among several campuses. California already had embarked upon such a hierarchical system.

But I hope that every state may keep at least one university that offers something for imagination and intellect, and retains something of the old character of university life. A mass-university is no university at all.

Letter: Buckley Called Illogical

To the Editors,

An open letter to William F. Buckley, Jr.:

I must admit that I once had a great deal of respect for you, not because of your views but because of your reputation as an "Articulate spokesman of the Right Wing." However, this image has been shattered completely, I'm afraid.

Your article in Playboy, your actions on this campus, and your subsequent letter to your "Admirers" have disgusted this liberal and disappointed at least one conservative (see DTH letters, same day as Mr. Bobrowske and Mr. Hicks'). You are supposedly a spokesman for the Right Wing, and, in occupying this position I would imagine it would be your duty to convince people that the Right is right (correct, that is), and why its ideas should be heeded. You failed to do this or really even to attempt to do so, sir. If you don't know what "a deductively and empirically true argument" is, then I can understand. I know what it is, sir, and for your information the answer is in the Good Book, the dictionary. "Deduction," sir, is "reasoning from given premises to their necessary conclusions;" "Empirical" is "pertaining to, or founded upon experiment or experiance;" and "True" is "conformable to fact, correct; not erroneous, inaccurate or the like." I think that all of these describe Mr. Mailer's argument for his side, and my reasoning process has been moulded to accept the logical process, not the emotional attack. I do hope that they disseminate this sort of education at that august institution in New Haven. They do at our lowly state institution here. The course is Philosophy 21, and we would welcome you as a fellow student.

As to your statement about Mr. Tynan's cowardice, I would say that "cowardice" as defined by the military and the Right Wing is somewhat different from "cowardice" as defined by normal society. To desert on the battlefield in wartime is rather different than to oppose Barry Goldwater for President (or Fuhrer).

Although I didn't attend the Di-Phi debate on your censure and consequently do not know exactly what they considered vulgar about your lecture; Mr. Bobrowske noticed something that he never said much about. That itch that you scratched was not oblivious to all, and perhaps it wasn't language only that shocked the Di-Phi.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Buckley, I think that name-calling is lower than you think liberalism is, and your reference to "Judas Iscariot", "Old Lace" society, etc., in your letter does nothing to logically convince one that you should be paid. It does, however, dent your literary style, in my opinion. But, alas, Hilter did great things by evoking emotions, you know.

I personally hope that Mr. Mayer (Judas Iscariot, in case you didn't originally catch his name) sends your ridiculous (for the amount that we benefitted) fee to you so that we will be rid of your haunting image. I do think, though, Mr. Buckley, that you did more to promote the cause of Liberalism (liberalism-socialism? communism?)—on this campus than anyone from the Left Wing could have done. If you want to come back and attempt to restore your image, then I would welcome you with open arms, not an open wallet.

More 'Affecting' Than Golding

BOOK REVIEW

"Why late at night Will had heard —how often?—train whistles jetting steam along the rim of sleep, forlorn, alone and far, no matter how near they came. Sometimes he woke to find tears on his cheek, asked why, lay back, listened and thought, Yes, they make me cry, going east, going west, the trains so far gone in country deeps they drown in tides of sleep that escape the towns."

This paragraph strikes me as one of the noblest prose passages ever written in English. Read aloud, it throbs with a beautiful lyric cadence, as does many another text in Ray Bradbury's recent novel, Something Wicked This Way Comes. This is the story of two boys and an old man, but more than that it's the story of one boy, Will Halloway, one week short of his fourteenth birthday. It's the story of Will's first brush with maturity, right on the verge of adolescence; the end of the days when he could swear by "Mother's honor," of the days when his top concern was his best pal, Jim Nightshade, two minutes older, a boy who smiled less and talked less as the years increased.

"There was a history of mutual celebration between them. Each year Will lit the candles on a single cake at one minute to midnight. Jim, at one minute after, with the last day of the month begun, blew them out." And the month was October; the last day, Halloween. No coincidence.

This is a story of the particular sort of friendship known only to young boys, a kind of devotion that older people don't understand, except Ray Bradbury, who knows everything. It's a sinister tale, charged with menace, but the high points are not the moments of terror but the ones that explore Will's mind, the mind of a youngster with one cherished friend, and one human concern besides himself. One, that is, if we omit Halloway Sr., who serves an important role in the plot but provides a distressing amount of schmaltz. It's a shame that Bradbury didn't use someone else (a cousin or brother, perhaps) in place of Will's father, but the story has a powerful impact in spite of all that Mr. Halloway can do.

No contemporary author understands boys and their emotions so profoundly as Bradbury. Illinois, the ideal state of the Union for an upbringing, is his most frequent setting. And his characters, often enough, are under fourteen, and as such are more moving and affecting, to my taste, than those of William Golding in The Lord of the Flies. Bradbury's masterpiece, a short story titled "Hail and Farewell," describes, in magnificent language, the experiences of a twelve-year-old boy who could never grow older, but moved perpetually from one town to another, living with a new family every few years as an adopted child—until people found out. A psychologist might read this as an author's wish fulfillment, but I see it merely as an apex in fantasy and a brilliant achievement in lyric prose.

Bradbury in his new novel is often at his best, and Bradbury's best writing is a mystical experience. It's rather like listening to Joan Baez, though of course it's a great deal deeper. And it makes the reader do a certain amount of thinking, which most Americans have forgotten how to do.

Secretary Tom Davis

An Easy Guy To Talk To..

By PUNK REID

Who is one of the easiest guys on campus to talk with?

From general opinion around 'Y' court, it's Tom Davis, "one of the few male secretaries on campus."

"Being a city boy from up North, "Tom said recently," I wasn't too anxious to come down South.

"It wasn't because I didn't want to do "Y" work, it's because I didn't know if I could talk to kids down here about touchy issues such as race and so forth. But I soon found out that I could."

To show his familiarity with Southern students one of his letters reads as follows: "My wife and I are giving an open house in our apartment Dec. 18. I picked up the term 'open house' from my great-grandfather who marched through this area with General Sherman and who became a specialist in opening houses."

Tom, who has been with the UNC YM-YWCA for three years, went to Dartmouth, where he was a member of the Christian Union. From there he went to the Union Theological Seminary.

After graduation from the seminary, he applied through YMCA headquarters and was sent to UNC.

Tom believes that it's important to challenge students, to make their faith or philosophy meet human needs.

"It's not important what a kid believes," he continued, "it's that he acts his belief out in life so that it becomes real."

Has the 'Y' seen any changes since he's been here?

"The 'Y' is changing every year," Tom said. "It has less activities and is becoming more critical and more thoughtful.

"The 'Y' takes up the idea of 'criticism with affection' much more than other students unions can."

Tom says he is not only a secretary, but "I perform marriages, do a little counseling and Biblical interpretations.

Rev. Johnson Set To Lead Seminar

The Rev. Robert W. Johnson, Wesley Foundation Director at UNC, will act as chaplain at the Methodist Student Movement's 14th annual Christian Citizenship Seminar Feb. 3-9 in New York City and Washington, D. C.

About 60 Methodist students from colleges and universities are expected to participate.

Theme of the seminar will be "The Latin American Revolution and the United States: Forces that Shape the Revolution; Factors and Values that Shape our Response."

The students will hear and confer with speakers from Latin American countries as well as leaders of the United Nations, U. S. Government, church, and press. They will attend sessions of the United Nations and Congress and visit points of interest in both New York and Washington.

Chairman of the seminar is Wayne Proudfoot, student at Harvard Divinity School, Cambridge, Mass., and past president of the National Conference of the Methodist Student Movement. The coordinator is Dr. M. Richard Shaull, professor of ecumenics at Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J.; and the advisor is Miss Ruth Harris, New York City, a Methodist Board of Missions staff leader of student work.

The Methodist Student Movement includes Methodist students from state, independent, and Methodist institutions of higher education.

Free Flicks Enjoy Great Popularity

Last Saturday night approximately 600 students crowded into Carroll Hall (seating capacity of 480) to see the GM Free Flick "The Long Hot Summer."

The auditorium was full 20 minutes ahead of schedule and film-showings started early.

"The free flicks have really been great this year," Bob Reardon, chairman of GMAB, said yesterday. "The place has been packed every weekend. The films committee has done an excellent job."

John Compton, Chairman of the Films Committee, said the committee has tried to maintain a mixture of foreign, American, musical and dramatic films. "The musicals don't always go over too well," he added.

Sunday nights "films which students don't ordinarily have a chance to see" are shown, Compton said. Most of these are foreign films, but next Sunday an American film, "Raisin In The Sun" will be shown.

Compton said this film is extremely controversial. Starring Sidney Potier, Claudia McNeil, and Ruby Dee, it tells the story of a Chicago South Side family which attempts to move into an all-white' community.

"We try to get representative films from as many foreign countries as possible," Compton said. This year foreign flicks include British, French, Italian, German, Polish, Swedish, Japanese and Russian films.

Free flicks are shown on a new regular size Cinemascope screen which is twice the size of the one used last year.

Compton said there have been complaints about smoking and leaving refreshment cups and wrappers in Carroll Hall. "If this is not stopped, we may be without a place to show the films."

MEETING POSTPONED

The University Party Grievance Committee meeting scheduled for Graham Dormitory last Wednesday night was postponed until the second week in February.

After the postponement, Co-Chairman Marshall Bellovin reported, "Due to conflicts with the approaching exams, and with quizzes and the basketball game that night, there was a lack of attendance that would have kept the meeting from being as productive as necessary. In order to have significant insight into the problems brought before us, it would be necessary to have a larger turnout that would be more representative of the residents of the Upper and Lower Quads."

Chariot Racing, Anyone? Toronto Sponsors Contest

By MARY HARRIS

It is said that Carolina students will try anything once — and maybe even twice.

So here is a challenge from the University of Toronto for UNC to try something new — a chariot race, to be held at 2 p.m. on Feb. 2 in Toronto. The event is sponsored by the University of Toronto Engineers.

But before any budding young Romans start running to Toronto, there are a few rules they should know.

First, what is a 20th century chariot? A chariot consists of any vehicle weighing less than 150 pounds and having at least two rotating wheels.

Who supplies the horses? People do — any number of men (and maybe co-eds?) may pull the chariots. Also, there can be any number of blockers to try to run other chariots off the track.

The driver? Only one person must remain on the chariot from start to finish.

The race consists of one complete run around the track, marked off on U. of Toronto's front campus.

All schools of both the United States and Canada may enter one chariot each, and the prize will be the distinction of winning the World Championship Chariot Race.

The complete set of rules is in the DTH office.

Academic Freedom Yale Prof's Topic

Dr. Comer Vann Woodward, Sterling Professor of History at Yale University, will speak to the UNC chapter of the American Association of University Professors on "Academic Freedom in the South" in Howell Hall at 8 p.m. next Thursday night.

Recognized as one of the country's leading scholars of U. S. history with a special interest in the South, Dr. Woodard is a 1937 Ph.D. graduate of UNC.

While on the UNC campus, Dr. Woodward will address the Graduate History Club at 4 p.m. Thursday in room 08 Peabody Hall. At that time he will speak on "The Reputations of Historians."

Dr. Woodward was awarded a doctor of laws degree by UNC at its 1959 June commencement.

A native of Vanndale, Arkansas, he received a bachelor's degree at Emory University and master's degrees at Columbia and Oxford Universities. He has taught at the Georgia School of Technology, University of Florida, University of Virginia, and Scripps College.

He has served as a professor of history at Johns Hopkins University, a visiting lecturer in history at Harvard and the University of Chicago, as Fleming Lecturer, Louisiana State University, as Richard Lecturer, University of Virginia, as Commonwealth Lesturer, University of London, and as Harmsworth Professor of American History, Oxford University.

A former president of the Southern Historical Association, Dr. Woodward is also a recipient of the National Institute of Arts and Letters Literary Award. He is the author of numerous articles and of volumes on "Tom Watson, Agrarian Rebel"; "The Battle for Leyte Gulf"; "Origins of the New South 1877-1913"; "Reunion and Reaction"; and "The Strange Career of Jim Crow."

Two of Dr. C. V. Woodward's speeches, delivered on separate occasions, have been published by the sponsoring institutions: "American Attitudes Toward History," an inaugural lecture delivered at the University of Oxford, 1950, and "The South in Search of Philosophy," delivered at the University of Florida, 1938.

"The Age of Reinterpretation" is a pamphlet written by Dr. C. V. Woodward and published in 1961 by the American Historical Society's Service Center for Teachers of History.

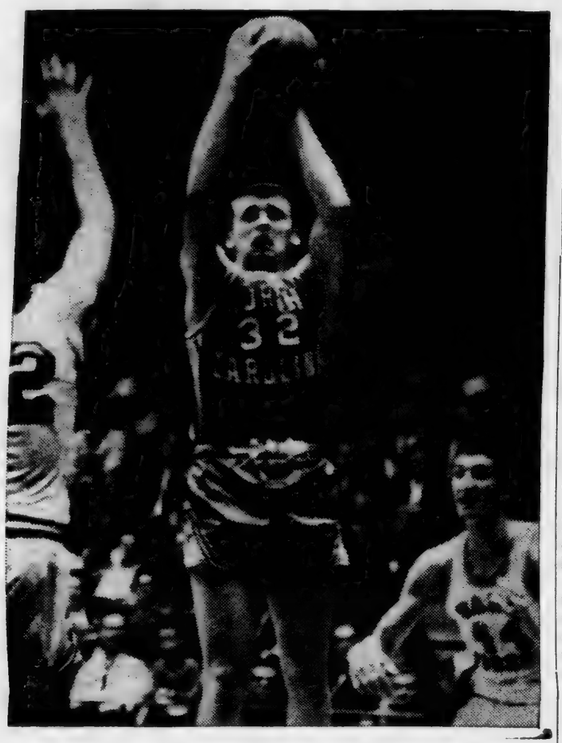
Dolphins Swim Past Wake Forest, 62-29

By JOEL BULKLEY

Carolina's Blue Dolphins extended their unbeaten skein in Atlantic Coast Conference competition to four meets Wednesday as they crushed the Deacons of Wake Forest, 62-29, in Winston-Salem.

Thad Adams, a sophomore from Charlotte, paced the Tar Heel swimmers with first places in the 200 and 500-yard freestyle events as coach Pat Earey's charges collected nine of eleven possible firsts.

The medley relay team of Scott Smiley (backstroke), Tate Kemper (breaststroke), Barry King (butterfly) and Mike Bissell (freestyle) copped the day's first event, while the freestyle relay team of Dick Woodrow, Jack Anker, Frank Lea and Smiley also won first place.



Woodrow took a first in the 50-yard freestyle race while Lea also added a win in the 220-yard individual medley. Howard Cone scored his first place in the 100-yard freestyle.

Wake Forest won the diving competition and took a first in the 200-yard backstroke race. Carolina's entry of Russell Redding and Lea finished second and third, respectively. Adams won the 500-freestyle test with Mike Bissell finishing third. This was the first time this season the Tar Heels had not finished in a one-two position in this event. Tate Kemper added Carolina's ninth first place by winning the breaststroke. UNC's Smiley was third.

Coach Earey commented yesterday that he was a bit surprised that his Blue Dolphins encountered so little difficulty in defeating Wake Forest. He said he had anticipated a much closer meet because Duke bearly defeated the Deacons and Duke gave UNC a real battle.

Student Athletic Council

Honors Billy Cunningham

Athlete Of The Week

By ED DUPREE

Billy Cunningham, Carolina's sophomore basketball sensation, was unquestionably UNC's athletic standout last week.

The 6-4½ Tar Heel who rebounds with the ease of a 7-footer threw in 29 points last Wednesday against Yale in an 86-77 victory, then followed it up with a 26-point performance at Notre Dame Saturday.

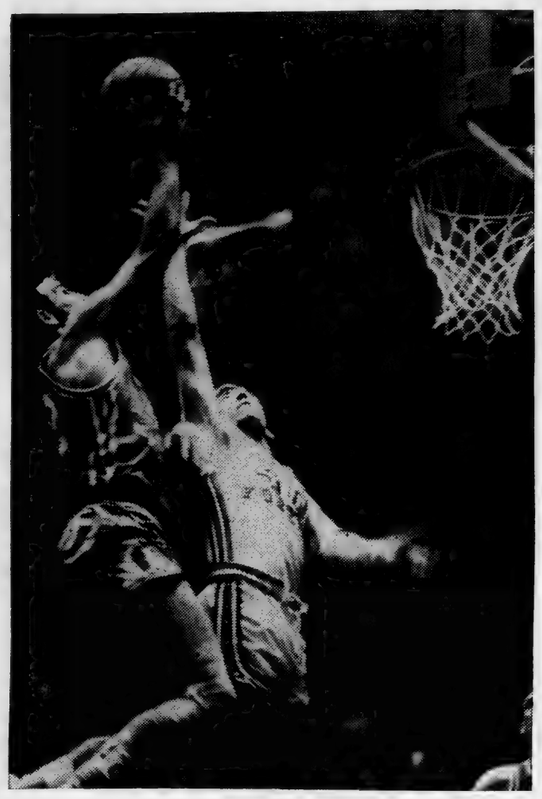
The Brooklyn, N. Y., center saved the day at South Bend with a spine-tingling last-second shot from at least 35 feet out which tied the score in regulation time. Carolina then went on to outscore the Irish by eight points in the overtime, with Billy leading the way, for a 76-68 triumph.

Cunningham's 55-point showing in two games moved him from 12th to sixth in the Atlantic Coast Conference scoring race. Since the first two games with Georgia and Clemson, in which he scored six and ten points respectively, he has averaged 22.8 points, topping 25 in three of four games.

The talented New Yorker is the ACC'c top rebounder. Using his springy legs and long arms to full advantage he has averaged 15.6 rebounds per game. His nearest competitor in that department is Art Heyman of Duke with a 10.6 mark.

Cunningham has erased any fears that the 10th ranked nationally Tar Heels would have trouble rebounding against taller teams.

Thus far this season he has grabbed the ball more times than 6-8 Donnie Mahffey of Clemson, 6-10 Bob Woollard of Wake Forest, 6-5 Jon McGlocklin of Indiana, and 6-9 Walt Sahm of Notre Dame—to name a few.



Billy is gradually closing in on his freshman scoring mark of 20.7, which he had for one semester. Last year's yearling team was undefeated until he left the team because of ineligibility.

His 18.5 average was pushed to 19.4 Wednesday in UNC's unsuccessful venture against Wake Forest. At his present pace he could easily give All-American Heyman a good battle for conference scoring honors.

Cleveland's Paul Brown 'Shocked And Surprised'

CLEVELAND, Ohio (UPI)—Paul Brown said Thursday he was "shocked and surprised but not bitter" about being fired as coach and general manager of the Cleveland Browns.

The 54-year-old Brown, fired late Wednesday by President Art Modell, stressed the fact that "Art has the right to do this." Brown, whose teams have been a power in the National Football League for the past 13 years, said he first learned he would be replaced Monday afternoon.

"As I was leaving for home," Brown said, "Art called me into his office and began telling me about his decision to make a change.

"I stopped him and said that I thought it would be better if he waited until my attorney was present. He said okay and a meeting was set for Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock."

"At that time," Brown continued, "Art showed me a legal document changing my duties." The firing was announced late on Wednesday.

Still On Salary

Brown, who has been head of the team for 17 years, said "the firing is no financial problem on my part."

The deposed coach, whose teams have won 296 games in 33 years, spoke without bitterness and only at one point did some sarcasm creep in. Brown said Modell told him he (Modell) "wanted to become sort of a playing owner."

When asked if the firing could have resulted from personal differences with Modell, Brown said "I did not have the feeling that anything was building up."

Modell declined to give any more particulars about the firing adding, "I stand on my original announcement."

When Modell took over, many observers felt that because he and Brown like to run things their own way one or the other eventually would be forced to leave.

Receives Many Calls

The interview was interrupted many times by the ringing telephone.

"That has been going on all day," Brown said. "I received many calls from people throughout the league."

Brown said many of the callers told him they were sorry to hear the news. He declined to say whether he had received any job offers.

In discussing a possible move elsewhere Brown said a big draw back would be his contractual obligation with the Browns.

"The contract still has six years to run and because of consideration, including stock option, it would be difficult for me to take another job without coming to some sort of financial settlement on the remaining years of the pact," Brown said.

Brown said he apparently would serve in an "advisory capacity." He said he would be a vice president of "I don't know what."

Blue Devils Set Conference Scoring Pace

A pair of Duke Blue Devils, All-American Art Heyman and Jeff Mullins, are setting the Atlantic Coast Conference scoring pace through games of last Saturday.

Heyman leads the ACC with a 24.3 average, while Mullins holds a slim lead for second with a 19.8 mark.

Carolina's Billy Cunningham scored 55 points in two games last week and jumped from 12th to 6th in the scoring race. Cunningham was averaging 15 points before last week. His average as of Sunday is 18.6. Cunningham is also the number one rebounder in the ACC with 15.6 rebounds per game. Heyman (10.6) and Jay Buckley (10.5) of Duke trail Cunningham in rebounds.

Yogi Poteet of Carolina is 10th in scoring with a 16.3 average. Larry Brown, also of Carolina, ranks 12th with a 15.3 average. Together Poteet and Brown are averaging 31.6 points a game, the best average for two backcourt men on the same team.

The second-best average for two backcourt men on the same team is 26.9 for Wake Forest's Dave Wiedeman and Butch Hassell. Wiedeman is averaging 15.7 per game. Hassell has an 11.2 average.

Carolina ranks second in team scoring with a 76.3 average. Duke is first with a 84.8 average. Wake Forest is third with a 75.1 average.

N. C. State is the defensive leader. The State defense has given up an average of 66.9 points in seven games. Duke is second in defense, giving up 68.3 points in 12 games. Carolina ranks third with 68.4 points given up in seven games.

Sonny Liston Nixes Miami

NEW YORK (UPI)—Heavy weight champion Sonny Liston called off his Maimi Beach return title fight with Floyd Pattterson Thursday and demanded that it be staged at Baltimore in May.

President Tom Bolan of Championship Sports, Inc. (CSI) immediately announced that plans for the Miami Beach fight on April 4 were being halted—"temporarily at least."

Patterson announced at his training camp in Highland Hills, N.Y.: "I have no intention of fighting in Baltimore. Unless Liston can show some valid reason for breaking his return-bout contract and refusing to fight at Miami Beach I'll be forced to turn the matter over to my attorneys."

Attorney Julius November, who is Patterson's advisor, said:

"If Liston fails to fight Patterson at Miami Beach on April 4, without a valid reason, we can pick up his forfeit of $207,000. And if Liston attempts to fight anyone else before he defends against Patterson—this year or any time, it could cost him a million dollars in penalties."

Under terms of the return-bout contract signed before the first Sonny-Floyd fight at Chicago's Comiskey Park on Sept. 25, Patterson has the right to pick the site, date and promoter of the return title bout.

Liston, discussing the situation in a Chicago restaurant, said:

"Nobody ever told me anything about the fight. I don't like that. Buy anyway, Championship Sports broke my return-bout contract because they didn't pay me any of my money within 24 hours after the fight-like the contract says. And now, although the contract is busted, they're still holding $207,000 of my money. And I definitely will not fight for Championship Sports."

2 Suspended For Cheating On Quizzes

The Men's Council delivered two sentences of definite suspension and two lesser penalties in honor code proceedings Thursday night. A fifth case resulted in a not guilty verdict.

Cheating on hour quizzes resulted in the dismissals from school for a full semester. In the first case, a freshman pleaded guilty to having copied parts of a test. He was discovered by his teacher.

The second case involved a missing answer to a quiz question. A fellow student of the defendant distinctly remembered having completed the test in entirety, and a portion of his paper was seen by the teacher in the possession of the defendant during the quiz.

Plagiarism

A student who turned himself in for plagiarism was given a sentence of definite probation for a semester. He confessed to having paraphrased a theme in freshman English.

Another first year student admitted lying to a dormitory adviser concerning damage done to the hallway. Professing that he only intended to give his roommate a chance to confess, he turned himself in. The Council returned a sentence of official reprimand, a written reproof which is automatically removed from the permanent record after four and a half months. In this instance the Council commended the forthright attitude of this student.

Insufficient Evidence

The final case, involving some two hours consideration, concerned an alleged instance of cheating on a lab report. Having been turned in by a fellow student, the defendant admitted that the lab work was completed in an exceptionally short period of time. The professor stated that the results on the paper could possibly have been obtained by the methods in question. Due to insufficient evidence in the case, a verdict of not guilty was rendered.

Possibly Within Next 5 Weeks

More Nuclear Test Ban Talks Hinted

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States and Russia may hold a new across-the-table meeting on nuclear test ban efforts sometime in the next five weeks, officials said Friday.

This was reported as Secretary of State Dean Rusk told reporters there still was hope for progress in reaching agreement with the Russians on nuclear testing and disarmament. His remarks came after he briefed the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee.

Officials stressed that nothing definite has been set yet on a nuclear conference. They said a report that Russia has made a "new overture" to the United States was an "overstatement."

But they acknowledged there has been speculation about the possibility of a change in the Russian position on international inspection under a nuclear treaty.

The presence here this week of Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vassily V. Kuznetsov gave credence to the reports. Kuznetsov, who has met with President Kennedy and Rusk, conferred Friday with U. S. disarmament chief William C. Foster and Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara.

Although a U. S. spokesman said no business was transacted in the Rusk-Kuznetsov talk, it is known that the Soviet official has discussed disarmament during the three-day visit.

U. S. officials stressed that no new proposals have been received from the Kremlin. But there was belief that recent comments by Soviet diplomats may foreshadow a new Russian treaty move in the comparative lull that has come in the wake of the Cuba crisis.

Civil Role Dominant, Dawson Says

By Ernest Stepp

Dr. Raymond E. Dawson, a UNC political scientist, told 300 AFROTC Cadets during a speech Thursday that the military has been civilized and that the professional officer in America must always remember that the civilian society is dominant over the military.

Entitling his speech the "Role of the Professional Officer in the American Democracy", Dawson stressed the change in this role since World War II. After showing why America now needed a large military force, Dawson explained that the technology of modern weapons has required the armed services to depend upon civilian skills. He stressed that only in actual employment of force can the civilian, military roles be distinguished.

The demand for the new technology of war has led to an enormous power complex to be developed in the U. S. Labeling this power complex the "military—industrial complex," Dawson explained civilian fears of the rising power of the military and reminded the Cadets that the military has only one function, "The management of violence" which distinguishes it from other groups. The military exists to carry out the wishes of American Society.

Qualming fears that the military is dominating American Society, Dawson labeled the views found in the book, "Seven Days in May" as "extremist." Dawson reminded the students of the civilian dominance over the military. He also cited the military refusal to envolve itself with politics in America.

He told the Cadets that as Officers they should avoid participating in partisan politics. Even though he admits that at times it is difficult to distinguish between the military role and political role, the Officer will jeopardize his professional integrity if he moves into the realm of politics.

Citing recent Senate Investigations on muzzling in the Armed Forces, Dawson said one point above all others stood out. "American Officers have been able to adopt themselves quite well and they realize that the principle of civilian domination was the most outstanding feature of the Armed Forces."

Mrs. Heard To Make Final Appearance With Quartet

The North Carolina String Quartet will play a special concert Sunday evening at 8 in Hill Music Hall, at which time Jean Heard will make her last appearance with the Quartet after an association of more than twelve years.

The program will include Beethoven's Quartet in A Minor, Opus 132, Walter Piston's Quartet No. 1, and Brahms' Quartet in A Minor, Opus 51, No. 2.

Members of the North Carolina String Quartet are violinists Edgar Alden and Jean Heard, violist Dorothy Alden, and 'cellist Mary Gray Clarke. Mr. Alden is also concertmaster and associate conductor of the University Symphony and professor of music theory and musicology at UNC. Mrs. Alden, a graduate of Oberlin Conservatory, is director of the Chapel Hill Youth Orchestra, and Miss Clarke is an instructor in harmony at UNC.

Jean Heard, second violinist of the quartet, studied with Ottokar Cadek at the University of Alabama and with Mischa Mischakoff at the Julliard School of Music in New York. Sunday's concert marks her last regular appearance in Chapel Hill as a member of the quartet, as she will leave shortly for Nashville, Tennessee with her husband, Alexander Heard, Dean of the Graduate School at UNC, who assumes his post as chancellor of Vanderbilt University on February 1st.

In the twelve years that the North Carolina String Quartet has been playing together they have built up an extensive repertoire, including more than forty complete quartets that have been heard in public performance. They have appeared in many localities throughout the Southeast. Last October their Florida tour took them to Sarasota, St. Petersburg, and Florida State University at Tallahassee. They will return this week from a tour in Virginia, playing for audiences at Newport News, Norfolk, and also in Raleigh.

Admission to the concert is free and open to the public.

Hypnotist Is Featured On Spring Slate

A hypnotist, Dr. John Kolisch and the U. S., Army Men's Chorus will begin the wide variety of programs offered by Graham Memorial next Semester. The Gerry Mulligan Quartet, the Minneapolis Symphony and Henry L. Scott, piano humorist, are also scheduled for February.

Kolisch, who will appear on February 8, is a lecturer-demonstrator, hypno-consultant, and a noted authority in the art of hypnotism. One of the most interesting features of his program is audience participation in practical demonstrations of hypnosis, self-hypnosis, mass-hypnosis, post hypnotic suggestion, feats of memory and other astrounding experiments.

Following Kolisch on February 9, is the U. S. Army Men's Chorus of 52 members. This group is rated with the best and incidentally, has a waiting list of prespective members around 1,000.

Appearing on February 12 and 17 will be Henry L. Scott and the Minneapolis Symphony, respectively. Scott is the originator of concert humor and "hilarious virtuoso" of the piano.

The Gerry Mulligan Quartet is a noted jazz group whose leader is an outstanding baritone saxiphonist and jazz innovator. He started a new trend—the pianoless quartet—consisting of his baritone saxophone, a trumpet, bass and drums. He will appear February 27.

The new York Musica, Rey de la Torre, guitarist, and Lester Flatt and Earl Scruggs will be here in March. Flatt and Scruggs, who appeared here last year, have returned by popular request.

The G.M. Spring Weekend, starting Friday April 26, will headline the Four Preps. On Saturday afternoon, April 27, there will be a long concert with the Duke Ambassadors and the Harlequins. After the concert there will be five combo parties also sponsored by G.M.

Legislature Passes 'Bad Check' Bill

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature finally gave its unanimous approval Thursday night to both the controversial "bad check" bill and a bill supplementing the Yackety-Yack budget by $951.-60.

Also receiving SL approval were bills revising student membership on the Graham Memorial Board of Directors; amending the election laws; and a resolution requesting the WRC, IDC and IFC to submit their by-laws to the Rules Committee of SL for investigaion and approval.

The bad check bill, introduced by Ford Rowan, establishes an offense against the student body for flagrantly and repeatedly issuing checks which are returned not honored by the bank, when the bank is not in error. Any student who fails to reimburse the person who cashed the check for the full amount of the check, within 30 days after notification by the Student Credit Commission (SCC), stands in violation of the honor code.

The SCC will request regular notification from the merchants and banks in Chapel Hill and the University administration of persons who have cashed "bad" checks. If the check goes unresolved after 30 days, the SCC will refer such instances of bad checks to the Attorney General for investigation and appropriate action. The student involved is then subject to the jurisdiction of the proper judicial branch of student government involved.

The bill was orginally introduced in the November 8th session of the last assembly and had been revised three times, by the Judicial Committee and SL, before being passed by a 34-0 vote Thursday.

Yack Bill

For the second time this year, SL approved a $951.60 supplment, from the General Surplus, to the Yack. It was introduced by Jean Yoder (UP) for the Yack. After it passed the first time, Student Body President, Inman Allen vetoed it for a technicality—it did not state where the money was to come from. Louis Legum, Editor of the Yack, spoke in the behalf and said that two errors had been made in the net income of Yack. He said attempts had been made, to lessen their debt by cutting down the number of books to be printed and by charging admission to their beauty contest and thus took in $810, but they are still in the red.

A bill, introduced by John Mcmillan (UP) and Johnsve Massenburg (UP), changing student membership on the Graham Memorial Board of Directors from one male student and two presidential appointees to one male student, one presidential appointee and one SL appointee was passed.

The Elections Laws were amended in a bill written by Charles Cooper (SP) The additions state that examination of candidates for a school election will begin no later than three weeks prior to the date of the elections, and also that final decisions concerning provisions of this bill will be made by the Constitutional Council except when

AMA Leader Says Medical Aid Is Hoax

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Dr. Edward R. Annis, president-elect of the American Medical Association (AMA), Friday labelled President Kennedy's medicare plan a fraud and a hoax and said the public is against it.

The Miami physician told a conservative political action meeting sponsored by "Human Events," a Washington newsletter, that last year's battle over the issue was only the beginning of what probably would be an even more "brutal fight" this year.

Annis predicted the White House and some congressional leaders would use "arm twisting" tactics in efforts to enact the program. It would be financed through higher Social Security taxes on workers and employers.

Although Annis claimed that the majority of public opinion had turned against President Kennedy's proposal, he said:

"The zeal of administration planners to secure a greater concentration of power in Washington over the lives of citizens through medicare burns with undiminished fervor."

The proposal was narrowly defeated in the Senate last year and did not come to a vote in the House.

Annis urged members of Congress and others opposed to the administration plan not to compromise on basic principles.

Another speaker, Adm. Ben Moreell, chairman of Americans for Constitutional Action, said many Americans were willing to surrender "the solid substance of freedom for the illusory promise of security."

US Warns Allies: Stop Cuban Trade Or Lose Our Aid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A number of free world nations have been warned they face the loss of U. S. aid if their ships continue to trade with Cuba, the State Department said Friday.

A department spokesman said the crackdown would be required under a provision of the foreign aid bill passed by Congress last session.

He declined to list the countries which have been warned but said the notifications have been served over the last two months.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk was questioned about the Cuban shipping situation when he briefed the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee at a closed door session Friday morning.

Committee Chairman J. William Fulbright, D-Ark., reported that Rusk seemed encouraged by the response of many nations to U. S. efforts to discourage shipping to the Fidel Castro regime. Rusk observed, however, that some of the vessels engaged in the Cuban trade are under long-term charters and got under firm control of their governments.

At the briefing, Rusk also made these points on Cuba:

—The United States is determined to protect the Western Hemisphere countries from any overt or subversive invasion by Castro forces. He declined to go into detail on this for newsmen.

—The administration is confident that all Soviet offensive weapons such as missiles and bombers have been withdrawn from Cuba despite contrary reports from some Castro refugees.

—The United States had made no commitment against a Cuban invasion.

Meredith Charged By UM Chancellor

OXFORD, Miss. — (UPI) — The chancellor of the University of Mississippi charged Friday that Negro James H. Meredith caused the current campus unrest himself by complaining about conditions at the school.

"We were getting along quietly before the press conference," said Dr. J. D. Williams. "The press conference sparked the whole thing."

Williams referred to a press conference Meredith held last Monday to announce that unless "definite and positive changes" were made at the school, he might quit next semester.

Since his announcement there have been nightly demonstrations on the campus.

Williams was also critical of the stand Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy took on Meredith's announcements.

Williams said the university had worked closely with the Justice Department in maintaining "proper conditions" at "Ole Miss" since Sept. 30, when Meredith's entry onto the campus sparked 14 hours of bloody rioting.

The chancellor said he thus was "surprised" by Kennedy's public plea asking the state and university officials to make the "changes" Meredith felt were needed.

"I doubt that Mr. Kennedy's statement helped us," Williams said.

The rowdiest of the recent demonstrations occured Thursday night when about 400 students gathered in and around the school cafeteria where Meredith was having dinner.

Williams met with Justice Department officials Friday afternoon to discuss the matter. He said the names of some of the demonstrators had been taken but there had been no disciplinary action. "This will be considered later," he said.

Expulsion Possible

"If we find somebody who is definitely responsibility for creating difficulties which disrupt the campus, we would expel him," said Williams.

In the town of Oxford itself, a federal grand jury probing the Sept. 30 rioting continued to take testimony Friday, with no indication of how long the probe would last.

The grand jury, of 21 men and two women, returned a partial report Thursday, but it was learned Friday that none of the 55 indictments concerned the riots which killed two and left hundreds injured.

The grand jury is investigating the government's charges against former Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker and 10 others arrested in connection with the rioting.

The 11 men face a number of charges, including rebellion, insurrection, conspiracy to oppose the authority of the United States, conspiracy to impede federal officers and interferring with federal officers in the performance of their duties.

PHILOLOGICAL CLUB

The Philological Club will meet Tuesday at 7:45 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge in Morehead Planetarium. Walter W. Arndt of the Department of Germanic Languages will present a paper entitled "The Foreigner in Russian Literature."

Berlin Wall Blocks Set Up By Guards

BERLIN (UPI) — Communist border guards have brought up rolling road blocks to prevent refugees from smashing through the wooden barriers guarding the approaches to West Berlin, travelers reported Friday.

West Berlin police were told the guards had mounted heavy, 30-foot long wooden beams on rollers at the Babelsberg Autobahn checkpoint and at the entrance to the Berlin-Hamburg Autobahn. They can be rolled out quickly to block speeding cars.

Love Me Or Leave Me Is Free Flick Today

Doris Day, James Cagney, and Cameron Mitchell are the stars of the G.M. Free Flick for tonight. "Love Me or Leave Me," in cinemascope and color, is the story of Ruth Etting, torch singer of the 20's and early 30's, whose gangster husband created a headline scandal. A crippled Chicago racketeer discovers a talented dime-a-dance hostess, pushes her into the bigtime, marries her and turns savage when he is unable to complete his domination. Showings will be at 7:30 and 9:30 in Carroll Hall and I.D. cards are required.

Reorganization Of Orientation Groups Is Urged

A bill to reorganize the Campus Orientation Committee was among the bills and resolutions introduced at the conclusion of Thursday night's SL session.

Bob Spearman (UP-SP), author of the bill, cited the inadequacy of the present bill, and the fact that the chairman of the orientation committee is selected so late as reasons for this new bill. It states that the orientation committee will be composed of a chairman, and 22 representative students. The chairman must be "a rising senior and must be appointed by the President of the Student Body by December 10th of each each year and then must be approved by SL."

Atlletic Scheduling

Also introduced was a resolution which urges improvement in future Carolina athletic schedules. The bill was introduced by Ford Rowan for Chuck Wrye. It resolves that Student Legislature urge that major athletic events with Big Four opponents not be scheduled during vacations. It also added that SL should go on record as supporting our athletic teams in their efforts.

A bill to appropriating $25 to the Class of 1966 for initial operating and publicity expenses was also entered by Spearman.

Rowan also introduced a resolution calling for the use of the Monogram Club building as a dormitory social room.

SG Well Off Financially, Says Criswell

Bill Criswell, treasurer of the Student Body told the Legislature on Thursday night that Student Government finances were very solid.

In his report, Criswell said that the Student Government budget for the academic year (1962-63) is $157,000.00, an estimated figure based on projected income from student fees. Of that money $154,-284.66 was appropriated by the Legislature last spring to be spent this year. The unappropriated balance then stood at $2,715.34.

Of the appropriated budget, the Student Government is obligated to spend or has spent so far a total of $153,920.72. Checks have been written for $96,246.17 of this amount, leaving a balance of $57,-674.60 in unfulfilled obligations.

At the end of the last academic year, the amount of money in the General Surplus Fund was $44,-747.55. Of this amount the Legislature has spent $4,544.50, leaving a balance of $40,203.05 in General Surplus. The General Surplus Fund serves as a "buffer" fund and as a source of credit for the Student Government Fund.

From the unappropriated balance of this year's budget carried over from last spring, the Legislature has appropriated $1,477.64 this fall, leaving $1,238.70 in unappropriated funds at the present time.

Sexy Teacher May Lose Job

PARIS (UPI)—The mathematics teacher crossed her shapely legs, tossed her black hair and said "I'm furious" if the beauty and sex appeal that won her the title of Miss France means she's losing her job.

But there it was in the newspaper, an announcement by the director of the Bel-Air School for Girls in Angouleme, a city of 90,-000 in southwest France, that the 22-year-old teacher was not wanted because she won the contest.

The smile faded from teacher Muguette Fabris' face as she read the news while she stood in a Paris television studio where she was appearing on a program.

"It looks like the end of my teaching job. But the director, Miss Vechot, has not told me I was fired," she said.

"Until now she has only said I cannot wear makeup to class, that I must not make myself noticeable, that teachers must be discreet and that my photograph must not appear in the newspapers."

But Miss France, hitherto known as Miss Fabris to the 12 and 14-year-olds in the algebra and geometry classes, has had her face and figure: 35½-23½-36 featured in the newspapers.

So have the condemnations of the school director and various statements from supporters of each side.

Even sedate Le Monde reprinted letters from renowned professors supporting the idea of a pin-up teacher.

Seen Drinking Coffee

The school director was quoted as saying the school would have "nothing more to do" with Miss France because her long hair "is not a good example to our young girl;" because she wears black clothes and makeup and was seen drinking coffee in the morning in a bistro "probably because she hadn't had enough sleep."

"Other teachers wear their hair loose," said Miss France. Looking sad and checked. "Should all teachers be old and wear glasses. Perhaps it's better for the pupils to have a young teacher—it's more agreeable."

Nobody has objected to her winning the beauty contest except the director," she said.

Her parents, who operate a service station in Chatellerault, her home town, are "content." so are her friends.

"My pupils wrote on the blackboard in class, "Vive Miss France," and I received a letter of congratulations signed by all my 35 pupils," Miss Fabris said.

Another Casualty For The "Light Brigade"

In the present conflict between Conservative and Liberal we are treated to a spectacle, the unabashed misencounter between program, statistic, and wit. It is a power struggle in the worst sense, and no issue is spared. The ultimate end, no matter which passionate group suffers success, is confusion and disenchantment.

The problems of our time seem to demand dynamic leadership. What seems to be our trouble? Why the endless, angry debate? Never in history have men been more confronted with the raw morality in issues. Never have the issues been more universal in their application and resoluton. Never has there been such a public awareness to the world situation.

No matter how misinformed or misled, men everywhere are giving voice to their beliefs: Conservatives picket Seeger; Liberals picket Barnett; Africans revolt; Spaniards mumble: Frenchmen affirm; Indians resist; Russians demand; Cubans suffer. Freedom and poverty continue to be banged around in a masterful game of political ping-pong. Fear or courage become reasons both to live and die.

So we continue in efforts to solve the human and social problems surrounding us. Books are written with magnificent titles. Speeches are made using a pinch of passion and a ration of reason. Demonstrations continue to demonstrate our ineffectuality. The issues fester and the problems progress, arrested for a moment in one area to suddenly appear in another.

And the word we constantly hear is power. Every diplomatic feint; every political gratuity orbits around having, or not having) power. This seems to be the trap. Power spawns the duality of our morality and places honesty and valor on the plate of expediency. History has shown us the pattern of power and the depressing fact that we have learned nothing.

There is a need for a world revolution, a revolution that dwells hopefully in the spirit and dignity of men. It is a revolution based on spritual exhauston and an aroused compassion. This moral re-evaluation is an almost impossible fantasy that fits neatly into the tragi-comic world of today. But, no matter how much it seems that the unrealizable product of the imagination, it is needed.

To a people nursed on the John Wayne ethic this seems laughable, for the revolution recognizes our essential and undeniable weakness. We would no longer be demi-gods fighting the tragic battles in rose and gold lights, for we would become lonely, naked people with hands out-stretched to the infinity which is our home. Power gives the responsibility to rule; weakness gives the responsibility to love.

We could replace the price of existence with the price of life. To continue in our present paradox is to continue to decay.

Today we have the gifts and the ability to begin a task which has long been coming, the freedom of men. Some say we have started this task, but we have started with the same outmoded tools of power that have failed us before. It is time for every individual to inspect his lonliness, taste his fears, accept his failure and success. It is time to recognize that no person has a corner on loneliness, fear, failure and success; and that all men feel these things in their solitary reflections.

The baroque encrustations that hide our identity serve only as models of the neon integrity of power which stifles and misconstrues our dreams. The acceptance of death should be preferable to the pursuit of decay.

This revolution doesn't have much of a chance and that is a sad fact. A French student confronted men in a small cafe. He was about to leave for Algeria, another war of purpose. "I'm fed up," he said. "Tired of 'liberty, equality, fraternity', words that have been used for every brutal purpose. I once felt the words, but that feeling is gone."

I couldn't answer his tight face and his broken voice. I could only think of a distant sand-pile where toy soldiers lay dying under small fingers that were only momentarily distracted from their lesson by the yap of a dog and by the smell of wisteria in the summer air. It was the beginning of the trap; another casualty for the "light brigade."

Weather

There are those who will always maintain that the essential appeal of that magnificent disease "Chapelhillitis" rests largely, if not solely, within the scope of a transcendent "atmosphere."

Confining mysterious appeal to verbal communications on the nature of atmospheric scope does, indeed, transcend . . . understanding, if nothing else. We simply don't know. We like it hear, yes, of course. But the "why" of the matter we simply can't pinpoint . . . we just ain't sure.

Well, apparently, one of the factors in that transcendent appeal has been in evidence recently. Some choose, rather frankly and bluntly, to call it simply "the weather." That, we submit, is grossly inadequate.

Weather, what is it? It's the top down on that DKE's sports car. It's the chance to walk through the campus, slowly, casually. It's the kinesthetic sense of well being. It's kids from Tryon, Rocky Mount, and Charlotte playing tag football in lower quad. It's horseshoes, bicycles, dogs, and friendship. It's so many degrees for so many hours; it's so many things for so many people; and it's so many times for so many years; and it's been most recently an essential part of that transcendent appeal, here in Chapel Hill. Liberals: Piddlers And Pussyfoots . . .

The behavior of the head of the Carolina Forum and the Di-Phi towards William F. Buckley amounts to little more than childish vengefulness. Unable to touch Buckley in the realm in which he operates, that of ideas, they had to seek a more petty means of attack.

If there is any censuring to be done it should be done of Mr. Mayer. After all Buckley did ask permission to change his topic and speak on his encounter with Norman Mailer. And Mayer did grant that permission. (Also Mr. Mayer apparently played the part of the gracious host while preparing the assassination of his guest).

There has been some misrepresentation. Buckley did not read the article. He spoke from the same materials that were used in the article. There is a considerable difference.

Buckley's intentions were of the best. Rather than give the welfare speech which had been given a hundred times before, he was generous enough to want to give his audience a speech that was relatively fresh. (Where did they get the strange idea that a man who gives a hundred speeches a year is supposed to write a new one just for us?)

Since he had just returned from Africa and did not know the magazine was out, he was actually intending to favor us with a preview, not slight us. (To many it was a pleasure to have the same material in printed form to review after the event.)

Buckley, moreover, did more than speak. He spent no little time answering questions, although that part of the program was cut prematurely short by Mayer.

The common Liberal reaction to the speech seems to have been that "he didn't say anything," which indicates the mental level on which they operate. All Buckley did was (in about one hour) brilliantly describe and condemn one whole philosophy of life and brilliantly describe and praise another whole philosophy of life.

Because his approach was literary and imaginative rather than plodding, some of the Liberals were unable to follow him. (Perhaps they would be more comfortable with discourse of the fashion: See my dog. His name is Gyp. See Gyp run.)

He did not slight Carolina by underestimating his audience when he said the welfare speech was too academic. He flattered us by over-estimating the brains of a part.

As for the Di-Phi, their resolution of censure was an act of unbelievable prissiness.

Of course, if Buckley had been anyone else but Buckley, the Di-Phi would not have censured him and the head of the Forum would not have attempted to obstruct his legal right to collect his fee.

If the world of the Liberals is populated by such pussyfoots and piddlers, it is no wonder that conservatism is becoming the wave of the future.

Note: (A pussyfoot is one who hedges. In his conduct toward Buckley Mayer certainly hedged. A piddler is one who trifles. The Di-Phi trifled.)

And to top it all off. Clotfelter calls Buckley a carpetbagger. When did you stop liking carpetbaggers, JC?

Letters To The Editors

Debating Team, Otelia, Dorm Leadership

Frosh Outlook Very Bleak

To the Editors:

From the appearances given at Ehringhaus dormitory, leadership (or should I say the lack of leadership) within the Freshman class organization is an ominous indication of what is to come of future freshman activities.

I hold up as example the so-called "supervised" beer party, held Saturday afternoon, December 15. Among the attendants of this stag "get-together" were many constituents of the freshman class hierarchy (i.e., dormitory officers, IDC representatives, Freshman class executive board representatives, class officers). On a few occasions these highly-esteemed individuals engaged in fist fights, window breaking, and rowdy acts which certainly did not cast a favorable impression of the class.

If we are to have leadership such as was displayed at functions of the class, or involving members of the class, members of the Class of '66 beware! Be prepared for such shameful actions and do not let them dismay and alarm you as they have dismayed and alarmed this member of the Class of '66.

Otelia Tries To Find Faults

To the Editors,

As a member of the opposite sex and a graduate student I would like to take this opportunity to reply to Otelia Conner's latest letter to the Daily Tar Heel. I read it Sunday at lunch and I wished at the time that she could have been there with me, for I was eating with four lovely young ladies who, I think, typify the Carolina graduate women. These four girls, Barbara Booth, Anita Phillips, Carol Ann Masters, and Anne Bryant, all of Kenan Dorm, are attractive, charming, gracious, intelligent, and extremely desirable. None of them is in the least danger of winding up an old maid. Nor are they exceptional in this respect; the Carolina graduate women as a group can compare favorably with any other group I know of. I could not wish for better representatives of their sex.

I have never met Otelia Conner, although I see her daily in Lenoir Hall. Perhaps if she did not try so hard to find faults she could see virtues; you can not see the stars until you take your eyes off the ground. The next time I see Mrs. Conner I will introduce her to some real ladies.

'Petite' Review Hit As 'Stupid'

To the Editors:

Concerning Mr. Ludwig's review, if it can be called that, of the Petite Dramatique's production of the Miracle Worker: it is the most obscure, conceited, insensitive, and generally stupid of the reviews the DTH has yet made public, and that's saying a great deal. I simply do not understand why a responsible newspaper (you see I'm giving you the benefit of the doubt), time and again, allows a child to judge what is, hopefully, an adult medium.

I would remind Mr. Ludwig, and whatever there is of his school on campus, that there is also a positive approach to things, and here, specifically, to criticism. The stock, anti-success-story phrases he uses to begin his article, namely "sold out," and "make a million," and which he attributes to Mr. Gibson, the playwright, as an example of those who have prostituted themselves for bad, old money, brace us to expect a tantrum. But Mr. Ludwig hasn't that sort of vitality; he apoligizes, saying he might be a little wrong about playwright Gibson. Why waste the space then, Mr. Ludwig?

But he hasn't finished with Mr. Gibson. In fact he wastes half his article talking about him before he even mentions the production. One suspects that Mr. Ludwig, who can hardly hold back the tears when he sees a pencil vendor, is not as interested in talking about the Petite Dramatique's production as he is in striking out at the cruel world (of which William Gibson is the unsuspecting symbol) which harbors both poor and plenty. There is a stench of envy in his apologetic protests.

Can someone please explain to me what it means to ask "is Gibson's talent large enough to carry the theme without exploiting his characters or embarrassing his audience?" Or, what are Helen's "strangulated movements" (O Lord that one must have taken him hours!), and how are they "gimmicks"? Or, what does it mean to say that "The performance was quite casual and not once did I feel that the actors had hit upon a truthful moment. And stranger yet, it seemed to me that the cast was working against the script rather than with it"? Our moment of truth arrives when we realize that, for Mr. Ludwig, the play certainly is strange.

The zenith of Mr. Ludwig's perplexity comes when, in speaking of the play as "generally dull and talkative," (which is a ridiculous criticism when one considers that the play centers around a little girl who can't talk and her anything but talkative teacher), he tells us that "The audience knows very well what it is waiting for and can do without the contrived effects and dramatic indictments that are so much filler." Does Mr. Ludwig mean that an audience attends a play merely to witness particular incidents, and that everything else should be cut except those incidents? Should we cut everything but the bedroom scene from Othello, or the pistol scene from Hedda Gabler, or the pump scene from the Miracle Worker? He couldn't mean that, because to cut the "contrived effects" (and what effects are not necessarily contrived in any form of writing?) would call for just this kind of action. Perhaps Mr. Ludwig means the effects seem overly contrived, which isn't quite what he says, and which I must disagree with unless he can give me an enlightening example, something his article earnestly lacks. I won't pretend to know what he means by "dramatic indictments."

I am not adverse to agreeing with Mr. Ludwig where I think he is right, and I do think he is right about the poor choice of theatre-in-the-round for the play. Of course I am not familiar with such esoteric authorities and terms as "Cluman's 'X quality'," but if, whover they are, they are opposed to the Miracle Worker being presented in the threatre-in-the-round, then I am for them.

As far as individual performances, I consider Ann West's portrayal of the mother to have been a sympathetic interpretation of the role. The mother is probably the most difficult part of the entire play, because she must be at once restrained and emotional. She is restrained towards her husband and the teacher, Miss Sullivan, but, understandably, emotional toward the child. The part is a tightrope.

Paul Gold seemed to warm up to his part as the play progressed. There were times when I felt he should have been more blustering, but he evidently understood his part quite well, and made the most of what could have been very hammy. As far as Henry Ramer is concerned, I think Mr. Ludwig was mostly right, he never quite understood the depts of his character's emotion.

Margaret Cathell was superb. She moved with a show of stubborn poise that belied her inward softness. Mr. Ludwig is of the opinion that she was "posturing" where she should have been depicting "genuine emotion." This is a misunderstanding of the character, I think. Annie Sullivan wanted to appear tough on the outside perforce of her inward uncertainity, and would appear to posture where one would expect a great show of emotion. Then, too, she felt that emotion would never do in trying to reach Helen. She emphasizes this repeatedly.

Anne Carson was totally convincing. There were moments when I knew, or felt, that she could see, but they were rare, and I never minded. Her part was almost all action, approximating pantomime, which any old hand will tell you is the most difficult art in the business.

As for the direction, I don't pretend to know a good deal about moving and grouping figures, in fact I have always had a difficult time remembering which is left and which right stage. But, except for the bad choice of round theatre, I felt that Wesley Van Tassel's direction was excellent. I, personally, would be scared to death to direct something in the round. It's not difficult to imagine how careful one must be to make certain everyone catches the full significance of a scene. Every foot of the stage was utilized quite effectively; the converting of Annie's room into the hunting lodge, with only minor adjustments, was all very well though out.

In summation, I applaud the entire cast, and everyone who had anything to do with the play, except Mr. Ludwig, of course.

Big Sports Coverage Hit

To the Editors,

The Tar Heel victory over the Irish team received more than adequate coverage by The Daily Tar Heel. Truely the basketball team deserved and merited the headlins of The Daily Tar eel on January 6. Another group of ten students also brought honors to the University of North Carolina during this past weekend, the UNC Debating Team. Not only did the UNC Debate Team win honors for UNC, but they also played host to seven other colleges for the ACC Debate Tournament. It seems disheartening to note the lack of interest on the part of The Daily Tar Heel of the outstanding accomplishments of the debators of UNC.

Am I to assume that the editors are not interested in scholastic victories over Duke, USC, Wake Forest, Maryland, Virginia, Clemson, and Washington and Lee. Victories by the UNC Debating Team were scored against these schools without adequate coverage in The Daily Tar Heel.

The debators for UNC debate because they enjoy the activity. Members of the debating team do not receive scholarships for their work. I feel that the least courtesy The Daily Tar Heel can pay the UNC debate team is to print IN FULL the victories of the varsity and novice debaters. The photograph and caption in Sunday's paper did not do justice to the excellent performance of the UNC debate team in the ACC Debate Tournament.

. . . A View From The Hill . . .

Armistead Maupin, Jr.

Harry Golden is a funny man.

Admittedly, we don't always agree with what the Charlotte newspaperman has to say. But there's certain rustic charm about his political observations that never fail to bring a smile.

Last week Mr. Golden was a riot.

The roly-poly, cigar-chewing editor of the Carolina Israelite proclaimed in one of his homespun homilies that William Buckley was just "another yankee who took us Southerners." Now, had this statement come from the pen of Jonathan Daniels or Ralph McGill or even Jim Clotfelter, it might not have inspired so much laughter. But coming from Harry Golden . . .

In the first place, Mr. Golden is about as "Southern" as "American Bandstand," and, from all indications, prefers to stay that way. As an active member of the NAACP and an exponent of the radical right, the illustrious journalist is as far removed from Southern thinking as he can ever hope to be. This fact, of course, does not deter him from handing down Olympian comments on Why the Southerner Thinks As He Does. Mr. Golden is a sort of foreign correspondent, you might say, for the Northern press . . . the Pillar of Enlightenment in this alien land. So when he speaks of "us Southerners" in one breath and derides the South in the next, it's difficult to take him seriously.

nd Mr. Golden's righteous indignation over the Buckley fee sounds just a little ridiculous coming from a man who once spent five years in federal prison for mail fraud.

From Bill Buckley's magazine, National Review: "Junius Scales, recently pardoned by President Kennedy after serving only a fraction of his sentence under the Smith Act (he had been the Communist Party boss of Tennessee and the Carolinas), may credit his release from prison to a letter he wrote the President last summer, in which he argued "I can best serve my country outside the federal penitentiary than in it.' What country, Junius?"

Dr. Hill Says Baptists Must Reform To Avoid Irrelevancy

By GARRY BLANCHARD

The Southern Baptist Church faces a bleak future of growing irrelevancy unless its adherents reformulate their message and redirect their energies.

This is the view of Dr. Samuel Hill, 35, head of the religion department at the University and an ordained Baptist minister.

"At present the most educated guess would be that during the next two decades the Southern Baptists will be moving in a reactionary direction theologically, becoming more doctrinaire in temper," the Kentucky native asserts, writing in the current issue of the Protestant weekly, The Christian Century.

"But what will happen once the new breed of laymen and pastors enters many key leadership positions defies prediction," he continues.

"The outlook and tone may change under the influence of progressive leadership; on the other hand, the liberal spirits, unable to remain and retain their integrity, may eventually affiliate with another Baptist body or another denomination."

The basis of Dr. Hill's contention is that Southern Baptists, 10 million members strong, are tied in so closely with the "Old South" culture "that the new south's arrival threatens the equilibrium of the institution . . . and the relevance of its ministry.

"The upshot may be that the Southern Baptist witness will be confined to members of the lower classes and to those persons who are unalterably oriented to the 'old south' cultural traditions."

He continues: "Two factors in particular contribute to the storm beginning to break with full fury upon the Southern Baptist Church. The first is the rise of a new mentality among young southerners." It rejects the "sacrifice of intellect" required by acceptance of the "old orthoxody."

The second factor "is the trend toward greater centralization of power" in the church, reflecting its "fantastic growth in size and wealth," and desire to maintain formal unity. This is a disruptive force because "unlike their northern Baptist brothers, Southern Baptists have in theory vested authority nowhere save in the local churches."

Yet, "some form of modified democracy, akin to that by which our nation operates, is infinitely preferable to rule by lowest common denominator."

At present, Hill says, "the whole denomination is potentially at the mercy of men who are at best naive and untrained, at worst arrogant and demagogic. Traditional policy is not worth maintaining if this is the best it can do."

Besides this change in organization, Hill argues, "Southern Baptists need to undertake self-study, to practice self-criticism, most of all to achieve perspective on themselves.

"At present an inherent defensiveness against criticism — or, more accurately, a kind ignoring of all criticism—prevails."

But "most needed," Hill says, is the realization by Baptists that they "have recognized only one responsibility—faithfulness to the literal word as they interpret it. They have not seen that the Christian message has many sides and many possible interpretations . . .

". . . when the Christian message bypasses the great personal and social ills of our day to concentrate wholly or primarily on one's status before a judgmental God in the life to come, it sounds hollow and harsh.

"Many would prefer hell to life in heaven with a God who is made to appear unconcerned about persons in the here and now and exclusively concerned for the restoration of of his own offended dignity."

Stamped But Unaddressed, The Post Cards Accumulate

"You don't have to be crazy to work here—but it helps," read the front of a picture post card.

This card was stamped, and lay in the Post Office.

However, it will never get sent.

Why? Because the sender forgot to address it.

"I asked the post office employees to save all the unaddressed post cards to see how many would accumulate," said Paul Cheek, Chapel Hill postmaster.

"We collected about 100 between May and November of last year."

There is quite an interesting collection:

* A picture post card of Howard Johnson's in Richmond, Va.

* A card showing the Yale University Art Gallery in New Haven, Conn.

* The Riding Hall at Culver Military Academy—"home of the famed Black Horse."

* And perhaps the most interesting one — a picture post card of the Arboretum that opens "Dearest."

"Mamma" or "Y'all"

The majority of these wayward cards were addressed to "Mom and Dad," "Family," "Dad," "Mama," "Folks," or "Y'all".

The home-folks never received the cards ranging from the simple (out-dated) 3c type to the more elaborate picture types showing the Martha Washington Motel in South East Washington, D. C., the Duke University Women's Campus (from their "Son"), and a scene of the Great Smoky Mountains of North Carolina.

But not all are written by careless offspring. Many of the cards were signed "Mom and Dad" or "Grandma and Grandpa."

"We usually do not save any of these unaddressed post cards," said Cheek. "I can't allow any student to look through them even if he thinks some of them belong to him. In fact, these cards will already have been thrown out.

"Letters that are addressed wrong and have no return address are sent to the Division of Dead Letters in Atlanta. The Division is authorized to open letters and try to find out who the sender or receiver is. Usually the only letters we get back from there are the ones with checks in them.

A resolution requesting legislative approval for the Rules Committee was also approved. This bill requests the WRC, IDC and IFC to submit their by-laws, rules of conduct and court procedures to the committee by the spring semester so that it can investigate and approve them. The bill was introduced by Bob Smith (SP) and Ford Rowan of the Judicial Committee.

After a lengthy debate, SL defeated Arthur Hays' (SP) resolution concerning the practice of making assignments over vacation periods.

Wirtz Hears Report From Strike Board

NEW YORK (UPI) — Labor Secretary W. Willard Wirtz flew here Friday to receive the report of a three-judge "board of public accountability," which has been investigating the city's 35-day-old newspaper shutdown.

The board was formed at the request of Wirtz, New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller and Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

It has heard testimony from publishers of the nine dailies closed by the strike of printers, from private citizens and representatives of all unions involved except the International Typographical Union (ITU).

Bertram Powers, president of the striking ITU Local 6, declined to appear before the panel pending a union meeting which will be held Sunday. He said he could not give testimony unless authorized by the union membership.

The strike, which began Dec. 8, has cut off one-tenth of the nation's newspaper circulation. The newspapers involved have a circulation of 5,700,000 daily.

Negotiations between the ITU and New York Publishers Association NYPA were suspended "indefinitely" after a fruitless bargaining session Thursday.

The Daily News ordered a 20 per cent pay cut Friday for employes still working during the strike. Publisher F. M. Flynn told the workers the reduction was necessary "to reduce an unbearable overhead expense, to conserve . . . resources for resumption of publication."

Thirteen members of the New York Printing Pressmen's Union have filed a $6.6 million antitrust suit against the publishers association and the nine newspapers. The suit charged the publishers with entering into a conspiracy in restraint of commerce.

The ITU struck four newspapers on Dec. 8 and the publishers association closed the other five. The pressmen's suit said the lockout put 1,800 of their men out of work.

The nine newspapers closed by the strike are the News, Times, Mirror, World Telegram and Sun, Herald Tribune, Journal American, Pot, the Long Island Press, and the Long Island Star-Journal.

Dr. Smith Is Presbyterian Guest Speaker

Dr. H. Shelton Smith of Duke will be the featured speaker at the Presbyterian Church of Chapel Hill today. The fourth in the Sanctuary Completion Celebration series, Dr. Smith will speak at the 11 a.m. worship service in the new sanctuary on "The Mission of the Church in the Changing South." He will speak again at 7 in a discussion of this theme in the Fellowship Hall of the Presbyterian Student Center, when he will be questioned by Dr. Robert Seymour, pastor of the Binkley Baptist Church, and Professor J. Dickson Phillips of the UNC Law School.

The James B. Duke Professor of American Religious Thought, Dr. Smith is a native of North Carolina and received his PhD from Yale. Prior to coming to Duke in 1931, he taught at Columbia and Yale. He is past president of both the American Theological Society and the American Society of Church History. His writings include "Faith and Nurture," "Changing Conceptions of Original Sin," and a two-volume work, "American Christianity," of which he is editor-in-chief.

"All interested persons are invited to join with us in examining the implications of the changing social, economic, and racial situation in the South for the Church," said Rev. Vance Barron, pastor of the church.

Katanga Crisis Looms After Minister Resigns

U.N. Troops Get Further Land Control

ELISABETHVILLE, Katanga, The Congo (UPI) — Katanga President Moise Tshombe was reported Friday to have split with his powerful interior minister, Godefroid Munongo, in a political crisis that could bring renewed fighting in the province.

Mungo, sometimes referred to as the real power behind Tshombe, is violently anti-United Nations. Informed sources said Munongo walked out in a huff Thursday when Tshombe met him in the town of Mokamo and tried to get him to return to Elizabethville.

There were reports Munongo had gone to Kolwezi to rally the fanatical gendarmerie, who want to slow up the city and the mines and power dams of the Belgian-owned Miniere installations in that last Katangese stronghold.

U.N. Control Spreads

U.N. troops were reported to have put great areas of Katanga under their control and some reports said they were moving cautiously along the road from Jadotville to Kolweiz to try to avert the sabotage that would cripple the Congo's economy.

One U.N. column was reported in the Sakania area 100 miles south of Elizabethville on the border of Northern Rhodesia One report said a column of U.N. troops had moved up the road from Jadotville 5 miles toward Kolwezi despite sporadic resistance.

Dr. Ralph Bunche, U.N. undersecretary, said on a flying trip here earlier this week Kolwezi and Sakania were areas which would have to be cleared to give the U.N. forces freedom of movement in the plan to restore Katanga to the central government.

Tshombe drove triumphantly 110 miles to the southeast to Mokambo to confer with top aides there while a U.N. armored column moved toward the area.

Ole Miss Student Editor Nominated For Pulitzer

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) — Sidna Brower, editor of the University of Mississippi campus newspaper, Thursday received a letter notifying her of her nomination for a Pulitzer Prize in journalism.

Miss Brower said the letter was signed by John Hohenberg, secretary of Columbia University, and invited her to submit an exhibit of her work to the committee before Feb. 1.

The 21-year-old editor of "The Mississippian," a native of Memphis, Tenn., became a controversial figure for her editorials on the integration crisis stemming from the admission of Negro James H. Meredith to "Ole Miss." She later was censured by the student council.

Cheerleaders Plan Show, Pep Rally

GYPSY? WHY NOT LET US ENTERTAIN YOU? (Photo by Warren Sams)

Head cheerleader Hannis Latham and the prettier members of his cheering group are planning a big dance show and pep rally Tuesday night.

The cheerleaders have been working on the dance number since November and Latham, the choreographer, says the girls have been putting a lot of time and effort into the show. He is sure everyone will agree that the girls have a lot of hidden talent when they see Tuesday night's show.

Besides the dance numbers, taken from "Let Me Entertain You," the show will also feature Lee Ferrell and the Trojans. Although the Trojans were in pretty bad shape last Saturday, Ferrell thinks the boys will have recovered by Tuesday and be in rare form.

Latham calls the show "a chance for everyone to have a good time and forget about exams.

The purpose of the show is to have the first basketball pep rally of the year. "We haven't had a real good pep rally for the basketball team and this is our chance to show them we are behind them and that we are proud and appreciate the fine basketball they have been playing," said Latham.

The head cheerleader urges every man, woman and child to be at Memorial Hall Tuesday night at 9 o'clock" and says "It's gonna' be something else!"

National Football League Ends Season With Pro Bowl

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The National Football League rings out its 1962-63 season Sunday with the 13th annual Pro Bowl game which carries strong overtones from the league's championship clash.

The coaches are the same. Green Bay's Vince Lombardi is guiding the Western Conference All-Stars and the New York Giants' Allie Sherman is at the helm of the Eastern Conference team.

Lombardi's forces include eight members of his championship Packers team while Sherman has an equal number of his Giants.

Apparently because the West has an 8-4 margin in the series and has won the last three games, Lombardi's team was favored by 3½ points. But there were many who felt the desire of Sherman and his Giants for revenge may have communicated itself to the entire Eastern squad.

There were several outstanding personal duels brewing also. New York quarterback Y. A. Tittle handles the signal-calling for the Eastern team and still recalls how the Packers and the cold choked off his passing in the championship game.

Green Bay's Bart Starr teams with John Unitas in handling the quarterbacking for the West. Tittle will alternate with veteran Eddie LeBaron for the East.

Blockbusting fullback Jim Taylor of the Packers, the league's leading ground gainer and scorer, will be opposed in those departments by Jim Brown of the Cleveland Browns.

The probable offensive lineup listed the West's backfield as Unitas at quarterback, Dick Bass of the Rams and Lenny Moore of the Colts at halfback and Taylor at fullback. The Eastern backfield will start with Tittle at quarterback, John David Crow of the Cardinals and Tommy McDonald of the Eagles at halfbacks and Brown at fullback.

For the 60,000 fans expected to witness the struggle in the Coliseum, the defensive battle may prove as thrilling as the offensive struggle. The West's defenders include such formidable performers as Roger Brown, Alex Karras, Gino Marchetti, Joe Schmidt and Bill Forester.

But the East will counter with an equally impressive array that includes Gene Lipscomb, Jim Katcavage, Bill Glass, Bob Gain and Jerry Tubbs.

Gridders Pick All-Opponent Team

South Carolina Halfback Billy Gambrell and Michigan State's All-America fullback, George Saimes, received the most votes for positions on North Carolina's All-Opponent team in reviewing the 1962 gridiron season.

Jim Kanicki, a tackle converted to center when Coach Duffy Daugherty demoted husky Dave Behrman in early season, nosed out Duke's Paul Bengel for the role of pivotman. End Matt Snorton, a 245-pound play-wrecker, also wears Spartan colors.

Maryland's passing whiz, Dick Shiner, was a wide choice for the quarterback slot. Guard Walter Rock and Halfback Tom Brown, target of the accurate Shiner tosses, won spots for the Terps.

Tackles garnering the most votes were Clemson's Don Chuy and Ohio State's Bob Vogel. Notre Dame's Jim Kelly, whose pass-receiving ability set several Irish records, joined Snorton at the flank. Duke's Jean Berry picked up a host of votes to earn the remaining guard position.

Coach Jim Hickey of the Tar Heels, who for the past week has been in California attending the National Coaches Convention, has not indicated when the Chapel Hill forces will begin their spring workouts.

The Tar Heels will have more than 25 lettermen returning, their most experienced squad in years. Opener is on Sept. 21 with the University of Virginia at Kenan Stadium here.

Track Team Hosts State In Tin Can

UNC's indoor track team will open its 1963 dual meet season against North Carolina State this afternoon in the Tin Can.

The Tar Heels, who finished second to Maryland in last year's indoor track championships, will be relying on a host of lettermen including Atlantic Coast Conference champs Bob Hart in the 600-yard run and Tom Clark in the high jump.

Other lettermen are Bob Bennett, Tom Brooks, Bill Croom, Rein Harkema, Harvey Henry, Bob Lacey, John Lindley, Charlie Little, Carmin Lunetta, Joe McLamb, John McNinch, Jerry Stuver and Heath Whittle.

State, the number seven team in the conference last year, has nine lettermen returning. Paul Derr is coaching the Wolfpack for the ninth season.

A major weakness in past Tar Heel teams has been in the dashes, but Coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton have a corps of football backs who could help out in that department — among them Ronnie Jackson, one of the fastest backs in the ACC.

Taylor, Bowers Quit Basketball

Bill Taylor, a fine all-around athlete from Cary, N. C., and Bruce Bowers, 6-8 center from Wellesley Hills, Mass., have decided to drop from the Tar Heels' basketball squad. Both had seen action in one game and Taylor had the distinction of bowing out with a perfect mark, one field goal for one attempt from the floor. Taylor is an outstanding baseball prospect, according to diamond coach Walter Rabb.

Smith Terms 'Effort' Key To Success Of Tar Heels

"If our team had a trademark it would entitled, 'EFFORT.' That single factor has more to do with what success we've enjoyed than any other thing."

Coach Dean Smith of North Carolina made the appraisal the morning after his Tar Heels, which had been ranked 10th nationally, had been bounced by Wake Forest, 78-70. He didn't seem overly discouraged at the loss.

"Our games with Wake through the years have been cliff-hangers," remarked Smith. "We always find it rugged playing on their home court. This is no exception in the Atlantic Coast Conference. It's a home-court league.

"I expect trouble at Maryland on Monday; I expect trouble at Virginia on Saturday. Road games present extra problems—and ACC teams have a sizable mental factor working in their favor. We've never played our best ball at Maryland and we're going to have to exert our best to beat Bud's (Millikan) club."

If the home factor is so awesome, how did the Tar Heels happen to chop down Kentucky and Notre Dame on the latters's courts?

"Those were tremendous wins for us," admitted Smith, "and we played extremely well. When we got a break, we made the most of it. The Wake Forest game on Wednesday was decided in the final minute of play. We had our opportunities.

"Against Kentucky and Notre Dame, we capitalized on one-and-one situations. Against Wake, we failed on numerous occasions at the line. We win by the rule, then we falter in the face of it. No game of basketball is ever the same."

Smith turned to his personnel and looked at figures compiled by his sizzling sophomore center, Billy Cunningham.

"He has certainly come along fast—a real big leaguer," said Dean. "We knew Billy had the talent, but we didn't want to place too much pressure on his shoulders by demanding too much of him his first year. He's the best 6-4½ rebounder I've ever seen, or heard about. He has made some great shots for us, many of them chips-down."

Cunningham, who has the face of an innocent abroad and the zeal of a card shark, has hit in the 20's in four of his last five games. Consecutive performances against Yale, Notre Dame and Wake Forest netted 29, 26 and 25 respectively. His average for eight games is 19.4. He has connected for better than 50 per cent of his shots from the field.

The enlightening performance of Mike Cooke, a junior reserve from Mt. Airy, may bring about a change in the Tar Heels' lineup for the Maryland game.

"Mike has done a wonderful job for us and is due a reward," said Coach Smith. "It's quite likely he will see starting duty against Maryland."

Cooke kept the Tar Heels in the game with a bountiful first-half display of shooting against Wake and he wound up with 14 points, second high to Cunningham.

Cooke, who stands 6-2 and can play both front and back court, has connected on 23 of 43 field goal attempts this winter.

Carolina starters in the previous eight games have been Cunningham at center, Ray Respess and Charlie Shaffer at forwards and Yogi Poteet and Larry Brown at guards. Poteet had a poor night against Wake Forest and scored but four points. In previous games, he had been in double figures.

Coach Smith said he hoped to get more and more use of 6-5 Billy Galantai and 6-4½ Bryan McSweeney in the roles of rebounders. Both were hampered in early games because of injuries.

"We are 6-2 going into the Maryland game," said Coach Smith, "and we hope to improve that mark. Maryland has some excellent players. Our defense has been improving and we hope it's at its best against the Terps.

"On offense, we like to think of Larry Brown as our quarterback. He does a lot of things very well, and he keys our shuffle attack. After Maryland, we get back home for a day's breather, then tackle Ev Case and his North Carolina State Wolfpack. Looks like nothing but hard work ahead."

Wrestling Team Meets Wolfpack At Raleigh

The North Carolina wrestling team will try to rebound from a 25-2 Atlantic Coast Conference defeat to Virginia when the Tar Heels travel to North Carolina State today.

Although the UNC grapplers failed to win a match against Virginia Monday, Coach Sam Barnes issued no fire-and-brimstone edicts to his team. "Never has a team of mine fought so hard, yet done so poorly in the final scoring," he reasoned.

Earlier this week Barnes said that State had expected to do real well at the beginning of the year. Their strength lies in the 137, 147, 167 and heavyweight divisions. "They have four good men, but we should pull it out," said the UNC coach.

The Tar Heels are now 2-4, holding a doubleheader victory over East Carolina and Pfeiffer. Washington & Lee, The Citadel, Davidson and Virginia have defeated UNC.

Students Eye Above Room For Social Facility

Faculty Club Room Sought As Dormitory Social Room

The need for social facilities for dormitory men is again before Student Legislature, this time involving the present Faculty Club room.

The Faculty Club is now housed upstairs in the Monogram Club Building, but does not use its facilities during weekend nights.

A resolution introduced in legislature by Ford Rowan would call for the I.D.C. and the Campus Affairs Board to work with the faculty and the administration to secure use of the building for students on Saturday nights.

Supporters of the measure point out that the building was once open for students, and that the ideal location between Lower Quads and Cobb Dorm would help alleviate the lack of campus social facilities. The dormitories in Lower Quad have inadequate social rooms, so proponents of the resolution plan to run the Clubroom under the auspices of the I.D.C.

Interest in the Monogram Clubroom was generated after both platforms in last spring's elections called for an off-campus social hut, for which funds were not available this year.

Bobrowske Chosen To Vie For Program

Dr. Frank M. Duffy, head of the committee for the appointment of State Department summer internships in Washington, D. C., yesterday nominated Dennis E. Bobrowske as UNC candidate for one of approximately 40 such internships to the Department of State.

The appointee, Dennis Bobrowske, is a senior majoring in International Studies and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Last year, 25 such interns were chosen by a special committee of the Foreign Service from among various college representatives. Because the internship program is new, the University has had no nominees for this special program.

The program provides a very valuable practical experience for any student interested in a career in the Foreign Service. Judging from last year's response, the program has had great success, as can be noticed by the increase in the number of expected appointees.

Last year, while performing their regular work in the Department of State, the interns of the State Department, as well as those of the Agency for International Development and of the United States Information Agency, attended various governmental seminars organized by the White House. Other activities included afternoon meetings with State Department officers, informal luncheon discussions with those students having the same area interests, language demonstrations, and sessions with members of Congress, representatives of other agencies, and foreign diplomats residing in the Washington area.

Sanford Adds Fuel To Classic Debate

By VANCE BARRON, JR.

To add to growing rumors and stories about the resurrection of the Dixie Classic, Governor Terry Sanford said in reply to a question at his press conference last week, "I think University officials are studying carefully some type of holiday event."

He went on to say that it was a decision to be made by University officials and declined to say anything further. President Friday was not available for comment but he had said previously the University is not considering any holiday tournament in the context of the Dixie Classic.

Friday has noted that there is a surprising amount of pressure for some type of holiday tournament.

Dixie Died In '61

Since the Dixie Classic was discontinued in 1961, there has been a good deal of sentiment, especially among Raleigh merchants, to restore the affair. A plan has been discussed that would move the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament from its present date after the regular season to a holiday date. Another plan calls for making the tournament into a post-Christmas event, and then letting the regular season winner represent the ACC in the NCAA playoffs. A third plan would have the tournament changed so that the tournament winner and the regular season conference champion met for the right to enter the NCAA playoffs.

Any such tournament would be under the jurisdiction of the ACC rather than a particular college, and all schools would share equally in the proceeds. In the past, State College sponsored the event and received a double share of the tournament take and also picked up funds from the concessions and Coliseum operation. Even prior to the death of the Classic, there was talk of Carolina pulling out of the tournament.

Because of the basketball scandals in 1961 involving point-shaving during several Dixie Classic games, the tournament was discontinued by Consolidated University officials.

LAST ISSUE

Thursday's issue of the Tar Heel will be the last until the beginning of the spring semester. Classes will begin again Monday, Feb. 4 and the DTH will begin publication Feb. 5.

Students Picked To Represent UNC At Mock UN Meet

Five UNC students will represent the Soviet Union at the mock United Nations General Assembly here February 21-23.

Walter Dellinger, Harry DeLung, Henry Mayer, Jim Reston, and Mickey Simmons will make up the Russian delegation at the biannual program of the Collegiate Council on the United Nations (CCUN).

Students from almost 50 schools will meet in Chapel Hill representing most of the nations in the UN. The Air Force Academy of Colorado Springs, Colo., will send the United States delegation.

At the CCUN assembly two years ago, the Air Force placed as the second best delegation after hot competition with UNC's Russian group, which received first place.

Carolina students will make up three other delegations of smaller countries. According to Hugo Spechar, CCUN Secretary-General, the UNC Debate Team will represent Lebanon, and the YM-YWCA and Di-Phi will send delegations not yet assigned.

The Cuban delegation will come from Duke University. Sources at Duke say the delegates will come wearing beards and army fatigues. Spechar said N.C. State will represent India and the Woman's College will send a Turkish delegation.

DeLung, chairman of the USSR delegation, said the key areas of Soviet concern will include: the "Troika" proposal for the Secretariat, the racial policies of Portugal in Angola, international supervision of nuclear test ban plans, The Indian-Chinese border disputes, and international refugee problems.

The assembly will meet in five committees—Economic, Legal, Political, Social, and Ad Hoc—before the general plenary. The plenary will consider between 10 and 15 resolutions, which may concern any area of international affairs.

According to DeLung, "Lavish entertainment has been planned by the Russian delegation for key nations in the Soviet bloc and the 'neutral' powers.

20 UNC Students Attend Assembly Over Holidays

By MARTIN KRUMING

During the Christmas holidays 20 Carolina YM-YWCA members journeyed to the University of Illinois in Urbana, Ill., for the National Student Assembly.

UNC's delegation was one of the largest at the convention, which is held ever four years. It was attended by 1200 YM-YWCA students from all across the country this year.

"I was amazed at the way a convention of this size was organized and handled," said Judy Bryant, head of the Carolina group.

Seven guest speakers were featured during the Assembly, which lasted from December 27 through January 2.

Among the outstanding speakers were Reverend Moody, a Greenwich Village, N. Y., minister who discussed "Urban Mass Culture," and John Brademas, an Indiana congreeman.

Brademas, who spoke on "The Challenges to the Democratic Idea," was selected as one of the ten outstanding NSA speakers of 1962. The announcement came during the Assembly.

Other speakers included Robert Blood, "Changing Roles of Men and Women;" William Cole, "Issues Facing Higher Education;" James Grant, "World in Revolution;" Carry McWilliams Jr., "Atomic Power in a Divided World;" and Morris Milgram, "Social Injustice."

Linda MacNeil, an abstract painter from New Zealand, presented five paintings on revolution to the Assembly.

On New Year's Eve most of the delegations participated in a talent show. "The Hula skit put on by the University of Hawaii "Y" impressed me the most," said Judy Bryant. After the show Hula lessons were in great demand.

"Ann Queen (general secretary of the YWCA who accompanied the delegation) was without a doubt the star of the Assembly,' said Judy. "It seemed that all we did during the week was shake hands and renew old acquaintances of Ann's," she added.

Gil Stallings, president of the YMCA, expressed the feeling that there was very little intellectual vitality during the Assembly. "There was a mutual knowledge of what other students are thinking about and of course there is some vitality in a convention of this size. But the convention lacked an issue which captured the imagination of the students," said Stallings.

A highlight of the Assembly was the appearance of the Freedom Singers, a Negro group which was taken off a Freedom Bus in Mississippi and jailed. "These performers especially appealed to the "Y" members from the Northwest, West and North," commented Stallings.

"Overall there was a net increase in mutual understanding," said Stallings.

The Carolina delegation brought back from Illinois the idea of hosting a race relations workshop in Chapel Hill during the spring. "This would be open to all the YM-YWCA's in Georgia, South Carolina and Virginia," remarked Stallings. "Of course this would be a politically unfeasible project at the University of South Carolina."

Secretary's Arrest Protested By SNCC

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee has charged the arrest of Robert Zellner, a SNCC field secretary, on the campus of Huntingdon College as "fraudulent" and "completely without justification" and has asked the Justice Department to investigate.

Zellner was arrested Jan. 8 for "vagrancy" and initially held on $1000 bail. At trial Jan. 9 he was convicted and was sentenced Jan. 10.

Zellner, 23, a '61 honor graduate of Huntingdon College, had dinner with a student and another friend on campus Jan. 9. The three were walking toward Zellner'sc car—parked on campus—when an unmarked car began following them. When the car stopped, one man, believed to be Wily P. Paynter, a state investigator and employee of the Alabama Department of Public Safety, jumped out, frisked Zellner, and told him he was under arrest for "conspiracy."

Zellner was taken to the county jail in Montgomery, then transferred to the city jail where the charge was changed to "vagrancy" and bond set at $1000.

SNCC officials wired the Justice Department: "We request you investigate the arrest of Robert Zellner on charges of vagrancy on Huntingdon College campus, Montgomery, Alabama. Zellner, a SNCC field secretary, was walking quietly on campus when arrested. We urge you investigate this violation of civil rights and civil liberties as fraudulent on its face and completely without justification."

Zellner, a native of Alabama, is the son of a Methodist minister. While a senior at Huntingdon, a Methodist-related school, he was almost expelled along with several other students after they attended Negro meetings in Montgomery. Some months after graduating he returned to Huntingdon to talk with classmates and was attacked by a mob on the campus.

SNCC officials also wired Huntingdon College President Hubert Searcy: "We protest the arrest of Robert Zellner on your campus January 8. Zellner was walking peacefully when arrested by State officials. We believe this to be unworthy of any institution of higher learning and in gross violation of the First Amendment and academic freedom."

Zellner has been arrested six times previously in Louisiana, Alabama, and Georgia. He and SNCC Chairman Charles McDew were arrested almost a year ago on charges of "criminal anarchy"—which carries a possible 10 - year penalty—when they went to visit a SNCC field secretary imprisoned in Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

W. Germany May Sever Relations With Cuba Gov't

HAVANA (UPI)—Cuba and East Germany will establish diplomatic relations at the ambassadorial level, the Cuban government press reported Saturday. West Germany was expected to break relations with Fidel Castro's regime.

Under the so-called Hallstein doctrine, West Germany in the past has refused to recognize any nation maintaining relations with the Communist East German government.

The government newspaper El Mundo said the decision to elevate the present East German-Cuban trade missions to embassies "was due to the close and friendly present relations between our two nations and will contribute to consolidate even more the bonds of friendship between our peoples."

The East German mission established in Cuba Dec. 22, 1961, headed by "chief of mission" Karl Loesch, was preceded by a trade mission set up early in 1960. Both missions had all the marks of an embassy.

The Cuban government provided a huge "embassy" building for the mission and a luxurious residence for the chief of mission, who was invited to all state functions with other members of the Soviet bloc diplomatic corps.

In Bonn, a West German government spokesman said the government would reserve the right to take "all steps it deems necessary," and that Ambassador Count Karl Von Spreti has been ordered to submit a report. Informed sources said Spreti would be recalled to make an oral report, and would not return to Havana.

Space Legal Aspect Topic Of Meet Here

Business transactions in space will be one of the topics under discussion Feb. 1 and 2 when UNC School of Law hosts the regional meeting of the American Society of International Law here.

Henry Brandis Jr., Dean of the School of Law, will preside over the session on the legal aspects of doing business in space beginning at 9:30 a.m. February 2.

Speakers at this session are John C. Cooper, professor emeritus of international air law, McGill University, on "Current Developments in Space Law"; Arnold Frutkin, director of Office of International Programs, NASA, on "International Space Programs"; Walter D. Sohier, deputy general counsel, NASA, on "Legal Aspects of Space Exploration"; and Horace P. Moulton, vice president and general councel, American Telephone and Telegraph Co., on "Some Legal Aspects of International Communications."

Secretary of Commerce Luther H. Hodges will be one of the speakers at the meeting which will also feature discussions on the legal aspects of business transactions with Latin America and the European Common Market.

Judge L. Richardson Preyer of the Federal District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina will be the dinner speaker at 6:15 p.m. in the Carolina Inn, February 1. Judge Preyer will speak on "The North Carolina Trade Fair Mission, or, Innocents Abroad."

Registration for the conference will begin at 9 a.m. Feb. 1 in Manning Hall.

UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock will preside at the opening session on the legal aspects of doing business in Latin America which begins at 10 a.m.

Speakers at this session will include William D. Rogers, special counsel, Agency for International Development, speaking on "Legal Aspects of the Alliance for Progress"; the Honorable Jose Camacho, minister of embassy, Republic of Columbia, speaking on "Colombian Participation in the Alliance for Progress"; and John Gallup Laylin, partner, Covington and Burling, Washington, D. C., speaking on "The Legal Climate for Private Enterprise in the Alliance for Progress."

Consolidated University President William C. Friday will preside over the afternoon session on the European Common Market which begins at 2 p.m.

Secretary Hodges will speak on "Implementing the Foreign Trade Act of 1962"; Robert A. Giles, general counsel, Department of Commerce, speaks on "Legal Problems of Trade with the E. E. C."; Walter S. Surrey of Surrey, Karasik, Gould and Greene, Washington, D. C., speaks on "Legal Problems to be Encountered in the Operations of the Foreign Trade Act of 1962"; and William P. S. Breese, counsel, Johns-Manville Corporation, New York, N. Y., speaks on "Corporate Legal Problems in the E. E. C."

UNC-DUKE TICKETS

Student, faculty and employee tickets for the UNC-Duke basketball game Saturday, Feb. 2, will be available on a first come-first serve basis. They may be picked up at Woollen Gymnasium starting Monday, Jan. 21.

Fall semester pass cards must be presented, both to obtain the tickets and to get into the game.

On the basis of information furnished by the Admissions Office, a few tickets will be held out for new students registering on Jan. 29.

NSA COMMITTEE

The NSA Committie will meet Tuesday at 5 p.m. in the Grail Room to discuss the Spring Human Relations Conference. Meeting will be short, but important.

PUBLIC HEALTH SCHOOL SEMINAR

Dr. Horace Hamilton, professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at N. C. State College, will speak to the UNC School of Public Health's student-faculty seminar Monday.

Dr. Hamilton's topic is "Economics of Health," and is sponsored by the Department of Biostatistics. The talk will begin at 3 p.m. in the auditorium of the new School of Public Health building.

WESLEY FOUNDATION

The Wesley Foundation will meet tonight at 6:30 o'clock in the basement of the University Methodist Church.

G.M. HOURS

Beginning Sunday, January 20, Graham Memorial will be open each night preceeding exams until 3 A.M. for students wishing to study. Students are reminded that Graham Memorial has vending machines for coffee, candy, sandwishes, and soft drinks.

LIBRARY SCHEDULE

The following is the L. R. Wilson Library schedule for the post-examination period, January 29 to February 4: Tuesday, Jan. 29, 7:45 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Wednesday, Jan. 30, thru Friday, Feb. 1, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Saturday, Feb. 2, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.; Sunday, Feb. 3, closed; Monday, Feb. 4, resume regular schedule.

The regular schedule will be observed during the examination period.

ART HISTORY LECTURE

J. Richard Judson, professor of art history at Smith College, will give a lecture Monday at 8 p.m. in room 115 of the Ackland Art Center. His subject will be "The Various Painting Trends of the 16th Century in the Netherlands and the Transition into the 17th Century."

WORK-TRAVEL ABROAD

Information about various work-travel-study programs in Europe, Asia, Africa, and South America is now available. Those interested should see Harry DeLung in the Student Government Offices.

UNC COSMOPOLITAN CLUB

The UNC Cosmopolitan Club will not meet this week.

ALPHA GAMMA DELTA PLEDGE DINNER

The Alpha Gamma Delta Pledge class is having a dinner at the Alpha Gam house tonight. There will be servings at 5:30 and 6:30. Tickets can be purchased from any Alpha Gam pledge.

PHYSICS COLLOQUIUM

The planet Jupiter is the subject of a Physics Colloquium to be held Wednesday at 4:30 p.m. in room 265 Phillips Hall. Dr. Colin H. Barrow of Florida State University will speak on "Decameter — Wave Studies of the Planet Jupiter."

EXCHANGE SCHOLARSHIPS

Applications forms for two exchange scholarships to be awarded for study in 1963-64 at the University in Goettingen, Germany, are now available. They may be obtained at GM or at the YMCA. The deadline for returning these forms is Feb. 15.

CANTERBURY CLUB

The Canterbury Club will meet at 1:30 p.m. today in the church parking lot to drive to Butner with the Westminster Fellowship. The Club will eat dinner with Chaplain Snyder at the B.S.U. House at 6 p.m. Please bring a car if possible.

Address Wednesday

"An Anthropologist Looks at Race" is the title of a public lecture which Professor Earl W. Count will deliver at Carroll Hall at 8 p.m. on Wednesday.

Dr. Count, one of the country's foremost authorities on race, is professor of anthropology at Hamilton College, Clinton, New York. His talk is sponsored by the Department of Sociology and Anthropology of the University.

Apart from numerous papers in scholarly journals, Professor Count is the author of "This is Race," a book which he is now enlarging for a new edition.

UNC Accountant, Irked By Bad Checks, Lauds Action

By MARY HARRIS

Should a UNC student who passes a bad check be subject to Honor Council action?

Tom Shetley, accountant for UNC's seven student retail exchanges, thinks so.

"We don't want to be harsh or brutal about it, but something has to ge done," he said Wednesday. "We have received $478 worth of bad checks just today. The problem seems to be worse than ever this year. The Bank of Chapel Hill has to hire two more employees just to handle bad checks."

Shetley feels that most students who give bad checks are single offenders.

"They make a mistake in their them and straighten things out."

done that before," he said. "If so, they come in quickly when we call finances, and almost everyone has

But there are others, Shetley says, who are repeated offenders. They deliberately pass bad checks over and over, and avoid trying to compensate for the school's financial losses.

"These repeated offenders try to use us for a small loan office," he said. "We have yet to resort to legal action, but we have threatened, called parents and sent letters. Then if nothing happens we just have to write them off as operating expenses.

"There are many more bad checks around holidays," Mr. Shetley said. "Students need extra money then and write bad checks with the intention of putting in enough money to cover them when they get home. But many of them never do."

Shetley said passing bad checks should be an Honor Code offense because it is "a form of lying and cheating. It is a lie to write a check, giving the impression that there is enough money to cover it when there really isn't."

(A bill was passed by Student Legislature Thursday night to make bad checks an Honor Code offense if the student does not make the check good within 30 days.)

"College students should learn something besides English and math," said Shetley. "College should train them for life, and the student who doesn't learn to manage his finances may be behind

Myths Of Left And Right Surround U.S. Cuban Policy

The Cuban blockade and subsequent removal of Soviet missiles has created more problems for the Kennedy administration—and raised more questions, both within and without the nation—than any other single act of foreign policy in years.

The questions haunt every newspaper and journal of opinion in the country.

Many of the questions fly back and forth and gather momentum for awhile, and then settle to the ground, to be stepped upon, crushed into earth and heard from no more. Some of the questions never seem to cease being asked, never seem to lose effect even when faced with contradictory facts . . . and continue as part of the public dialogue.

On the proverbial Left, one of the constant questions concerning Fidel Castro, and Cuban-U .S.-Soviet relations is: "Could Cuba have been kept out of the Russian bloc?"

On the proverbial Right, the most recent question is "Why didn't Kennedy order an invasion of Cuba?"

* * *

If by legislative dicta these overworked questions and their virtually useless answers could be stricken from the public record, it would be a boon to reason and sanity. However, since they apparently must be asked and answered, again and again, let it be done with soon.

Question: "Cuba — Was A Deal Possible in '59?" (Headline from the Jan. 12, 1963 issue of the "liberal" New Republic, article by Javier Felipe Pazos Vea.)

Answer: The constant efforts of some members of the Left to convince the nation that the U. S. State Department "forced" Fidel into the Red bloc seems nothing more than A Child's Book of Rationalization. Because these individuals embraced Castro in 1959 they feel obliged to defend his subsequent actions, even to the point of hypothesizing that "he had no choice but to join the Soviets . . ."

In the New Republic article Mr. Pazos says Castro could have been kept "neutral" for the paltry sum of a $30 billion "alliance for progress" for Cuba, but even then, "money alone would never have prevented Fidel from taking the path he did." Mr. Pazos appears to wish he were not forced to answer the "Was a Deal Possible? . . ." and the resulting assumption that, somehow, the United States is to blame for Castro's later actions—yet the question is asked, and answered, if hesitantly.

The only legitimate question concerning Castro and the Communists seems to be the one posed by Theodore Draper (Jan. 17 issue of Reporter magazine), "How much or what kind of a Communist is Fidel Castro?"

* * *

Not to be outdone on the matter of sheer idiocy, the Right takes its turn:

Question: "Why no invasion of Cuba?" (Or, as the conservative National Review said in a Jan. 15 poem, "In cuba it was quite a thrill To march, with vigah, up the hill. But then we paused and counted ten . . . And then we marched back down again. (Dismantling a missile's swell, But Jack forgot about Fidel.)"

Answer: These members of the Right seem terribly agitated over the President's decisive action in forcing the removal of Soviet missiles from Cuba. By his action the President sharply distinguished between the important, immediate problems posed by the missiles and the lower-priority problems of the Castro regime itself. By so doing the Right was robbed of an hysteria weapon and forced to return to its old, weather-and-logic-beaten verbal path of "Invasion . . . invasion . . . invasion . . . (and while we're at it, let's get Red China back, too . . .)"

To repeat: the problems following the fall "Cuban crisis" are many; it has forced the U.S. to accept an initiative it may be unable to wield at this time, and it has altered, perhaps permanently, the position of the nation withi nthe world community of nations. There are many legitimate questions to be raised about present, past and future U.S. relations with Cuba—but there are several questions, from the Right and Left, which ought to be moth-balled and forgotten. Free People — Brothers In The Human Heart

This expression of the faith of an American by Dr. Frank P. Graham is one of a series of brief statements by a few eminent Americans written for The Spiral Press, expressing the spirit and temper of our times. Dr. Graham was for nineteen years President of the University here and is at present the United Nations Representative for India and Pakistan.

In the fulfilment of her heritage of freedom and hope of brotherhood may America more and more be a land in which free people become brothers in the sight of God and in the human heart. Here the autonomy of the human spirit, the freedom of the mind, the liberty of inquiry, speech, publication, association, enterprise, work and worship, together with a personal sense of moral and social responsibility are essential to the dignity of the free individual in whom are the security of the state, the welfare of the people and the progress of civilization. Here the best answer to the totalitarianism of the police state is not scrapping the Bill of Rights but keeping the faith of our historic Americanism. In this land the equal freedom of people to organize for self-development, cooperation and creative participatin in the agricultural, industrial, commercial, political, professional, cultural and religious life is now the moving frontier of our dynamic democracy. In the general life the daily toil of millions of men and women is above privilege and power, and the integrity of simple people is beyond price.

May this America be a land where the home, as the sanctuary of love, nurture and faith, is the source and measure of civilization, and the schools, libraries and playgrounds of the people are the chief hope of the equal opportunity of all the children in all the states to develop to the highest their individual capacities for a unified and useful life. In the cities, the towns and the country may the multiplication and acceleration of the mechanical contacts of civilization increasingly mean the enjoyment of leisure and recreation, the deepening of the cultural and spiritual content of the lives of the people. The commonwealth not only means the common responsibilities for the conservation and development of the natural resources and cultural heritage for this generation and the generations to come, but also more and more means the common opportunities of the people for free information, sound knowledge, equal suffrage, fair employment, decent standards of life and labor, social security against the hazards of modern society, good health and medical care within reach of the people, and lawful agitation to broaden the base of the general welfare and lift the level of human liberty "in the pursuit of happiness" in America and the world

In this land of liberty, for which our fathers died, and for which we would live, work and give our all, may America become a country in which the highest and the lowest and all the people equally together have the freedom to struggle for the higher freedom of truth, goodness and beauty: where democracy is without vulgarity, excellence is without arrogance, the answer to error is not terror and the response to a difference in color, race, religion, ideas, economic condition or social status is not discrimination, exploitation or intimidation. Here is humility of repentance for our own wrongs, freedom of indignation against injustice and evil in places high or low, and courage in action for human decency and fair play. Our democracy is made fairer and stronger by the robust struggles of freedom, and life is made richer by the vigor and variety of the differences of the people. Where and when men are free, the way of progress is not subversion, the respect for the past is not reaction, and the hope of the future is not revolution; where the majority is without tyranny, the minority without fear, and all people have hope of building together a nobler America in a freer and fairer world.

These toiling and hopeful people, as pioneers along the free frontiers of the vast wilderness of our yet unmastered international society, seek to prevent both the destruction of human freedom and the self-destruction of civilization and to share their generous strength for peace on earth and good will among men. In a dynamic world, in which a depression or a war anywhere involves human beings everywhere, the people of the American dream, against the lags of the conceptions of the absolute state, the superior race and the master class, patiently struggle in the atomic age through the United Nations, through economic cooperation and technical assistance programs, to end all wars and all depressions and to provide the basis for the self-determination and equal opportunity of all people. On the fresh continents of abundant resources, fronting east and west on the two great oceans between the Old World and the New, the people of America are the grateful heirs of all the ages, races, regions, cultures, and hopes of mankind. With all their faults, frustration and aspirations these people of this youthful nation would rise to the responsibility of their power and the opportunity for their greatness to help give fresh hopes to stricken peoples for food and freedom and to help organize justice under law and peace among nations. In creative cooperation with all peoples, East and West, the American people would share their heritage, their toil, their strength and their dream in the unresting adventure of the human spirit in the long pilgrimage toward one world neighborhood of human brotherhood in answer to the prayers of the people for peace, freedom and justice on God's good earth.

Colleges Have Become Servile To Society's Demands

GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS

(The following article is reprinted from "Tar Heel Talk" and written by UNC graduate and former DTH co-editor Ed Yoder.—Eds.)

"The Community of Scholars," a book by an academic malcontent named Paul Goodman, is raising administrative hackles in North Carolina and elsewhere. Its argument—which may be pertinent to the ferment in higher education here—is that the higher learning in general has so barnacled itself with administrators, with servility to the practical demands of society and with numbers that it is ceasing to perform the humanistic function for which it was designed. That, at least, is a simplified and summary outline.

"The Community of Scholars" urges a quixotic secession of dedicated scholars and teachers from this academic Babel, so that in smaller number and less cluttered by the pressures of the non-academic world they could once more perform in all purity. Mr. Goodman's book received patient if somewhat contemptuous treatment at the hands of U.N.C. Chancellor Emeritus Robert House in the Chapel Hill Weekly, though the chancellor confessed himself part of the administrative conspiracy, hence biased.

Perhaps Mr. Goodman's book deserves short shrift, for at all levels there are devoted and necessary college and university administrators who are as painfully aware as he that higher education is drifting steadily away from the faraway ideal of the small band of scholars grouped around the feet of their Socrates, far from deans and presidents and schedules.

How much dissatisfaction do the evils noted by Mr. Goodman excite? How, for instance, do the good students themselves feel about the increasing sizes and impersonality (if it is that) of the university and large college?

* *

This reporter, in fact, was struck during the past week with a good bit of student discontent with the cluttered world of higher education, this while helping pick candidates for a coveted overseas scholarship.

The competitors tend to be, most of them,, exceptional students who also excel in extracurriculars of all kinds—from the 100-yard dash to editing campus magazines and newspapers. Their sensitivity to campus tone is also exceptional, and one was struck in more than one case with a Goodmanesque unrest with the ordinary academic routine. In several cases, there had been outright secession from courses.

At Duke, for instance, one student had petitioned the faculty for permission to pursue a full year of independent reading, free of course schedules, labs, and—certainly—departmental apparatus. He was reading, in depth, in the field of English literature, figures as diverse as Spenser and Joyce and emerging from his self-imposed regimen only to read essays about them to a professor who served as his tutor. More to Goodman's point (or in answer to it) Duke has permitted a group of mentally congenial students to organize their own colony within the larger confines of Trinity College.

At Chapel Hill, something similar is afoot—though it was faculty-initiated. A very good history scholar with a capacity for self-discipline had been invited to submit his own prospectus for independent reading—in addition to his honors work. His reading list, naturally, ran more heavily to social studies, though Dante appeared on it. One gathered that the program had proved surprisingly successful, and it has disposed the faculty to try to broaden its program of independent, classroom-free reading. This is, of course, in addition to the highly successful "freshman honors" program, popularly known in Chapel Hill as the "suicide 50."

At Davidson, where a slightly different wrinkle has been put on independent study, a program of supervised "great books" reading has been devised under the direction of six professors for freshman and sophomores. The intensive reading (to be discussed and plumbed in a super-lecture room, fitted with every imaginable teaching device except the hickory stick—and maybe even that) replaces more than a dozen hours of course study. Here the selection of students is not confined to the pre-eminently brainy, but strikes a cross-section of all students.

One highly informed observer of the program noted, "The boys who've gone through the program's first year say it is the hardest course they've ever taken—but they wouldn't trade it for anything else."

* * *

Many of these attempts to create a "community of scholars" within the sometimes-cluttered state of a university or large college campus are perhaps old hat in other parts of the country. At Swarthmore, in Pennsylvania, the tutor-seminar plan is well entrenched, and at Princeton, the preceptorial idea.

Even so, there is strong ferment on North Carolina campuses, often centered in the ambitious students themselves. If Mr. Goodman is dismally half-right when he accuses American higher education of "swollen institutions . . . (excessive) business and government financing . . . divisiveness of administrative rules, lack of personal contract . . . the specialist pride of faculties . . . closed minds and conformity of students" it is also true that many students, administrators and faculty are rebelling against them. That is a comforting thought, at least.

Letters To The Editors

Di-Phi Answers Charge

Reader Corrects Printing Error

To the Editors:

I can't say that you misquoted me intentionally. That would be narrow-minded. Perhaps there was some mistake in transferring the letter to print; perhaps you just didn't have enough room.

Nevertheless, it is a serious misquote. The original read, "What they have done, they have done not out of a sense of concern for the University, but out of a sense of concern for themselves." You quoted me as saying, "What they have done they have done not out of a sense of concern for themselves."

I think this should be rectified.

No Consure For WFB Politics

To the Editors:

In reply to the question raised by Charles Moss as to whether the Di-Phi condemned William Buckley for his conservatism, let me state once and for all that the Di-Phi did not nor, to my knowledge, has it ever condemned a person because of his political affiliation or ideo-

The question of academic freedom, I feel, has been wrongly raised in this matter. The introducer of the motion to censure Buckley for his vulgarity brought out very plainly in the debate that Di-Phi, if it passed the motion, would in no way be advocating the denial of the right of free speech to Mr. Buckley. He illustrated his point by quoting Voltaire, "I may not agree with what you say but I shall defend to the death your right to say it."

What the Di-Phi did, in effect, was to express its disapproval of those parts of Mr. Buckley's speech which it felt to be in poor taste. The consensus was that Mr. Buckley's reference to Mr. Tynan's potency was particularly bad. No one who gives a speech on any controversial topic expects it to receive unanimous approval. To term disapproval as violations of academic freedom or the right to free speech would be to stretch those terms to the point of meaninglessness.

I am not quite sure what Mr. Charles Hooks means when he states that the "Di-Phi, in a frenzied attempt to prove its existence, issued a pompus (sic) statement of 'censure' for Mr. Buckley's 'vulgarity.'" The Di-Phi has been stating its opinion for 168 years and it has no intention of stopping now. It would be a strange thing indeed if it, as a debating society, refused to speak out one way or the other on an issue which has embroiled the campus in controversy. It would be more than strange. It would be an abdication of responsibility.

The debate on the motion was carried out in a considered and intelligent manner. I feel confident that the representatives voted after having taken into consideration all aspects of the matter. Let me reiterate that Mr. Buckley's politics had nothing to do with the motion of censure and that the body would have acted in a similar manner had the speaker been Norman Mailer or Adlai Stevenson.

The Di-Phi has too much respect for the freedom of speech to see an abuse of it go unnoticed.

Too Much Confusion . . .

To the Editors,

Many views have been expressed about the proposed name change of North Carolina State College to the University of North Carolina at Raleigh or UNCR. The University of North Carolina would have to be called the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill or UNCCH.

Now I agree that there may be some advantages to the name changes (although I fail to see them) but I do not think that they would balance the disadvantages and confusion that it would cause. Can you imagine the complications involved in sports and other fields in which the two schools compete. Or think of yourself going home and being asked where you go to school. When you say "UNC", the invariable following statement would be, "Is that at Raleigh?"

I think it would be better for all concerned if the names remained as they are. I like UNC and I would like to know that I can refer to it, as that, for all purposes and that I will not have to use UNCCH.

National Stability Threatened

Congo Bank Misses Millions

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Between $10 and $20 million is missing from the National Bank of Katanga in the Congo, authoritative sources said Saturday.

They said the multi-million loss—in Congolese and Katanga francs from the bank in Elisabethville—has jeopardized the country's monetary system.

One source called it "the great Katanga bank robbery."

However, U.S. sources were careful not to accuse Katanga President Moise Tshombe of theft. But it was noted that when Tshombe left Elisabethville earlier this week, he had "an unusually large amount of baggage."

There was speculation, but no authoritative confirmation, that the money might be in Kolwezi, where Tshombe might be heading.

Discovery that the cash was missing from the bank vault prompted a search in both Africa and Europe, an attempt to locate the European-based printing facilities for the Katanga francs, and a speed-up in previously scheduled efforts to integrate currency of secessionist Katanga and the central Congolese government.

Officials were known to be concerned about the possibility of inflation if the money is not located. Although the sources referred to it as a "robbery," they said it was conceivable there might be another explanation.

"The money is supposed to be in the vault according to books of the bank," one source said. "The money may turn up some other place but it certainly is not in the bank where it is supposed to be."

The United Nations earlier took over the bank. An audit found that one billion Congolese francs and a large amount of Katanga francs were missing. One source said "hundreds of thousands" of the latter were unaccounted for.

The official rate of exchange is 63 Congo francs to a dollar but the "gray rate" is as high as 200 to a dollar.

As an initial step toward gradual integration of all Congolese currency under the U.N. plan to unify the Congo, the Congolese government on Wednesday declared a rate of exchange of one Congolese franc for one Katanga franc.

Western governments were informed on the night of Jan. 10 that the money was missing.

One source said there was "enormous concern that a whole nation's stability might be at stake." They said it is possible that the francs already had been converted into another currency.

Reports from European financial sources reaching here said Tshombe has an account in a Swiss bank but there was no indication that he has attempted recently to make a large deposit.

Majors In Physics, Chemistry Sought

Recruiters for one of the Navy's leading research and development centers—the U.S. Naval Ordnance Laboratory at White Oak, Maryland—will visit U.N.C. Friday, Jan. 18.

The NOL team, usually a personnell representative accompanied by a professional scientist or engineer, is particularly interested in talking to students majoring in mechanical, electrical, aeronautical and chemical engineering as well as physics, chemistry and mathematics.

Graduate professionals employed by the Naval Ordnance Laboratory are integrated into the Laboratory's overall organization by rotating new professional trainees through three consecutive four-month assignments in research, engineering and evaluation departments.

New professional trainees employed by the Laboratory under this program may assist senior scientists with projects in aerodynamics and aeroballistics, magnetics and non-magnetic materials, pyrotechnics, conventional and nuclear explosives, gas dynamics, and computer researcher and application. Or they may work in such areas as nuclear and solid state physics, underwater acoustics, nuclear energy, electro-magnetics and environmental evaluation.

As one means of enhancing the professional competence of its employees, the Laboratory maintains a Graduate Training Program through which advanced degrees can be earned. This program is conducted in close cooperation with several local universities. Included in this program are courses offered at the Laboratory with its own senior staff members as instructors. Employees participating in this program often use their regular research or engineering work as thesis material and are allowed partial work time during which to attend classes.

NOL's unique facilities enable the laboratory staff to pursue weapon development from the most basic preliminary studies to the point of readiness for Fleet use. Some of the more important facilities with which the new employee will work include supersonic and hypersonic wind tunnels and ballistics ranges, the latest digital and analog computers, a new centrifuge with a 60-foot wing span, and a 100-foot deep undersea weapons test tank. Many other up-to-date laboratories within the laboratory are available for the study of plastics, magnetic measurements, crystals, metallurgy and X-ray.

Not unlike a university campus, the Naval Ordnance Laboratory is located on a 900-acre tract in the rolling countryside of suburban Maryland, 13 miles north of Washington, D. C. The Laboratory is staffed by approximately 3,000 people, including 1,000 graduate professional scientists and engineering, and 400 sub-professionals. Many of these people are long-time employees of the Laboratory who have earned for themselves a world-wide reputation as experts in their field.

Reds May Desire Berlin Settlement

MOSCOW— (UPI) —The government newspaper Izvestia said Saturday night that Western troops should leave West Berlin and a peace treaty be concluded with East Germany. It said West Berlin must become a city of peace instead of danger.

No threats were made and no deadlines set.

Western observers here cited the newspaper comments as still further evidence of a Soviet diplomatic drive for a Berlin settlement. They predicted the issue will share the spotlight with the expected airing of the Sino-Soviet dispute at the East German party congress opening in East Berlin Tuesday.

Izvestia said East Berliners were keyed up at the prospect of Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's arrival there for the congress. But the press remained silent about the Premier's talks in Poland with Polish Party chief Wladyslaw Gomulka.

The party newspaper Pravda kept the Kremlin-Peking ideological battle alive by publishing the latest in a string of expressions of support for Moscow's peaceful coexistence policy toward the West.

Pravda printed a carefully edited statement from the Norwegian Communist Party backing Khrushchev's stand. It ignored a Norwegian declaration that "all parties" should avoid poisoning the air.

The official government news agency Tass reported claims by Indonesian Communists, whose party is the largest outside Russia, that a Chinese-supported move for a world meeting of parties would take "a year or two to prepare." Russia has not appeared eager for such a conference.

Chinese Execute 5 For Sabotage

LONDON (UPI)—The Communist New China News Agency said Saturday Communist China had executed five "U.S.-Chiang Kai-shek special agents" for attempted sabotage.

The agency, broadcasting from Canton and monitored in London, said the five were executed Friday in towns where they had been caught and tried as saboteurs.

Peking usually refers to Chinese Nationalist agents on the mainland as "U.S.-Chiang" agents and insists the United States has backed Nationalist espionage activities.

New China said the men were five of "15 U.S.-Chiang Kai-shek special agents who plotted to engage in demolition by explosives, arson and activities of sabotage."

It said three other men were sentenced to death but their sentence was suspended for two during which "they will undertake corrective labor."

LECTURE SET

Critical views on some recent race attitudes and the controversy about racial inferiority will be the subjects of a public lecture to be given here next week.

Earl W. Count, Professor of Anthropology at Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., will speak on the subject "An Anthropologist Looks at Race."

The lecture is scheduled for Wednesday, Jan. 16, at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Professor Count is the author of the book "This Is Race."

Control Of Nuclear Power Film Subject

"Power Among Men", a film dealing with the threat of nuclear war will be shown tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall. Admission is free. The film is sponsored by the UNC Chapter of the Student Peace Union.

"Power Among Men", called by the Saturday Review of Literature "the most important film of the decade," studies the forces of destruction and rehabilitation in four countries: Italy, Haiti, Norway and British Columbia. The people of these countries engage in struggles between varying forms of waste and productivity, destruction and creation, and essentially, between good and evil.

Although devoted to the ideals of the United Nations, the film wisely avoids moralizing and cliches according to a Peace Union spokesman. It deals instead with specific, real instances of power, its use and misuse, and it permits the viewer to draw his own conclusions. "Power Among Men" is in the words of the Christian Science Monitor, "firmly antisentimental and unswervingly devoted to the concrete."

UNC Students Trek To Toronto Jan. 30

By TRES SMITH

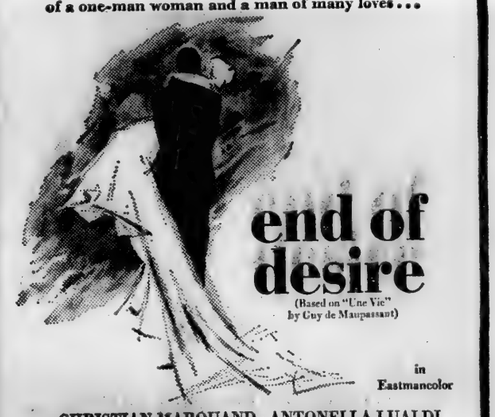
On Thursday, Jan. 30, UNC students in the Toronto Exchange Program will be starting a 24-hour bus ride to the Canadian capital. Their weekend at Toronto University will be highlighted by Winter Carnival festivities and a serious side as well.

In last Thursday's meeting of participants in the program, the topics for three organized seminar discussions which will be attended by the students were announced: "Capitalism, Communism, and Socialism;" "Morals in College Life;" and "The U. S. Influence on Canada." Students at the meeting were also marked to write down their shoe sizes so that ice skates can be obtained for them during the weekend.

The students should arrive in Toronto about noon Thursday, dian student who will serve as their host. The UNC students will be taking something back to their counterparts, in exchange for the blue scarves they received when the Canadians were down here.

The Winter Carnival Weekend, as in many northern schools, is the top social event of the year. Ski competition, ice shows, and ice statue displays are some of the events the UNC students will attend.

In the past three years, at least one student has always returned in a cast. This year's participants are hoping to establish a new record.



The students will be leaving Toronto on Sunday, Feb. 3. At least 27 Tar Heels will be participating in the program.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X E
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

A GUIDE FOR THE UNMONEYED

R. L. Sigafoos was a loon, ambitious lad, and when he finished high school he wished mightily to go on with his education. It seemed, however, a forlorn hope. R. L.'s father could not send the boy to college because a series of crop failures had brought him to the brink of disaster. (R. L.'s father raised orchids which, in North Dakota, is a form of agriculture fraught with risk.)

It was, therefore, up to R. L. He could go to college only if he worked his way through. This was a prospect that dismayed him. He had a deep-seated fear that the task would be too great, that he would never be able to carry on a full, busy college life and still find time to do odd jobs and make money.

Racked with misgivings, R. L. paced the streets, pondering his dilemma. One day, walking and brooding, he came upon a park bench and sat down and lit a Marlboro cigarette. R. L. always lit a Marlboro when he was low in his mind. R. L. also always lit a Marlboro when he was merry. The fact is there is no occasion—happy or sad, pensive or exuberant, cheery or solemn—when Marlboro with its fine filter and fine flavor is not entirely welcome, as you will discover when you go to your favorite tobacconist and buy some, as we—the makers of Marlboro and Lord R. L. Sigafoos—hope you will do real soon.

Sitting and thinking and smoking a Marlboro on the park bench, R. L. was suddenly interrupted by a small, quavering voice which said, "My boy, you are troubled. Can I help?"

Hoare: a fencing lesson to the Dean of Women

Seated beside R. L. was a tiny, gnarled man with wispy, snow-white hair. His skin was almost transparent, showing a delicate tracery of fragile bones beneath. His back was bent, and his hands trembled. But his eyes were bright and clear. R. L. looked into those eyes, into the wrinkled face. He saw wisdom there, and experience, and kindness. "Do you think, sir," said R. L., "that a boy can work his way through college and still enjoy a rich, full campus life?"

"Why, bless you, son," replied the stranger with a rheumy chuckle, "of course you can. In fact, I did it myself."

"Was it very hard?" asked R. L.

"Yes, it was hard," the stranger admitted. "But when one is young, all things are possible. I, for example, used to get up at five o'clock every morning to stoke the furnace at the SAE house. At six I had to milk the ewes at the school of animal husbandry. At seven I gave a fencing lesson to the Dean of Women. At eight I had a class in early Runic poets. At nine I gave haircuts at the Gamma Phi Beta house. At ten I had differential calculus. At eleven I posed for a life class. At twelve I watered soup at the Union. At one I had a class in Oriental languages. At two I exercised the mice in psych lab. At three I gave the Dean of Women another fencing lesson. At four I had qualitative analysis. At five I went clamming. At six I cut meat for the football team. At seven I wished at the movies. At eight I had my ears pierced so that at nine I could tell fortunes in a gypsy tearoom. At ten I had a class in astronomy. At eleven I tucked in the football team. At twelve I studied and at three I went to sleep."

"Sir," cried R. L., "I am moved and inspired by your shining example!"

"It was nothing," said the stranger modestly, shaking his frail white head. "It was just hard work, and hard work never hurt anybody."

"Would you mind telling me, sir," said R. L., "how old you are now?"

"Twenty-two," said the stranger. © 1963 Max Shulman

Tar Heels Take Ten First Places

By LASZLO BIRINYI

UNC's track and field team scored their first victory of the season yesterday by defeating State College in a duel meet held in the Tin Can. The Tarheels took ten firsts and seven seconds in their 78-31 victory. Outstanding performance were turned in by John McNinch, in the 60 yard dash, Bob Hart in the 600 yard run, and Charlie Little, in the ½ mile. Other victories were scored by Don Gabriel in the low hurdles, Bob Bennett in the mile, Reinard Harkema in the high jump, Jerry Green Smith in the two mile, and A. Wellman in the high hurdles.

J. Corn scored a victory for state in the pole vault by vaulting 14 feet. Health Whittle of UNC also jumped 14 feet but lost on the basis of a new rule which states that, in the event of a tie, the person with the fewer misses shall be declared winner. This rule has been in effect in National Championships but this is the first time that it is being used in college competition. State's other victories were recorded by S. Rogers in the broad jump, and T. Sasser in the shot put.

Hart, the defending ACC title holder in the 600, won his specialty with ease defeating teamate Maurice McDonald by a large margin. In one of the day's best races, Little beat Jerry Stuver by an appreciable margin. However, Stuver has yet to reach the excellent condition was enabled him to run a 4:11 mile last year because he is recovering from an operation. Little's usual race, the mile was won by cross-country ace Bob Bennett who defeated Larry Henry.

In freshman competition, notable performances, were turned in by Dale White, Richard Ambrose, and Bob Hicks. White, won the low hurdles by traveling the 70 yards in 8 seconds. This was .4 better than the varsity's winning time. Ambrose won the high hurdles in 9.3 which was only .1 seconds behind the varsity mark. Hicks won the quarter mile in the excellent time of 52.7. In addition he anchored the frosh 8 lap relay team.

Friday night six members of the team traveled to Richmond for the Richmond Invitational Meet where they captured 2 seconds, 1 third, 1 fourth, and two fifths. The seconds were won by Tom Clark, who jumped 6'4", and by Little who was edged out in the final yards of the mile run.

Stuver finished third in the half mile, Carmine Lunetta was fourth in the two mile, McNinch was fifth in the 50 yard high hurdles.

Assistant Coach Joe Hilton had this to say following the Richmond meet. "We looked like we'll have a pretty good team. We were well pleased with the performances and especially pleased with Bauguess and McNinch both of whom showed real good promise.

Basketball Team Visits Maryland

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's basketball Tar Heels return to action tomorrow night when they visit College Park for a contest with Maryland's defensive-minded Terrapins.

Dean Smith's men were knocked out of the undefeated list in Atlantic Coast Conference competition when Wake Forest jolted them, 78-70, Wednesday night. They will put a 6-2 record on the line against Bud Millikan's team in their third straight road contest.

Last season the Terps topped Carolina easily, 79-62, on the Maryland home floor, then UNC won its home game, 70-67. The big gun in the Terp attack is Jerry Greenspan, a 6-6 forward who averaged 15.2 points a game last year. After last week's games Greenspan was the number four scorer in the ACC with a 19.1 average.

Other high-scoring Terps are Connie Carpenter, 13.6 average, and Bob Eicher, with the same average. Lettermen Joe Barton, and Scott Ferguson are other experienced Terrapins.

Billy Cunningham's 19.4 average paces the Tar Heels. The Carolina sophomore star has topped 25 points in four of his last five games.

At guard, UNC has the best combination in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Yogi Poteet, one of the better defensive backcourt men in the league, and Larry Brown are both averaging better than 14 points a game. Poteet's mark dropped to 14.8 when he hit only one of 11 field goal attempts against Wake Forest—the first time he has been below double figures this year. Brown holds a 14.4 average.

Charlie Shaffer is the fourth Tar Heel in double figures. The native Chapel Hill forward has a 10.3 average, hitting on exactly 50 per cent of his 58 shots from the floor. Only Cunningham's 50.8 field goal percentage tops Shaffer among the starters.

Mike Cooke, who scored 14 points against Wake, could slip into a starting position against Maryland. As the top reserve, Mike has averaged 6.8 per game.

Ray Respess, the second sophomore starter, has hit 8.6 a game and his 50 rebounds ties him with Shaffer for the runner-up rebounding position. Cunningham again leads here with 125 rebounds.

Maryland, always tough on its home court, has a 2-3 record in the AOC.. Carolina is 2-1.

Illinois Defeats Purdue, 106-82

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (UPI) — Third-ranked Illinois, dominating the backboards and gaining double-figure scoring from six players, romped over Purdue, 106-82, in a Big Ten basketball game yesterday.

The Illini led throughout and reserves played much of the final half with the Illinois bench cleared at game's end.

Purdue's Mel Garland led all scorers with 27 points and teammate Ron Hughes had 19.

Dave Downey paced the Illini attack with 22. Bogie Redmon, a reserve who played only the final 10 minutes of the contest, had 18 for Illinois. Bill Small, who ran his consecutive free throw string to 27, added 15 points. Bill Burwell and Skip Thoren each had 12 points and Tal Brody 10.

The Illini, who held a 44-32 halftime edge, out-rebounded the Boilermakers, 60-29.

It was Illinois' 11th victory in 12 games this season and third without defeat in conference play. Purdue is 0-3 in the conference and 5-7 for the season.

Former UNC Coach Awarded Honor

Bill Edwards of Wittenburg College, who was named small college Coach of the Year by the American Football Coaches Association, is a former member of the University of North Carolina football staff. He served with George Barclay in 1953 and prior to that was head coach and athletic director at Vanderbilt. Most famous product of the Edwards' regime at Vandy is Bill Wade, quarterbacking dandy of the Chicago Bears.

Coaches Galore

If you're looking for a coach of any sport at the University of North Carolina, he's likely to be found at one of the basketball games. Pat Earey, the swimming coach, handles the public address system. Don Skakle, the tennis coach, is in charge of the radio-tv press booth. Wrestling coach Sam Barnes often attends basketball practice, while football coach Jim Hickey spectates when not out recruiting.

Jim Beatty's Track Awards Are Numerous

Jimmy Beatty has been pleasantly buried by accolades recently. He received the Helms Foundation award for athlete of the year, was voted the top track athlete by the Los Angeles Times, was the American Broadcasting Company's athlete of the year, was acclaimed by the National Jaycees as one of America's top ten young men, and most recently was the recipient of the Sullivan Award as the outstanding amateur athlete for 1962. While a two-time All-American at the University of North Carolina Beatty accumulated 11 Atlantic Coast Conference titles: three cross country championships, six indoor one and two-mile trophies and two outdoor mile titles. He was twice Penn Relay 2-mile winner. He became the first American to break U. S. records in five consecutive meets (he actually broke six within a two-week span!) as he highlighted last summer a successful tour of Northern Europe by the tiny Los Angeles Track Club. He currently holds World and American records in the indoor mile (3:58.9) and outdoor 2-mile (8:29.8) and American records for 1,500 meters, 2,000 meters, 3,000 meters and 5,000 meters.

His present coach Mihaly Igloi was here at Carolina in February, March, April and May of 1957—"a key event for Beatty's development as a great track athlete," says his college coach Dale Ranson.

Leg Problems Plague UNC

North Carolina's Tar Heels have had more problems with legs this winter than the director of the Copacabana chorus line. Bryan McSweeney and Billy Galantai were slowed from opening day with knee and ankle problems. Latest is Terry Ronner, a 6-5 sophomore transfer from the Naval Academy who would have become eligible in February. Terry, whose home is in Wilmington, N. C., is now in a cast after a leg wound over the weekend. He'll be out of action from four to six weeks.

SUNDAY CINEMA

Sunday Cinema breaks tradition tonight and presents an American Movie, one that most Southern audiences have never had an opportunity to see. "Raisin in the Sun," starring Sidney Poitier, is Lorraine Hansberry's award-winning play turned into a film drama, but due to the controversal subject, it has been banned in most Southern cities.

Wake Forest Tops Gobblers, 78-63

WINSTON-SALEM (UPI) — With 6-10 center Bob Woollard turning in one of his top performances, the Wake Forest Deacons downed Virginia Tech 76-63 in an afternoon cage contest here yesterday.

Woollard, who paced the Deacons with 21 points and 16 rebounds, gave his team its permanent lead in the first half when he hit a tap-in for an 18-16 lead with the game a little more than nine minutes old. Until that point, the lead had changed hands five times.

Tech, which plays out of the Southern Conference, stayed within three points of the margin until shortly before the half ended and Wake dumped in eight straight shots to run up an 11-point advantage. The Deacons left the court at intermission with a 35-24 advantage.

The closest the Virginians could come in the second half was midway in the period when two consecutive jump shots by Howard Pardue moved Tech to within six points of the lead at 51-45 but Wake's defense closed up and the Deacons gradually pulled away to a 13-point lead.

Lee Melear paced the Virginians with 19 points while Pardue, who had 19 points plus average going into the game was held to seven points by Wake defender Frank Christie.

The win gave the Deacons an over-all record of 7-4 while Virginia Tech is now 6-5.

Wofford Stars Lead Statistics

BOONE (UPI)—Wofford's George Lyons and Bob Waldrop lead the first individual basketball statistics from District 26 of the National Association of Inter-collegiate Athletics, it was announced Saturday.

Lyons, a flashy sophomore from Rock Hill, S. C., tallied 207 points in 10 games for a 20.7 average and Waldrop gathered in 163 rebounds for an average of 16.3.

Dave Hawk of Newberry holds the leadership in field goal shooting percentages with 51 of 61 for 61.9 per cent and Jim Wiles of Lenoir Rhyne had the best record in free throws, hitting 39 of 44 for 88.6 per cent.

Lenoir Rhyne held two team statistics leads with a field goal shooting average of 54 per cent and a foul shooting average of 74.6 per cent. Pembroke held the scoring leadership with a game average of 87.3, while Western Carolina allowed only 54.7 points per game to lead in defense.

Girls Don't Dig New Hula Uniforms: 'We Look Fat'

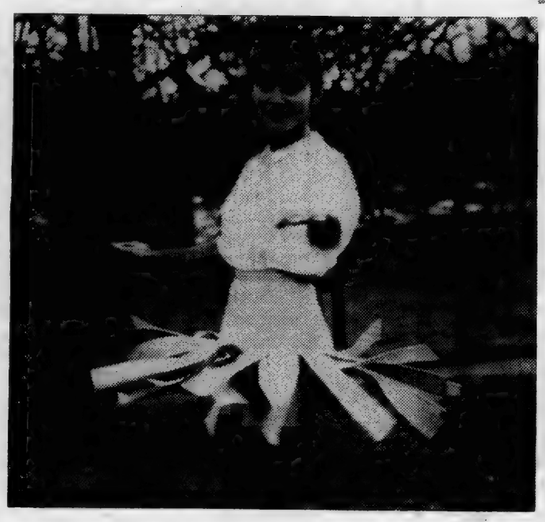
By VANCE BARRON JR.

Girls on the varsity cheerleading squad have decided that they don't like their new cheerleading uniforms—the ones that look like a cross between bermuda shorts and a grass skirt. In response to their protests, Hannis Latham, the head cheerleader, has withdrawn the new uniforms from use.

The opinion of the girls was expressed yesterday in a dispute between Latham and the girls, arbitrated by the Dean of Women, Katherine Carmichael.

In an interview yesterday, Latham said that the uniforms were selected at the first part of the year in order to provide a variety of uniforms for the girls and something that would be comfortable in hot weather. While they seemed to like them early in the football season, something has happened to dull enthusiasm among the girls and prompt such remarks from them as "they make me feel self-conscious" and "we're humiliated to wear them in public."

Latham sighed about the impenetrability of the female mind and expressed his personal frustration over the affair. It seems that he has a genuine rebellion on his hands and can't discover who is conspiring to disrupt the unity of his squad.



According to Latham, Miss Carmichael said that she definitely did not like the new uniforms and that while she herself could not understand how the girls could like the uniforms, she felt that they should be allowed to wear them if they wished.

Latham said that he was then surprised to learn that the girls had objected to the uniforms all along.

They said that the uniforms were in "bad taste" and that they made it seem as if "they were fat". After a bit of frank discussion on the latter point, Latham reported that he had the feeling that no one "had ever told them that they (the uniforms) were good-looking."

Latham himself was astonished at this revelation, for he said that "vast majorities of students said they liked them — from Mrs. Fambrough at G.M. to several freshmen".

He is now issuing an appeal to those members of the student body who want the cheerleaders to wear the new uniforms to "tell 'em so."

In Bad Taste?

Wind Ensemble Set Performs Tonight

The UNC Symphonic Wind Ensemble will present its first concert of the year tonight at 8 in Hill Music Hall. Dr. Herbert W. Fred will conduct the group in a number of selections composed expressly for wind bands. Included will be works by Anton Bruckner, William Schuman, Percy Grainger, Gordon Jacob, Gustav Holst, and Paul Creston.

William Schuman, Director of New York's Lincoln Center, will be represented by his two latest wind ensemble compositions, "When Jesus Wept," and "Chester." Both selections are based on tunes by the American composer William Billings.

Also featured will be the rarely heard Prelude and Scherzo by Gustav Holst. Sub-titled "Hammersmith," this work was published after Holst's death. Holst is considered the first composer to write a "major" work for a band during the twentieth century.

Other works on the program include Bruckner's March in E-flat major, one of three marches which he composed; a salute to America entitled "Flag of Stars," by the British composer Gordon Jacob; and the Celebration Overture by the young American composer Paul Creston.

Dr. Fred, the conductor, is also director of the University's band program, and is well known throughout the Midwest, South, and East, as a conductor and teacher. He is past President of the Southern Division of the College Band Director's National association. He is a member of the American Bandmaster's Association and Pi Kappa Lamba, honorary music fraternity.

Dr. Fred has published some 20 compositions and arrangements for concert band which are played throughout the United States by high school, college, and professional bands.

The concert is open to the public. Admission is free.

James Baldwin To Speak At NCC Thursday

James Baldwin, author of the best-selling novel Another Country, will speak at North Carolina College this Thursday at 8:15 p.m. in B. N. Duke Auditorium on "the South's Demand for New Leadership."

Currently visiting U. S. Colleges in the interest of CORE and the NAACP, the author will visit Durham under the auspices of the NCC student chapter of the NAACP.

Marian Davis secretary of the Community Church, said that tickets were selling very fast and advised all interested students to purchase their tickets in Chapel Hill rather than at the door. Tickets are available at the Y-Office and at the Community Church Office. Admission is one dollar for adults and fifty cents for students.

Described by Time magazine as "the most bitterly eloquent voice of the American Negro," Baldwin has written several significant works. In addition to the controversial Another Country, he has authored two other novels, Giovanni's Room and Go Tell It On the Mountain. He is the author of two books of essays—Nobody Knows My Name and Notes of a Native Son.

Nobody Knows My Name was honored with a certificate of recognition by the National Conference of Christians and Jews and was selected by the Notable Books Council of the American Library Association as one of the outstanding books of 1961.

Winner of a number of literary awards and fellowships—a Eugene F. Saxton Memorial Trust award, a Rosenwald fellowship, a Partisan Review fellowship, and a Ford Foundation grant-in-aid—Baldwin is the author of stories and essays which have appeared in The New Yorker, Commentary, Harper's, The Atlantic, Esquire, and other magazines in this country and abroad.

NASA Head To Speak; Gov. Sanford To Deliver Awards

Rascism Blasted By Three Denominations At Meeting

CHICAGO (UPI) — Protestant, Catholic and Jewish leaders on Monday joined in denouncing racism as a sin, and confessed that churches and synagogues are involved in the guilt along with the rest of American society.

A summons to national repentance was issued by spokesmen for all three major faiths, meeting together for the first time in U. S. history at a "National Conference on Religion and Race."

Delegates from 70 religious denominations and organizations are taking part in the conference which will remain in session through Thursday at the Edgewater Beach Hotel. Co-sponsors of the conference are the National Conference of Churches, the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and the Synagogue Council of America.

Rabbi Abraham J. Heschel of the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York told the opening session that "Racism is man's gravest threat to man — the maximum of hatred for a minimum of reason."

The noted Jewish theologian said that "by negligence and silence we have all become accessories . . . to the injustice committed against the Negroes of our nation."

Racial Injustices

Urging churches and synagogues to quit being "apologetic, cautious and timid" in dealing with racial injustice, he said:

"Indifference to evil is more insidious than evil itself; it is more universal, more contagious, more dangerous . . . It is time for the white man to repent. The plight of the Negro must become our most important concern."

J. Erwin Miller, president of the National Council of Churches said America's religious institutions have a "clear duty" to "make clear to all our people the cancerous nature of this evil and its threat to our society if it be not eliminated."

"The churches and synagogues must assume a great share of blame that our problem is still with us," he said. "Even we often find ourselves not practicing what we preach."

Cardinal Speaks

Albert Cardinal Meyer, Roman Catholic archbishop of Chicago, said America's race relations stand today as "an obstacle to a right conscience before God."

"Our whole future as a nation and as religious people may be determined by what we do about the race problem in the next few years," he said.

He expressed hope that the conferees will not be satisfied with "merely uttering an eloquent protest" against racial barriers, but will lay plans for specific joint action by all faiths to cope with such problems as discrimination in employment, education and housing.

'Meet The Professor'

Spearman, Class On ABC-TV Sunday

"Meet the Professor," a national weekly television feature of ABC-TV, will turn its attention to UNC this week.

Walter Spearman, professor of Journalism, and six members of his class in Reviewing (Journalism 60), will appear on WUNC-TV at 1:30 p.m. Sunday.

The topic of discussion will be the Broadway play, "The Affair," by C. P. Snow, which includes former UNC Playmaker Edgar Daniels.

Prof. Spearman and his class taped the program the first week in December in New York City. It is in the form of a regular class, and was held in a classroom set up in the network's studios.

"We had a heck of a good time," said Spearman. "The taping went off very well, there was no stage fright, everyone spoke well and they even laughed at all my puns!"

Students who accompanied Prof. Spearman were Paul Houston, John Medlin, Bob Alridge, Terry Bond, John Dunne and Linda Griffith. They were selected from the 17 students in the Reviewing class.

Three-Day Meet Begins On Thursday

Mr. James E. Webb, director of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, will be the featured speaker at the N. C. Press Institute meeting here for three days beginning this Thursday. Mr. Webb's address on "NASA in the Nation" will be delived before the group at 10 a.m. on Friday at Carroll Hall.

Mr. Webb graduated from UNC in 1928 where he was a member of Phi Beta Kappa. In 1949 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from UNC. He has served in governmental positions for a number of years, notably as an undersecretary of state and as an undersecretary of the treasury.

He is now director of the NASA, the agency that coordinates the national space effort.

Governor Sanford

In the opening on Thursday evening at 8:00 p.m. at Carroll Hall. Governor Sanford will present the 1962 Press Awards and will address the group. The second evening address on Friday will be held at Duke University in the Gothic Banquet Hall of the Duke Union. The speaker will be Mrs. Willie M. Snow Etheridge, the wife of the chairman of the board of the Louisville, Kentucky, Courier-Journal, whose address is entitled "Newspaperman's Wife".

The Press Institute will conclude with a business session Saturday morning.

NEW BOOK

New material on the great music masters Mozart, Haydn and Beethoven will be included in a book written by William S. Newman, UNC Distinguished Alumni Professor of Music.

Dr. Newman's book, entitled "The Sonata in the Classic Era," will be published by the UNC Press in May.

This book will be the second in a series of four volumes. Collectively, the volumes will form one of the most definitive histories of music form — the sonata — ever to be published.

"The Sonata in the Classic Era" will mark the first time any book in any language has traced a single form in detail right across the era, which runs from about 1735 to 1820. This book will be the central volume of Dr. Newman's series.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS BOARD

There will be a brief but important Students Board today at 4 p.m. in the Y. Planning for the International Students Seminar is to be completed.

Kennedy Asks $10 Billion Tax Cut Over Three Years

WASHINTON (UPI) — President Kennedy asked Congress Monday for a record three-year $10 billion tax cut that would be accompanied by a slash in all federal spending except for defense and space.

Reaction from several key democrats and Republicans — some on the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee — indicated the President might have come up with a tax formula capable of winning broader support than originally believed. Doubts were expressed by some, however.

In a generally optimistic report on the State of the Union, the President proposed that the program be launched with a $6 billion cut this year in individual income and corporate taxes. The rest of the cut would be imposed in 1964 and 1965.

The reductions would range from a high of 30 per cent for people with very small incomes to less than 20 per cent for other taxpayers. A taxpayer earning $3,000 a year and with a wife and two children would have his tax bill trimmed by $18 over the three years; one earning $10,000 would get a $304 reduction, and one earning $25,000 would realize a $1,144 cut.

Total Of $11 Billion

The cut in individual taxes would amount to $11 billion. A $2.5 billion reduction in corporate levies would be imposed by trimming the corporate income tax rate from 52 per cent to 47 per cent. However, the President proposed recapturing $3.5 billion of this $13.5 billion cut by broading the tax base and closing certain loopholes—for a net reduction of $10 billion.

If approved by Congress, it would be the single biggest tax reduction program in history.

The tax program highlighted the President's address to a joint session of the House and Senate, during which he spoke soberly but hopefully on the nation's future. He said steady progress had been made toward a world of order, and "the recession is behind us."

"I can report to you that the state of this old but youthful Union, in the 175th year of its life, is good," he told the crowded chamber and the packed galleries where his wife, Jacqueline, looked on approvingly.

Cite Good Omens

While warning that difficult days still lie ahead, the President cited some good omens in the world situation. Berlin remains free, there has been a settlement—though precarious—in Laos, and "end of agony" may be coming in the Congo, aggression has been blunted in Viet Nam and a "deadly threat" removed from Cuba.

At the same time, he cautioned against complacency or self-congratulation because "a moment of pause is not a promise of peace."

But with no military crisis straining U. S. resources, he said "now is the time" for tax reduction. Mindful of those demanding a budget surplus before any tax cuts, he viewed his program as the best way of achieving a balanced budget eventually.

Kennedy advised the lawmakers that his fiscal 1964 budget to be submitted Thursday will show a deficit because of higher spending for defense, space and interest on the national debt. The budget is expected to call for record spending of about $99.5 billion.

Promises Spending Cuts

But he said spending for all other purpose would be held below current levels, by trimming or postponing "many desirable programs," terminating certain installations and projects, absorbing a recent federal pay raise through personnel cuts, and by substituting private for government credit in several programs.

EDUCATION SENIORS

You are required to take National Teacher Examinations. Bulletins of information complete with applications may be obtained from the University Testing Service, Room 019, Peabody Hall. Applications must be mailed by today.

Infirmary

'ROUNDTABLE'

"The Responsibility of the Protestant Minister in the South Today" will be the subject of WUNC radio's "Carolina Roundtable" on Thursday, January 17 at 7 p.m.

Analyzing the special problems of the south and the duties of the minister in meeting them will be Dr. Samuel S. Hill, Chairman of the UNC Department of Religion, the Reverend Charles M. Jones of the Community Church, the Reverend John R. Manley of the First Baptist Church, and the Reverend Dewitt L. Myers of the United Congregation Christian Church.

The Reverend Thomas R. Davis, Secretary of the University YMCA, will be moderator.

As usual, listeners may phone in questions to the panel while the program is on the air. WUNC radio's phone number of 942-3172; the FM station may be heard at 91.5 on the FM dial.

Campus Briefs

FLU SHOTS

Flue shots are being given in the infirmary from 9-11:30 a.m. and 2-5 p.m. Mon.-Fri. A flue epidemic is expected in the country this winter.

WOMEN'S RESIDENCE COUNCIL

Women's Residence Council will not meet today. The next meeting will be after exams, and will be announced later.

AFROTC

Colonel Marvin W. Heath, Director of Material, 464th Troop Carrier Wing, Pope AFB, will speak to the entire AFROTC Cadet Corps on Thurs. at 12 noon in Carroll Hall.

His subject will be "The Troop Carrier Mission in Tactical Air Command."

COSMOPOLITAN CLUB

The Cosmopolitan Club will give a semi-formal Valentine Masquerade Ball on Feb. 9 from 8-12 p.m. at the Chapel Hill Country Club.

Tickets are $2.50 per couple and may be obtained this Wed. and Thursday at Lenoir Hall from 12-2 p.m. and from 5-7 p.m., or by calling Maria Elena Bravo at 968-9132. Tickets are limited.

PHILOLOGICAL CLUB

Dr. Walter W. Arndt, associate professor of Russian in the Dept. of Germanic languages, will speak to the UNC Philological Club today at 7:45 p.m. in the Morehead Planetarium Faculty Lounge.

His subject will be "The Foreigner in Russian Literature."

All faculty members, graduate students and their families are invited.

CAVE CLIMBING CLUB

The Caving-Climbing Club will meet tonight at 7 in 302 Woollen Gym. All persons interested in spelunking, rock-climbing or hiking are invited to attend. A film on rock-climbing in North Carolina will be shown.

UNC-DUKE TICKETS

Student, faculty and employee tickets for the UNC-Duke basketball game Saturday, Feb. 2, will be available on a first come-first serve basis. They may be picked up at Woollen Gymnasium starting Monday, Jan. 21.

Fall semester pass cards must be presented, both to obtain the tickets and to get into the game.

On the basis of information furnished by the Admissions Office, a few tickets will be held out for new students registering on Jan. 29.

NSA COMMITTEE

The NSA Committte will meet today at 5 p.m. in the Grail Room to discuss the Spring Human Relations Conference. Meeting will be short, but important.

UNC COSMOPOLITAN CLUB

The UNC Cosmopolitan Club will not meet this week.

LECTURE SET

Critical views on some recent race attitudes and the controversy about racial inferiority will be the subjects of a public lecture to be given here next week.

Earl W. Count, Professor of Anthropology at Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., will speak on the subject "An Anthropologist Looks at Race."

The lecture is scheduled for Wednesday, Jan. 16, at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Professor Count is the author of the book "This Is Race."

G.M. HOURS

Beginning Sunday, January 20, Graham Memorial will be open each night preceeding exams until 3 A.M. for students wishing to Graham Memorial has vending machines for coffee, candy, sandwishes, and soft drinks.

A pair of leather gloves was lost about 11 a.m. Jan. 7th near Venable Hall. A brown jacket was also lost before the Christmas vacation. Finders please contact Harry Shoo, 250 Ehringhaus.

THE NEED FOR PEACE AND QUIET, a hard thing to come by for dorm dwellers on the hill, sometimes drives students to extremes when cram time rolls around. Above, a student harried by fast-approaching exams, takes a cue from Jim Hickey and drags his academic gear to Kenan Stadium. All you need, he says, is about two miles of extension cord to hook up a lamp and you're all set.

Religion And Race: Where Has The Church Been?

Throughout many of the racial crisis in the years since the 1954 Supreme Court ruling there have been innumerable opportunities for Church organizations and congregations to assume active roles in the Negroes' quest for justice.

But many citizens have been sorely disappointed by the Church's apparent hesitancy to become involved in an area that must surely weigh heavily on the conscience of every clergyman.

We would not even presuppose their responsibility to speak out on behalf of racial equality. We have been disappointed by their hesitancy to speak out at all. By and large, the Church as an institution has remained virtually silent on matters which would practically require the use of a muzzle to prevent comment.

Apparently, the "Church" has recognized the pregnancy of its position, and we note with satisfaction and relief the gathering of an initial National Conference on Religion and Race, in Chicago, Illinois. The conference of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish leaders has obviously noted their failure, and has, hopefully, begun to assume responsibilities which ought to have been shouldered decades ago.

In their own words: "by negligence and silence we have all become accessories . . . to the injustice committed against the Negroes of our nation." May we submit, without undue irreverence, a healthy "Amen." (CW)

North Carolina: You Can't Get Much Lower

North Carolina is an oasis in an arid South, we've been told for several years now.

North Carolina leads in education; North Carolina leads in attracting new industry; North Carolina leads in integration; North Carolina leads in its highway program; and on and on and up and up the news releases soar in their praise of the Old North State which is a "valley of humility between two mountains of conceit."

We had a smirk on our faces when the Invasion of Oxford and the Little Rock Seige occurred. Nothing similar could happen in our state, we said confidently. Oh, occasionally small holes have appeared in our bubble of optinisl. For example, Wednesday night eight students were arrested in Durham for picketing Howard Johnson's.

But today our dreams received a hard blow and our bubble of optimism exploded. A department of the federal government had the audacity to rate us on a par with Mississippi.

Yes, North Carolina is tied with Mississippi for average factory wage rates in November. The fact we've tied with Mississippi is bad enough, but we could stomach that. We might have gotten Arkansas. But what we can't stomach is this: we're tied with Mississippi for the LOWEST average hourly factory wage rate among the 50 states.

Well, that's pretty bad. You can't get much lower. But the next paragraph in the Labor Department's bureau of statistics report informs us we've been lower. It says: "The statistics represent somewhat of an improvement for North Carolina over the bureau's tabulations for October. During that month, wages averaged $1.63, placing the state at the bottom of the list. Mississippi was a cent above, at $1.64."

There is a disparity of 76 cents between North Carolina's wage rate and the national average of $2.41, which doesn't seem too much — at first glance. But the difference tells us a lot.

It tells us why young men and women leave the state at an astonishing rate; it tells us something about our legislators; it tells us something about our slow rate of growth. But more important, it tells us that we've been attacking our problem from the wrong angle.

What good is a strong educational program going to do us if, when the students finish their education, they refused to work for the wages paid here?

What good are the highways going to do us if people don't stay here to pay for them and use them?

How are we going to get new industry if there is no one here trained to operate the machines and the people who we are training have 48 other states where they can get paid better wages?

The answer to the problem won't be easy. But a start would be a realistic re-evaluation of the state's policies and objectives and how best to attain these objectives.

It's possible our optimistic bubble might become inflated again.

But it won't be anytime soon.

Meaning of Chapel Hill

In recent months the University of North Carolina has received favorable attention from several national publications. Carolina has been written about, described, talked around, looked into and looked out of. . . . We feel the Rev. Charles Jones in a sermon five months ago, came closer than any of these distinguished publications to finding what Chapel Hill has to offer, but more important, what there is to that ethereal 'thing' called freedom.

"Most students come to the University of North Carolina because it is a liberal University. No one will tell them to study at certain times, there is no curfew or lights out rule, they may drink if they wish to.

"The student . . . will boast to students from other universities of this freedom. And in the name of freedom he lives a meandering, undirected, loose life. Then he runs into someone, or something and is mastered — perhaps it is the love of a girl, sometimes it is a study, sometimes it is a cause, sometimes a chosen vocation — always it is something which is overpowering in its demands upon him.

"Then and only then is there liberated this power of thought, of creation, of beauty, of affection. It is a profound paradox of life that only those things that take possession of us, our voluntarily chosen loyalties, liberate us.

"It is a tremendous experience to be mastered by something high and lovely. Until we see freedom not so much as a heritage but as an achievement we will touch neither its height nor depth." (JC)

Campus Fever: Gripe Committee...

By MARTIN KRUMING

Early in November a committee of dual purpose was established on campus. Aside from bringing student government in closer contact with the students, the Grievance Committee aimed to register the gripes of those living in the dorms and fraternities.

Although it is under the auspices of the University Party, the Grievance Committee is basically an independent body. Indeed no other committee, with the exception of Campus Affairs and Communications, deals so closely with the personal and general problems concerning the individual student.

In order to insure authoritative answers to any and all gripes, members were selected from different areas of campus life. The chief advisers include: Marshall Bellovin, chairman; Bob Clawson, chairman of the Campus Affairs committee; Donna Johnson, social secretary of the sophomore class; John Mitchener, member of the Mens' Honor Council and IDC Court; Ford Rowan, Legislator and president of Ehringhaus; and Rex Savery, co-chairman and president of Old West.

Before commenting any further it is necessary to explain that the Grievance Committtee is only invested with the authority to answer questions on student gripes and channel them to the appropriate committee. It merely acts as a relay man, not as a means to solve dormitory and fraternity problems.

On November 6 the committee called its first meeting in Ehringhaus since a dorm with 713 residents seemed a logical hotbed for student grievances.

Among the numerous complaints was the fact that the quality of the food in the cafeteria was sub-par and the prices were too high. Also, the heating situation in some of the suites was faulty.

Formulating the 21 complaints, Bellovin drew up an Ehringhaus report and referred each problem to the appropriate campus committee or group.

Although the Grievance Committee called a meeting in Graham Dormitory on January 9, a conflict of exams and the basketball game limited the attendance. A larger turnout wouldd have been necessary to gain an insight into the problems of the Upper and Lower Quads. Another meeting has been scheduled for the second week in February.

As was stated previously the Grievance Committee was set up only to channel student gripes in the right direction. Now that it has done its job in Ehringhaus, the burden of responsibility is shifted to the shoulders of the Academic Affairs committee, the Campus Affairs committtee and the dorm inspectors, only to mention a few. It is their duty to delve into the means whereby student gripes can best be handled.

Student Government is definitely being brought to the individual student. So take advantage of this and register a complaint when the Grievance Committee visits the Upper and Lower Quads, big fraternity court, the Parker, Teague, Avery area and Craige.

The Grievance Committee has successfully gotten off the ground, and all that it can do now is see whether action speaks louder than words.

Peace Group Moves South

To the Editors,

Probably the greatest single problem of any peace group is that of awakening people to the everpresent possibility of Doomsday; that problem is even greater in the South, due to the region's comparative isolation from the mainstream of political diplomatic events. Thus the recently-formed University of North Carolina chapter of the Student Peace Union (SPU) has discovered that the students in Chapel Hill must be presented with both the fact that the South is intimately concerned with and affected by national and international events, and that present trends in international relations may well lead to a nuclear, catastrophic war.

To offset this problem of southern semi-isolation, however, the UNC group has several advantages. First of all, the university has traditionally and justly been regarded as a liberal oasis within the South and has proved to be receptive to new and challenging ideas. Secondly, there are several available outlets for communication: the student daily newspaper, the towns newspaper, a local literary magazine, and papers in the nearby towns of Raleigh and Durham, all provide ample coverage of the group's projects.

And what ARE these projects? The chief goal, of course, is that of educating the students to the problems concomitant to the age of overkill. Only secondarily will the chapter urge specific programs toward disarmament and permanent peace. Chartered in January, the UNC chapter has already scheduled a film ("Power Among Men"), arranged to have Norman Thomas speak in the spring, set up a Peace Display in the University Library, established a Peace Reading Room open to all, and is presently negotiating to have Erich Fromm down to give an address later this year.

In addition to speakers and films, leaflets will be issued from time to time, containing policy statements on particular issues that arise. A sustained poster campaign is being generated to draw the attention of the students (and faculty) to the issues of peace and war. Last, but by no means least, local chapter members are undergoing a continuing self-educative program.

The University at Chapel Hill and the entire South are largely untouched territory in the peace movement, and unfortunately so. There is a latent and potentially powerful force for practical, worthwhile achievement in the struggle for a saner world. The UNC chapter of SPU is finding daily that its activities and campus interest in these activities are snowballing.

In time — and not such a long time, we earnestly hope — through the efforts of groups such as the one here and similarly oriented organizations, perhaps the image of the South will come to be associated more with intelligent concern and the movement for peace rather than stubborn anachronisms and prejudice.

Forum Didn't Back Mayer–?

To the Editors,

This is a copy of a letter that I have written to Mr. William F. Buckley ,Jr. It clarifys, I feel, an important aspect of the Carolina Forum-Buckley conflict.

* * *

Dear Mr. Buckley:

As you well know, a very unfortunate situation has developed in regard to your appearance here last month. Now that this incident has been cleared up, I am writing in the hope of further clarifying it.

When Mr. Mayer announced that the Carolina Forum had withheld your fee, our campus became sharply divided over his right to do so. This is obvious from merely reading the pro and con letters appearing daily in the "Tar Heel." What, however, is not obvious, because of pressure from the more influential of our campus leaders, is that the Carolina Forum was also split over the issue.

Hence, the purpose of this letter is to inform you that the responsibility for this incident lies almost completely with Mr. Mayer and his cohorts, and not with the Forum itself.

While I cannot speak for the entire Forum, but only as one of its members, I want to assure you that to my mind there was no legal or moral basis for any part of the whole episode; it was inexcusable. The Forum members were given very little opportunity to express their views, and, needless to say, the initial decision was made exclusively by Chairman Mayer and his associates; the Forum members knew nothing of it until after Mayer's letter to Mrs. Babcock had been mailed.

Suffice is to say that this Forum member, at any rate, wishes to offer violent protest to the whole affair. I want to make it perfectly clear to you and to the student body that I am diametrically opposed to Mr. Mayer's stand. He was both legally and morally wrong.

—Charles Moss, Jr.

Group Names 'Most Active'

To the Editors,

The Sophomore Class has established a unique committee to provide desirved recognition for fellow class members who have in some way contributed to life at Carolina, to the campus community, and to their areas of special endeavors. The committee, operating apart from the class cabinet, has as its goal the continuing task of recognizing these active Sophomores. The Sophomore Class wishes at this time to mention a few of its members who have been extremely active during this semester.

Bill Cunningham, "man of the hour" in the Notre Dame game.

Bob Spearman, Communications Committee and legislative leader.

Ken Willard, leading groundgainer in the ACC.

Dee Johnson, Social chairman and grievance committee member.

Harrison Merrill, record breaking Carolina swimmer.

Johnnsye Massenberg, class secretary and legislator.

Marshall Bellovin, innovator and chairman of the grievance committee.

Marty Kruming, soccer standout and DTH stalwart.

Bill Aycock, dynamic, hardworking class president.

Mike Chanin, U. P. Chairman.

Ford Rowan, G. M. Current Affairs chairman and president of Ehringhaus dorm.

These, are a few of the many Sophomores who have contributed much to the university and in doing so are a credit to themselves and there class.

Admission Attitude 'Decidedly Against' Negroes

(Eds. Note: Mike Lawler, speaker of the Student Legislature, has requested reports from several of the most important student government committees, to be printed in the DTH. Following is the report of the Academic Affairs Committee by Chairman Fred Wedler.)

The problems facing our committee have been so numerous that considerable organization of efforts has been necessary. We have divided our future endeavors into two general areas, each with specific projects included therein. These are summarized below; note that for practical purposes we have arbitrarily considered a person "oriented" after his first university semester, and so pre-orientation projects are directed to affect persons falling under this classification, likewise for "post-orientation."

I. Pre-Orientation

1. Definitive letter to parents of all students accepted for entrance, in an effort to dispel common misconceptions about university life, especially at U.N.C., and to give parents a more mature outlook on the years of experience ahead of their sons and daughters.

2. Small N.C. High School Programs: offering information to the principals, guidance counselors, and senior class presidents of those N. C. high schools where the Admissons staff cannot represent U.N.C. at their College Day programs and further, if necessary and feasible, presenting such programs ourselves to the senior classes. In coordination wiht this, there is evidence that the admission policy; i.e., the attitudes of the admissions staff is still subtly yet decidedly against encouraging Negroes to apply for undergradaute study here..

3. Further, through the efforts of the chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee and the Communications Committee, a special Student Government Committee has been formed to help bring Merit Scholarhip semi-finalists from N. C. high schools to U.N.C. for a weekend in the Spring of 1963 (and the years to follow), to encourage their application for entrace here.

4. It has been arranged that a planning committee for Freshman Orientation be set up, including the President, Vice-President, and Chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee in order to facilitate presenting an academics-oriented week for freshmen, in contrast to the sometimes too diverse and seemingly unorganized orientation programming o fearlier years.

5 Scholarship and aid information will be more widely distributed to entering students to make possible financial support of those scholastically-capable persons who might otherwise be unable to stay at U.N.C. or financial reasons.

6. A-sections brochures will be distributed to students with B-averages to encourage their taking advantage of closer faculty contacts and more intense studies offered under the accelerated program.

II. Post-Orientation:

1. Humanities Course investigation to determine the feasibility of and support for the establishment of a general humanities course to be offered to non-freshmen undergraduates. It woud be taught jointly by the departments of art, literature, and classics. Much of what we are attempting is based on a similar course now existing at Vanderbilt University.

2. General College Advisor System—continuation of our work to reenforce and broaden the efficiency of the General College Advisor System through departmental graduate-student advisors and by communicating the student body the advisory assistance available here.

3. Outstanding teahers awards programs must be regulated so that selection of outstanding faculty does not turn into a popularity poll, thus preventing the faculty's refusing to accept these selections as valid and truly representative,

4. Standard Course Evaluatoins are again to be conducted, now in the Department of Education. Dr. R. A. King of Psychology will be consulted regarding revision of the standard evaluation form.

5. Study rooms open all night on campus are being located and advertised in the dorms, The Daily Tar Heel, and at other strategic points on campus.

6. Other programs to be investigated are: dormitory regulations and accoustial conditions, the trisemester system, the speed-reading course offered by the School of Education, independent and honors study, and a U.N.C. extension aboard.

Considerable aid in planning and and directin gour efforts has been given us by the information offered through the N.S.A.

Planning has begun for submitting our committee's activities into national competition for the Richard Welling Student Government Achievement Awards in the area of Academic Affairs. This committee in 1958, the year of its founding, won this award.

Editors 'Get Around Issues'

To the Editors,

Your lead editorial of January 9 gives us another good example of your policy of getting around the issue whenever possible. Mrs. Helms of WRAL said that Mr. Taylor's speech (warning that the academic freedom espoused by the so-called liberals here might result in indoctrination of their viewpoints through the classroom) was not reported "OUTSIDE of Chapel Hill". In other words he really was concerned with bigger things than the Daily Tar Heel' The objectivity of the regular news media in this area.

UNC Press Head To Publish 2 Stories In 'New Yorker'

Tanks and old ladies playing marbles are two subjects treated in two short stories written by the Editor-in-chief of the University of North Carolina Press Howard R. Webber. The stories will be published in forthcoming issues of "The New Yorker."

After a breather of some eight years, Webber, who has published poems in the "Saturday Review" and several "little magazines," again took up pen and pencil to begin setting his ideas down on paper. Only this time he found that the short story form could best express what he wanted to say.

Unique about the two stories planned for publication is that both have titles in the plural. One is called "War Stories"; the other, "Games."

The February 16th issue of "The New Yorker" is projected to carry "War Stories," which is about tanks and is set during the Second World War. Webber was a tanker while performing military service, although he was never involved in action. He says that this story is "based upon personal experience in an indirect way."

"The writer probably has to be a good liar and I lie to myself and to everyone else in both of these stories," said Webber. Personal experiences which Webber drew together and re-formed for "War Stories" involve it characters.

Webber says that his mother, father, and wife are in the story, plus people who were with him in the Army, a little Negro boy he saw in Columbus, Ga., a British Naval officer he saw on board a British Naval ship during a cruise, and a neighborhood dog. "To me it is wrong to re-create exactly an identifiable person or situation, although there is always a temptation," said Webber.

"War Stories' is an attempt to indicate that no matter how much stress and horror is involved in war—as in all critical situations—in the end, the most memorable experiences are distinctly human and even compassionate, according to Webber.

In "Games," the old ladies playing marbles are patterned after several old ladies of Webber's acquaintance. The publication date for this story has not been set.

Webber joined the staff of the Press in 1959. Under his direction, the Press began a unique project of publishing a series of books of poetry by modern poets, a project which is giving young poets a break to see their works published and to claim recognition as artists. Webber also established The Poetry Circuit in North Carolina, which brings young poets to read at eight universities and colleges in the state.

Webber attended Dartmouth College from which he graduated summa cum laude with special honors in English and as a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He took graduate study in English and taught for a year at Lehigh University. While serving with the U. S. Army at Fort Benning Ga., he served as an editor of "Infantry," an official publication of the Army Infantry School.

State Will Conduct Training Program

The State of North Carolina will again in 1963 conduct a Summer Internship Program in State Government. The program will last from June 17 through August 23 and will provide an opportunity for twenty outstanding college students to work in fifteen agencies of State Government.

Interns will be paid $75 a week.

In addition to their work, the student interns will have intensive, coordinated discussion on governmental and related problems in North Carolina in evening seminars to be held twice a week, and in luncheons to be held once a week. The seminars and luncheons will be under the supervision of a political scientist and will have state officials, leaders and political scientists as guests and speakers.

All interns will live at one of the dormitories at North Carolina State College in order that their experiences might be shared fully on an informal basis. Rent will be $8.00 per week with linen, or $6.00 per week without linen.

In order to qualify, an applicant must have completed two years of undergraduate college work and must be either a resident of North Carolina or duly enrolled in a North Carolina educational institution. Graduate and professional students are also eligible.

Applications will be available January 3 at the college placement offices, the student government offices, and from the chairmen of the Political Science, History, Economics, Business Administration and Education Departments.

End The Draft In 1963?

Men Say 'No;' Coeds, 'Yes'

The ending of the draft in 1963: Would it help United States security? — Would it be a step towards world peace? — Would it increase economic growth.

Yes, says a group currently raising funds for lobbyists to use in campaigning against the draft's renewal in the summer of 1963. If they succeed, the Armed Forces would rely on volunteers.

The opinion of many Carolina students on this subject seems ironical.

The future G. I. is overwhelmingly in favor of continuing the draft; while the co-eds, whose homes and children the soldiers will be protecting, are just as enthusiastic for its end.

"I'd rather not serve; but we can't take the chance that there will be enough volunteers," most men agreed.

"It would be a step towards war rather than peace," many added.

"It's like a fighter dropping his guard, and hoping his opponent won't knock him out," said a senior international relations major.

"The U. S. security will be weakened, and Russia will take advantage," said a student who plans to enlist in June.

"There will have to be greater reliance on nuclear weapons, and something like Berlin could then easily break out into a nuclear war," commented a third-year law student.

There were some male opinions against the draft.

"I don't want my name on one of those American Legion billboards with poppies growing all around," a freshman said.

"Yes, end the draft — it's a farce," said a student who fulfilled his military obligation. "All I did at Fort Gordon was lay in the sun, and learn how to appear busy while accomplishing nothing."

"Despite many contrary opinions I think this will help the economy," speculated one graduate student. "There would be a temporary recession, but since a tax reduction would probably follow, the economy would be boosted."

It's possible for my husband or brother to be killed: so I'm against it," practically every girl agreed.

"It will show Khrushchev we want peace," a pretty blond South Carolinian emphasized.

"I wish the people that want to continue the draft could talk to a French Lady I once knew," said a comely New York brunette. "Her father died in the Franco-Prussian War; her husband in W. W. I; and her twin sons in W. W. II.

Perhaps the best opinion was expressed by the red head hurrying from the beauty parlor.

"I'm in favor of this group's desire to end the draft." she said. "But;" she yelled from the car window, "can we take the chance?"

Faculty News

Dr. William G. Wysor, assistant professor of medicine in the UNC School of Medicine, left Chapel Hill this week to begin a six-month teaching term at the Escola Paolista de Medicine in Sao Paolo, Brazil, under a program set up by the Rockefeller Foundation with the UNC Department of Medicine.

The program allows the Department of Medicine to extend its educational services through cooperation with foreign medical centers, particularly those of South American countries.

Dr. Charles H. Burnett, department chairman, made a seven-week lecture and study tour of medical centers in Puerto Rico and five South American countries during 1959 under the program. In 1961, Dr. James W. Woods Jr., associate professor of medicine, served as viisting professor at the University of Sao Paolo, and Dr. William LeRoy Fleming, assistant dean for education and research in the medical school and professor of preventive medicine, has just returned from a similar trip.

Dr. Wysor, who joined the UNC medical faculty in 1956, received his B.A. and M.D. degrees from the University of Virginia. He was an assistant in medicine and an instructor at the Medical College of Virginia Hospital until 1954 and was in private practice until coming to UNC.

Dr. Robert L. Hilliard, assistant professor of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures at the University, will be on leave for the spring semester to serve as special consultant on educational television in higher education for New York State in that state's plan for the development of a 15-million dollar, 31-station educational television network.

The expansion of television in New York State is designed as part of its over-all planning to meet the greatly increased enrollment in higher education a decade from now, to improve the quality of current instruction, and to make available the highest quality teaching to all students in all institutions. Dr. Hilliard will work directly with the presidents, deans and faculty members of colleges and universities in New York State in their curriculum utilization of broadcast television, in the development of closed-circuit television on the campuses, and in the establishment of television production centers at selected institutions. His headquarters will be the New York State Department of Education in Albany.

Dr. Hilliard came to the University in 1960 after ten years of teaching in New York. He is nationally known in the field for his numerous articles on the mass media and for his recently published book, "Writing for Television and Radio."

EXCELLENT CAREER DEVELOPMENT OPPORTUNITIES for Engineers and Physical Scientists

The Naval Ordnance Laboratory (NOL) located in a desirable suburb of Washington, D. C.—now one of the nation's leading research areas—offers seniors in Engineering and the Physical Sciences unique career development opportunities in: Missile Guidance and Weapons Systems . . . Space and Re-Entry Components, Underseas Weapons, Fire Control, Sonar, Fuzes, and Influence Detectors . . . Meteorological Rockets, Aerodynamics, Hydrodynamics, Explosives, Propellants, Acoustics and Pressure Fields . . . Infrared, Nuclear Physics, Solid State and Mathematics.

You will benefit from a year-long, on-the-job rotational training program. You are encouraged—and helped financially—to work out an advanced degree program with local universities. All positions enjoy the added benefits of Career Civil Service.

Tar Heels Coast Past Maryland

Mann, Merrill Have A-A Touch

North Carolina's M & M boys are producing as expected for Coach Pat Earey's Blue Dolphin swimming team.

The M & M twins—junior Thompson Mann and sophomore Harrison Merrill—have both displayed their All-American credentials in leading UNC to an early season 6-2 dual meet record.

Mann, a bona fide All-American from Hickory, Va., holds three Atlantic Coast Conference swimming records: for the 100 and 200-yard backstroke and the 200-yard individual medley. Thompson recorded the latter mark in a recent meet against Princeton.

Merrill, who in one meet last February drowned three national freshman freestyle records, launched his varsity career a month ago by cracking ACC, UNC and Carolina pool marks in the 200 freestyle. Then in a recent meet against Navy, he clipped nearly 13 seconds off the old ACC and UNC 500 freestyle standard.

"Mann and Merrill are one of the finest one-two punches we've ever had at Carolina," says Coach Earey.

"Both boys are unusually versatile, in that Mann specializes in the backstroke but is an excellent freestyler and butterfly man. And Merrill, well he can do anything that's been invented for water navigation."

But as Carolina prepares for its meet with East Carolina here Thursday night, Earey is sounding praise for other individuals as well.

"Frank Lea, a senior, has been a wonderful find for us this year in the long freestyle events. His victory over an excellent Navy swimmer was beyond our highest expectations.

"Sophomores Thad Adams, Dick Woodrow, Tate Kemper and Scott Smiley have given us strength in spots hardest hit by graduation. Adams set a new Wake Forest pool record in the 200 freestyle and has the size and a comfortable stroke to make him a potentially excellent swimmer."

Mural Spots Are Assured

By STUART BALL

With the Point system basketball season already well under way, these teams seem assured of making the post-season single elimination tournament:

Fraternity Blue — Sigma Chi, SAE, Chi Psi, PiKA, Sigma Nu, and Beta. Fraternity White—Delta Sig, DU Rinkeydinks, DKE, Phi Delt Shields, SAE, Sigma Nu Reds, Phi Gam Fijis, Phi Kappa Sigma, Kappa Sigma, PiKA Plebes, and Chi Psi Psychos.

Dormitory Blue—Stacy, Everett, Alexander, Ruffin, and Joyner.

Dormitory White — Joyner Claws, Avery Avengers, Navy DD's, Mangum Mavericks, and Ehringhaus B. Fourierities.

A full schedule of games is on tap for all four divisions this week, but play will not be resumed until February 5 due to excessive conflicts.

Billy Get 25 Again

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — North Carolina introduced Billy Cunningham to Maryland here last night. The Terps didn't like him. They lost, 78-56.

Although troubled by fouls toward the end of the opening half, sensational Billy the Kid scored 25 points and completely dominated both backboards. His performance put the game far out of reach of the undermanned Terps.

UNC is now 3-1 in ACC play and 7-2 overall.

White Sox Send Aparicio, Smith To Baltimore

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Chicago White Sox Monday traded two unhappy ball players, shortstop Luis Aparicio and outfielder Al Smith, to the Baltimore Orioles for four players expected to bolster a solid bid for the 1963 American League pennant.

The Sox obtained relief pitcher Hoyt Wilhelm, rookie third baseman Pete Ward, shortstop Ron Hansen and outfielder Dave Nicholson, and it looked like a good deal for the home team.

Hansen, though he batted only .173 in 71 games after military service in the majors, 1960, comparpared to Aparicio's lifetime average of .266, despite a .241 mark last year. But Hansen hits the long ball and Aparicio, the league leader in stolen bases since 1956, doesn't.

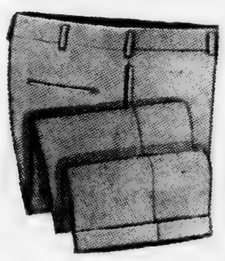
"Ragtime" Latham And Friends

Tonight's the night.

Hannis "Ragtime" Latham and his six Tar Heel Bunnies will be on display beginning at 9:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

The cheerleaders have planned this big dance show and pep rally to show UNC's fine basketball team how much the student body appreciates its efforts this season. The girls have been working on the dance number since November.

Besides the dance numbers, taken from "Let Me Entertain You," the show will also feature Lee Ferrell and the Trojans, Kemp Battle Nye and J. F. Kennedy Jr.



Head cheerleader Latham, usually at a loss for words, could not conceal his excitement. "It's gonna' be something else!" he stated.

Now a clean-filling, smooth-writing, money-saving Parker cartridge pen...only $3.95
New PARKER ARROW

This pen can save you important money on cartridges. Ours are BIGGER and last longer (each is good for 8 or 9 thousand words). But, even if you didn't save a dime, this pen would be worth the extra price. It's a Parker.
And only Parker gives you a solid 14K gold point tipped with plathenium—one of the hardest, smoothest alloys ever developed. It should last you for years no matter how much you use it.
The pen won't leak the way the cheap ones do. It has a built-in safety reservoir, and it must meet most of the tough specifications we set for our $10 pens.
If you have trouble saying it, say it with a Parker. If you're a little shy and have difficulty saying "I love you" or even "I like you very much"—say it with a Parker.
The new Parker Arrow makes a beautifully expressive gift and looks as if you paid a small fortune for it.
The new Parker Arrow comes in black, dark blue, light blue, light gray, and bright red, with a choice of four instantly replaceable solid 14K gold points. Gift-boxed with five free cartridges.

Tshombe Announces Ending Of Secession

Congolese Say They'll Agree To Amnesty

ELISABETHVILLE (UPI)—President Moise Tshombe announced the end of Katanga's secession from the Congo Tuesday. He said he was surrendering his last stronghold of Kolwezi to United Nations forces.

Tshombe, in a note to the United Nations, asked for truce talks and demanded amnesty for himself and his followers. The United Nations announced that a previous Congolese government guarantee of amnesty for Tshombe still held good.

Central Congolese Premier Cyrille Adoula and President Joseph Kasavubu promptly sent messages to U. N. Secretary General Thant from Leopoldville pledging they would respect the amnesty given Tshombe.

Barring a sudden new change of mind by Tshombe, the swift series of developments would mean an end to the war that U. N. troops have been waging with Tshombe's forces in an effort to bring the break-away province of Katanga into the Congo's central government.

May Change Mind

But observers here noted that Tshombe had made promises in the past and broken them. Sources said that if Tshombe keeps his word this time, it would remain only for Tshombe to reach political agreement with the Central Leopoldville government — a process that could take months or longer.

In Leopoldville Tuesday, an enraged mob of more than 800 screaming Congolese burst into the British embassy, ransacked offices, smashed windows and injured an embassy official. The rioters were protesting Britain's opposition to the U. N.'s use of military force to end Katanga's secession.

First word that Tshombe had agreed to end Katangese secession and surrender Kolwezi—the mining town he and his supporters had threatened repeatedly to blow up under a "scorched earth" policy—came from Britain's consul in Elisabethville.

The United Nations in New York confirmed that Tshombe, in a note to the Belgian consul at Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia, had announced his readiness to end Katanga's secession, give the United Nations full freedom of movement throughout the province, and cooperate with Thant's plan for reunification.

Despite Tshombe's action there was no guarantee that the 2,000 Katangese gendarmes and 200 mercenary soldiers guarding the Kolwezi stronghold would give it up without a fight.

NEW REHEARSAL HALL — This acoustically-sound rehearsal hall, in the newly completed Hill Hall Annex, will be open and ready for use Feb. 4, for the spring semester. Annex To Increase Hill Hall Capacity

A new addition to the UNC School of Music allows for an increase in enrollment plus greater facilities and equipment.

Faculty and students have already moved into the added 32,000 square feet of space even though new equipment and furniture has not arrived. By Feb. 4, the first day of classes in UNC's spring semester, the gleaming green and white interior of the new addition will be complete for use. Kenan Professor Glen Haydon is chairman of the Music Department.

The biggest feature of the addition is its large acoustically-sound rehearsal hall for band and orchestra, located on the first floor. This partly-panelled hall will also be used for music clinics such as the band and piano clinics. Facing down on the hall is a control room suitable for recording performances.

Other rooms located on the first floor of the addition include an expansion of the music library with a new listening room, which will be equipped with earphones and tapes, a reading room, and a checkout counter. The former library area will be used as a stack area and as graduate carrels.

There are new instrument storage rooms, a band library, a repair room to be used for training purposes for those going into band directing and public school music, and offices for the band director and the assistant band director on the first floor. Professor Herbert Fred is director of the band.

The second floor houses nine faculty studies and six graduate studies, an orchestra library, a string storage room, and the office of the string teacher.

In the basement is an organ practice room housing a new Moeller practice organ which has not yet been played. There are also six teaching studios, 26 practice rooms, three ensemble rehearsal rooms, a uniform storage room and dressing room, and a bulk instrument storage room for the football band equipment.

On order for shipment are several new practice pianos and several new grand pianos and lockers for students' equipment. New electronic equipment already received is a several-hundred-dollar stroboscope, used for the visual measurement of tuning.

Chem Group Initiates 20 Pledges

Rho Chapter of Alpha Chi Sigma, National Honorary Chemistry Fraternity, recently held its fall initiation, initiating 20 pledges to boost its total membership to 47.

The fraternity, founded at the University of Wisconsin in 1902, is composed of nearly 60 collegiate and professional chapters throughout the nation. Rho was founded at UNC in 1912, and is composed of undergraduate chemistry majors and graduate students in the field of chemistry. A professional branch is now being formed in the Chapel Hill area.

Those initiated were: Everett Baucom, Byron Bowman, Walter Brown, Phil Burks, Gerald Davis, Bob Day, Henry Drott Richard Fleming, George Fozzard, Don Kendall, Dohn Martin, Joe Mason, Jack Reece, Roy Swarington, Alan Taylor, Charles Twine, Richard Veazey, Ralph Wisnant, Ralph White and Ron Williams.

Newly elected officers for the coming year were installed at the chapter's January 14 meeting. They are: Bill Stephenson, president; Gilbert Merritt, vice president; Gene Hendrix, secretary; Jack Reece, treasurer; David Yount, reporter; Bob Cunningham, master of ceremonies; and Bill Rice, alumni secretary.

First Week Of Semester To Be Full

By VANCE BARROW

A full slate of entertainment has been scheduled for the first weekend of the spring semester by the Graham Memorial Activities Board. Headlining the program will be hypnotist John Kolisch on Friday evening, February 8, and the U. S. Army Men's Chorus on Saturday evening, February 9.

Kolisch will present "The Truth about Hypnotism" at 8:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall, in which Kolisch will explain and demonstrate the uses of hypnotism. Kolisch was born in Vienna and became interested in hypnotism while he was a student of psychology at the University of Vienna. He will attempt to show how post-hypnotic suggestion may be used in weight control, stage-fright, insomnia, or the elimination of excessive smoking, drinking, or other habits.

Kolisch is noted not only for his ability as an entertainer, but also as a competent hypnotherapist. He will draw on audience participation to demonstrate such things as self-hypnosis, mass-hypnosis and post-hypnotic suggestion. Kolisch emphasizes that all volunteers from the audience will be treated with the "utmost respect and consideration they would expect in any clinical demonstration." A question-and-answer period will follow the program. The performance will be free to all UNC students and faculty members.

On Saturday evening, February 9, at 8:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall, the U. S. Army Men's Chorus will perform. According to Sam Blumberg, GMAB publicity director, the Army Men's Chorus is "considered to be as good as any chorus around." The Chorus is composed of 52 men drawn from the entire army and has a waiting list of over 1000 others.

"La Dolce Vita" will be shown Sunday afternoon and evening, February 10, under the auspices of both GMAB and the Sunday Cinema series. Two Free Flicks are also scheduled for the weekend. "Pepe", a comedy starring the Mexican actor Cantinflas and supporting stars such as Maurice Chevalier, Ernie Kovacs, Kim Novak, Peter Lawford and Jack Lemmon, will be seen on Saturday, February 9. "Pepe" is the story of a baggy-pants bullfighter and his affection for Don Juan, his horse.

"The Egyptian", a movie with a "cast of thousands", is scheduled for Friday, February 8.

Quick Action On Tax Bill Is Promised

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Democratic congressional leaders Tuesday assured President Kennedy speedy consideration of his tax cut program. The odds favored approval this session of some form of tax slash.

Kennedy told House and Senate chiefs during a White House meeting that he would spell out details of his proposals in a special tax message Jan. 24.

Speaker John McCormack said, that after receiving the message, the House Ways and Means Committee would proceed quickly with hearings on the plans that would net a $10 billion reduction in federal tax rates over a three-year period.

The speaker told newsmen after the White House legislative breakfast that tax reduction was a "matter of urgency" in the administration's legislative time-table.

Congressional insiders were willing to give heavy odds that Kennedy would be able to push through tax cuts for both individuals and corporations. But they felt the President's program would be altered and the job would not be finished before October.

Kennedy is expected to go further into the tax situation Thursday when he sends Congress his budget for fiscal 1964. He is expected to explain in the budget message how much the cut ultimately would cost the nation and how he plans to pay the bill.

In his State of the Union message, Kennedy said that the new budget would increase spending for defense and space but the total output would be cut for all other purposes.

It has been reported that he is working hard to hold the fiscal 1964 budget under $100 billion.

Books Missing From Library Worth $3,000

There has been a startling increase in the number of missing Modern Civilization reference books from the undergraduate library, the Student Government Attorney General's office said yesterday.

Since June, 1962, 320 books valued at some $3,000 have been reported missing.

It is a violation of the Honor Code to have possession of any books taken from the library that are not properly checked out and anyone who has access to one of the books is urged to return it as soon as possible, the Attorney General's office said.

Student government action, through the Attorney General's staff and the Men's Council, will be taken to recover those books not turned in.

The Attorney General's office will be open during exams.

Any violations of the Honor Code can be reported between 10 p.m. and 12 p.m. or between 2 p.m. and 5 p.m.

East German Leader Sides Against China

BERLIN (UPI) — East German Communist party boss Walter Ulbricht, long a tough and cynical Stalinist, meekly fell in line with Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev Tuesday in the rift between Moscow and Peking.

The goateed Ulbricht indirectly accused China of aiming at war and dropped a hint that the Soviet Union and its Communist bloc supporters might be considering breaking off relations with both China and Albania.

Khrushchev beamed broadly and the delegates from the East European countries applauded wildly during the speech. The Chinese Communist delegate froze into silence.

Without actually calling China by name, Ulbricht said the quarrel is not merely an internal one among Communists but one that affects world peace.

The arguments between the Soviet Union and the dissidents are about questions of peace or war," he said in a marathon five and a half hour speech to the opening session of the sixth party congress of the East German Communist party.

Ulbricht's hint of a possible future break came when he said the East German Communists are coming more and more to the conclusion that there is no point in dealing with the Albanians at all. It was the usual Communist custom of using Albania as a euphenism for China.

"The Albanians are enemies of Leninism and Marxism," he said.

Ulbricht was interrupted by applause eight times during his onslaught against China and Albania. Each time Chinese delegate Wu Hsiu-chuan was a silent monument of Oriental inscrutability.

There had been rumors in the part that Ulbricht might fall into disfavor with Khruschev because he clung too long to the Stalinist views denounced by Khrushchev but Tuesday he was pro-Khrushchev all the way.

Referring to Albania by name and to China by implication, Ulbricht attacked "dogmatists" who want war. Then he lambasted Communist China directly for violating the doctrine of peaceful coexistence by its border with India. He said the Chinese launched the war without consulting or even informing any of the other Communist bloc nations.

More than 2,500 delegates and 3,000 guests were massed in the Huge Werner Seelenbinder Hall in East Berlin for the speech.

Some Even Go Naked For Khrushy's Sake

BERLIN (UPI) — The Communists Tuesday stripped some Westerners to their underwear and took other extraordinary precautions to protect Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev from possible attack.

Security agents scrutinized women's lipsticks, removed auto hubcaps and took other measures in their efforts to provide airtight protection for the man from Moscow. Observers said the security ring aroung East Berlin was at least twice as tight as during any of Khrushchev's five previous visits here.

Controls at the three checkpoints on the East-West Berlin border were redoubled. East German police and border guards, in addition to the usual close check of all foreigners and West Germans entering the Communist zone, forced some westerners to remove hub caps from their cars, and, in some cases, take off their clothes.

Khrushchev has been surrounded by Soviet and East German plainsclothes and state security agents since his arrival Monday night.

All Westerners and Germans are being checked four times by Communist police on entry to East Berlin and four times when leaving.

Temperatures In Midwest Drop To Near-Record Lows

CHICAGO (UPI) — The middle west suffered Tuesday in a frigid blast that tumbled temperatures to 50 below zero in Wisconsin and came close to giving Milwaukee and Minneapolis-St. Paul their coldest weather in history.

The mighty new surge of arctic air off the Canadian prairies sent the mercury plunging to 50 below at Black River Falls, Wis., and to 46 below at Lone Rock and West Salem, Wis.

At Chicago, where temperatures hit 19 below at O'Hare International Airport, water crib tenders in Lake Michigan began synamiting ice to keep the city's water supply flowing.

The Mississippi River froze bank to bank for six miles below the Alton, Ill., dam for the first time since the dam was built a quarter of a century ago.

Heavy snow swirled off the eastern shores of the Great Lakes. A storm that dumped 19 inches of snow on the Buffalo, N. Y., area moved inland and forecasters predicted seven to 15 inches of new snow.

Elsewhere in the nation, there was some moderation of the widespread cold wave that had claimed close to 100 lives. Thick clouds prevented fresh disaster to crops in Texas' semi-tropical Rio Grande Valley and forecasters in San Francisco saw hope for an easing of cold that caused frost damage to crops in much of California.

But the temperature held below zero daylong in much of the middle west and midwesterners yearned for "sunny" Alaska where Juneau registered a comparatively balmy 33 above.

The mercury sank to 24 below zero in Milwaukee, breaking a Jan. 15 record which had stood for 75 years and falling only one degree short of the city's all-time low of 25 below, registered in 1875.

Residents of Minnesota's twin cities congealed in a minus 32, only two degrees above the all-time low of 34 set in 1936. The 32-below was a new record for Jan. 15.

The Milwaukee weather bureau comforted shivering residents of Wisconsin with the statistic tidbit that "the world record low is minus 125" established on Aug. 25, 1958, in Antarctica.

Channel 4 To Carry Picture Of Contest

WUNC-TV, Channel 4, will offer broadvision coverage of the University of North Carolina-North Carolina State basketball game today at 8 p.m.

Broadvision is a technique whereby WUNC-TV provides television coverage of the game but not a play-by-play account of it. Viewers must tune in a radio station to hear a description of the game.

The UNC-NC State game is the first of this year to be carried over WUNC-TV.

French Exchange Program Now Open

The nternational Student's Board of Student Government has announced the second yearly exchange program between the University of North Carolina and the University of Poitiers, at Tours. Scholarships have been set up for two students, one UNC student and one French student from the city of Tours.

The student from Tours will be selected by a committee in the city and will come for the fall term each year, remaining the entire year. This student will participate fully in the life of the University, socially & culturally, and academically. The student government, Campus Chest, and the Faculty Scholarship Committee are supplying the necessary funds.

The UNC student will be selected in early March by a committee chosen from the Student Government, the French Department Faculty, and the Administration. Competition will be through written application and an interview.

The scholarship which the College Americain at the University of Poitiers will supply for the UNC student covers all university expenses, room and board with a French family, and trips to Paris, Flanders, and Monaco. Spending money will be provided by the student. His travel to and from France is provided for in the scholarship funds.

The programs of study at Nice which the UNC student may follow are International Affairs, French Language, Literature, and Culture, and Fine Arts. Since care has been taken to set up the courses properly, full credit can be obtained for work done in France. This means that the UNC student will not lose a year academically by participating in the exchange program.

Any Carolina undergraduate who has had sufficient minimum preparation to follow one of the study areas listed above, who has had sufficient training in the French language, and who would be willing to return to UNC for a year is eligible. The student should be well informed about campus activities and student government, national and international politics, and should show the interest and flexibility necessary for a student embarking on such an experience.

Application forms are available at the YMCA office and at Graham Memorial. Deadline for returning the applications is February 15 .

Names Of Officers Not Known By Many

Less than half the Student Body knows three of its top four officers, according to a recent Communications Committee poll.

In a random survey of 171 students, only President Inman Allen was identified by a majority. One hundred forty-five students, or 84.8%, were able to answer correctly the question, "Who is the President of the Student Body?"

Vice-President Mike Lawler polled 49.7%, Secretary Judy Clark was identified by 30.9%, and Treasurer Bill Criswell was known by 26.7%.

Bob Spearman, chairman of the Communications Committee, commented that this poll was one in a series to be conducted through the remainder of the year.

APO BOOK EXCHANGE

Alpha Phi Omega will operate a book exchange in Y-Court Feb. 4-Feb. 11 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Students can set there own prices on used texts — APO will keep 10% of the sale price, and the rest is yours.

The APO Book Exchange will be closed Feb. 9th at 1 p.m. and Feb. 10th all day.

FLU SHOTS

Flue shots are being given in the infirmary from 9-11:30 a.m. and 2-5 p.m. Mon.-Fri. A flue epidemic is expected in the country this winter.

COSMOPOLITAN CLUB

The Cosmopolitan Club will give a semi-formal Valentine Masquerade Ball on Feb. 9 from 8-12 p.m. at the Chapel Hill Country Club.

Tickets are $2.50 per couple and may be obtained this Wed. and Thursday at Lenoir Hall from 12-2 p.m. and from 5-7 p.m., or by calling Maria Elena Bravo at 968-9132. Tickets are limited.

UNC-DUKE TICKETS

Student, faculty and employee tickets for the UNC-Duke basketball game Saturday, Feb. 2, will be available on a first come-first serve basis. They may be picked up at Woollen Gymnasium starting Monday, Jan. 21.

Fall semester pass cards must be presented, both to obtain the tickets and to get into the game.

On the basis of information furnished by the Admissions Office, a few tickets will be held out for new students registering on Jan. 29.

AFROTC

Colonel Marvin W. Heath, Director of Material, 464th Troop Carrier Wing, Pope AFB, will speak to the entire AFROTC Cadet Corps on Thurs. at 12 noon in Carroll Hall.

His subject will be "The Troop Carrier Mission in Tactical Air Command."

LIBRARY SCHEDULE

The following is the L. R. Wilson Library schedule for the post-examination period, January 29 to February 4: Tuesday, Jan. 29, 7:45 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Wednesday, Jan. 30, thru Friday, Feb. 1, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Saturday, Feb. 2, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.; Sunday, Feb. 3, closed; Monday, Feb. 4, resume regular schedule.

The regular schedule will be observed during the examination period.

EXCHANGE SCHOLARSHIPS

Applications forms for two exchange scholarships to be awarded for study in 1963-64 at the University in Goettingen, Germany, are now available. They may be obtained at GM or at the YMCA. The deadline for returning these forms is Feb. 15.

DI-PHI HALL

The halls and offices of the Di-Phi will be available to active representatives and conditional representatives in good standing for examination studying. Keys may be obtained from Arthur Hays (308 Ruffin) or Bob Bullard (11 Vance).

CANDY SALE

The Sophomore Class will sponsor a candy sale this week and during exam week. The candy — in tins priced $1.00 and $1.50 — will be sold in Y Court and around campus. All hungry students are urged to pick up something to nibble on during study hours.

PROFESSIONAL IFC

The Professional InterFraternity Council will meet at 7 p.m. Thursday in Roland Parker III in G.M.

STUDENT LEGISLATURE

The Student Legislature will not meet this Thursday. The time and date of the first meeting of the new semester will be announced in the Daily Tar Heel after exams.

Sensitive, Mundane Nonsense

Believing that the one common malady of this generation of students is the tendency to too often take ourselves too seriously, and believing that student editors probably suffer from this malady quite a bit more than the average student, and presupposing that the term-paper tremendums have taken hold of the entire student body, we would like to dedicate this column to all the swell kids who appreciate nonsense.

Granted, this bit of liberty will offend some of you. You may desire a heady dissertion on the significance of the President's State of the Union Address, or you may want to be given some sage advice on the state of the campus or the state of the fight for all that's right, but today you just won't get it . . . it's usually nonsense anyway.

What we would like to speak out for is the value and truth of sensitive, hyperbolic, radically reconstructed mundane existence. With a dirth of thoughtful, well-chosen, and perceptive phrases we would like to search out the meaning of life's significant symbolic satisfactions. No, not sex, but rather, let us begin to comprehend the immense ramifications of daily existential confrontations.

This one we lifted from the Greensboro Daily News, who borrowed it from W. E. H. of the Sanford Herald, who heard it from Henderson Belk, who probably read it in the Daily News, years ago. It's the story of a young journalism graduate who went to a small town, bought himself a paper and installed this line over his front page masthead: "We Aim to Tell the Truth, the Whole Truth and Nothing but the Truth."

A year later, with what he must have thought was a lifetime of experience and having mellowed in the interim, he changed the line to: "We Aim to Tell the Truth but Not So Blame Much as Heretofore."

There is a delightful little book, recently put out by JW Books, Incorporated, drawn up by a Jack Wohl and Stan Rice, which goes by the title of "Dolls My Mother Never Gave Me." It contains a few references to a number of local heroes, such as: The Freshman Doll —you wind it up and it calls home for money. The Liberal Arts Doll—you wind it up and it goes to a demonstration—any kind. The Athlete Doll—you wind it up and it sticks out its chest. Then there is the House Mother Doll—you wind it up and it closes its eyes.

For those clever souls who are more politically minded, they have the Kennedy Doll—you wind it up and it moves to the right or to the left depending on where you stand; and the Nixon Doll—you wind it up and it has a crisis.

For those interested in scatology, they have a Christene Jorgenson Doll—you wind it up and it changes its mind (among other things).

It gets to be kind of fun. You can make them up. Say like the Bill Buckley Doll—you wind it up and it reads Playboy. Or the Student Government Doll—you wind it up and it takes itself seriously. Or the Fraternity Doll—you wind it up and it has a party. Or the American Legion Doll—you wind it up and it points a finger. Or the Student Editor Doll—you wind it up and you wish you hadn't bothered.

Has anyone noticed the segregation of students and professors in Lenoir Hall on week-day mornings. It looks a good deal like the great self conscious splits that used to occur at junior high school proms; everybody knew that the other type was over there, but nobody wanted to be the fool who cared. (CW)

Just Be Pretty

Has anyone been just a little bit bothered by the apparent timidity of female cheerleaders? It would seem a bit confusing to see their smiling faces on posters in which they wear one shirt, and then to hear that they object to wearing an outfit that "looks like a cross between bermuda shorts and a grass skirt," and which comes well below what might be called the "shirt-line."

We would submit that with the present group, they could get students to cheer if they wore burlap.

It seems part of our "too too serious" trend, this degree of self consciousness. Just be pretty, girls. And that you already are, so what's the problem? (CW)

Bertrand

During the Peace Union-sponsored film, "Power Among Men" Monday night, one student asked another if a 45-year-old peace marcher in the film was Bertrand Russell. The other student said he didn't know what Bertrand Russell looked like.

Which reminds us of an incident in the Intimate Bookshop last summer . . . One man, while glancing through books on philosophy, asked a friend, "Who's this Bertrand Russell fellow?"

The friend answered quickly, seriously, and with assurance, "Oh, he's one of those British John Birchers." (JC)

Sitting in Graham Memorial yesterday, windows up, light breeze coming in, sun shining and at peace with the world, we wondered f anything more could add to a person's health and well-being. Going through "exchange" papers from other colleges we learned of Chapel Hill's deficiency in the area of sweetness and light: Montclair State College has a required undergraduate course on "Healthful Living." That sounds even better than Hygiene 11 . . .

Law Review: Censorship Increased

"Campus censorship in 1962 easily rivaled that of any previous year. From coast to coast, and particularly in the Midwest, student bodies were quarantined from a variety of political heresies." This statement was made by Professor William W. Van Alstyne of Ohio State University Law School in the January issue of the "University of Pennsylvania Law Review." Professor Van Alstyne's Article considers the extent to which the Constitution restricts the right of state universiy officials to bar controversial speakers from campus.

The author points out that "a considerable number of guest lecturers, formally invited to state university campuses by recognized student organizations, have been turned away by members of the administration. It is significant that those to whom the students were forbidden to listen were very often unpopular figures." Certain organizations, such as the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Student Association, and the American Association of University Professors, have strenuously objected to this state of affairs. The latter two organizations have based their arguments essentially on policy grounds, and not on constitutional rights. The American Bar Association's Committee on the Bill of Rights, however, "is of the opinion that 'no question of the Bill of Rights is involved' where university officials decide that spokesmen for the Communist party shall be denied access to university facilities ordinarily available for guest speakers." But Professor Van Alstyne takes issue with this position. He argues that much of what the NSA and AAUP urge on policy grounds is in fact fully supported by constitutional mandates. It is the thesis of his Article that "the ABA Committee's position with regard to Communist speakers is wrong. Settled principles of constitutional law require a liberality in state university rules dealing with guest speakers far beyond what that Committee suggests or what currently prevails on many campuses."

After describing the prevailing Supreme Court test dealing with the suppression of speech, the author points out that "Universities have experienced difficulty with both parts of the test. They have improperly identified the kinds of evils that are constitutionally within their power to prevent, and have failed to develop conclusive standards by which to isolate speakers whose presence on campus will probably incite violence."

Professor Van Alstyne's major objection is that state universities decide to bar speakers on the basis of their affiliations rather than the content of the speech they would deliver on a given occasion. He argues that a ban on speech must be based on the content of the proposed address rather than the speaker's background.

According to the author, a state university may only bar a guest speaker if the assembly which gathers to hear him "will intolerably burden the school's facilities." Burden, in turn, is to be judged on the basis of the time, place, and manner of the proposed speech.

In conclusion, Professor Van Alstyne states: "Universities would render a far greater service by abandoning substantive limitations on guest speakers altogether. Any other policy necessarily expresses a skepticism of student intelligence and fear of the appeal of today's social critics. Both inference are contrary to the categorical imperatives of a free society."

Gov. On Dixie Classics . . .

(Following is the text of a letter sent by Gov. Sanford's press secretary to University President William Friday, concerning the governor's statements on the Dixie Classics. Also printed here is the text of Sanford's statements.—Eds.)

Inasmuch as there was so much news copy blown out of a very small segment of the Governor's news conference yesterday, I thought you might like to see what the Governor actually said and the context in which it was said.

Attached is a verbatim transcript of the questions asked by reporters and the answers by the Governor.

Reporters have asked Governor Sanford these and similar questions on the Dixie Classic since the summer of 1961. His answer invariably has been that the questions should be routed to the officials responsible —the University administrators and the trustees of the Consolidated University.

I trust this transcript will clear up any mistaken inferences which may have come from published reports on what the Governor said.

—Graham Jones
Press Secretary

From Sanford News Conference Wednesday, January 9, 1963

Question: Governor, the question is asked every day as to the opinion on whether the Dixie Classic will be reinstated this year. What is your thinking on this?

Governor: Well, you very fine sportscasters might go talk to the Duke officials and the Wake Forest officials and Carolina officials and see what their attitude is on it. One thing that people think a decision can be made somewhere around this Square in Raleigh is whether or not you are going to have a particular tournament. Well, if those decisions could be made in that way, they would be a lot simpler, but I suggest that you get that answer where it must come from—the people in charge of the athletic programs of Duke, Wake Forest and Chapel Hill. I think you know the decision at State—or their position. I can't make a decision on that.

Question: The question was what do you think about it? Will it be reinstated?

Governor: When you find out the attitude of those of the colleges and report that, I will be able to have a better "think" about it.

Question: Of course, they are responsive to the wishes of their fans. Don't you think that if probably a certain fan communicated his wishes they might?

Governor: I think it is a matter of fact that you will find those colleges are very much opposed to the Dixie Classic. I will say this—that the University officials are studying very carefully some means of a holiday athletic event, but this is a little bit out of my scope and out of my sphere and I think it would be improper for me to talk here in Raleigh about college athletics. I simply don't have any authority to make decisions in that realm and I think it would be inappropriate for a fan to speak from an official position. Yes, I think they are responsive to their fans, but I don't think they ought to be pressured politically into making decisions on either academic matters or athletic matters. Those are matters for the college administrators and I certainly would respect them.

Name Changing: No More Mud—

Most Carolina students are happy to see the interest that State College students are expressing in the proposal to change the name of their institution to "The University of North Carolina at Raleigh."

Several hundred State Students crowded into a meeting hall last month and in a noisy, if not rowdy, meeting overwhelmingly voted to ask the State Legislature not to change the name of the school.

Usually one could not help but be pleased to see students interested in the future of higher education in the state so anxious to attend a meeting to discuss the future of their school.

But Carolina students are dismayed by the fallacious and emotional type of arguments that the State College student leaders are using to oppose the change of names.

Most of their opposition centers, not around what the change could mean for the future of the college, but what sterotyped they have developed about Carolina, which is known offically as the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

For example one student mockingly said the only benefits State would gain by the change would be a reputation as a "good party school' for "profound drinking."

He went on to question Carolina's academic life. "Can UNC,' he asked "boast of having the No. 1 school of anything in the world?" The course offered at Carolina, he said, are "thickly coated with decay and rust," not moving forward with for anyone to level at a tax-supported the sciences like those at State.

These are very serious charges school. Indeed, if allowed to go unanswered they can hurt the very cause of higher education at a very critical juncture in the life of these institutions.

Just what are the facts? Was the State College student correct?

No.

Here are the facts:

Charge: Carolina is a party school for profound drinking.

Fact: A majority of students at Carolina do drink, but a surprisingly high minority do not. Partying? Yes, there is some at Carolina, but it is carried on by a minority of students, namely, those in fraternities, which are only about a third of the student body. State College, one should note, is not one to be talking on this score. Its campus is lined by a series of bars and taverns and more than just one student has been known to "sip suds" in the Hillsboro Street businesses. It is also true that the fraternity system at State does not have the strength of Carolina's, but with the aid of students from Peace, St. Marys and Meredith, the houses there are acquiring a reputation in their own right.

Charge: Carolina has no departments with a reputation for excellence.

Fact: For example, both the political science and mathematics departments at Carolina are among the best in the nation. And the departments of English, business administration, journalism, chemistry and sociology, to mention a few, are among the best in the South.

Charge: Carolina has courses that are "thickly coated with rust and decay."

Fact: Most of the school's courses and instructors keep apace with the trends and changes in their respective fields. Hardly a week passes that several articles by Carolina professors don't appear in national journals.

What has been the attitude of the Carolina student during this period of mud-slinging? Look at what he has not done. He has not called State College a trade school because it teaches the sciences to the exclusion of the liberal arts. He has not shouted "cow college" because a great part of State's facilities are devoted to training farmers that go into an industry which has to be supported by the government to exist.

No. The Carolina student has not done this — nor will he.

For the Carolina student reconizes the purpose of a technical school like State College. Carolina students will not indulge in name-calling, or the trite cliches thta others may use.

Until their mass meeting there were men on the Carolina campus who felt that State College should be allowed to keep its name, while increasing cooperation between the two schools at the same time. But few—if any—student at Chapel Hill can now want to actively support the State College students.

For most Carolina students believe that Chancellor John T. Caldwell gave his students adequate advice when he told them to: "Keep it (the debate) on the issue."

Military Instructors Are Needed

Graduates—or those who expect to graduate this Spring—who have majored in mathematics, physics, mechanical engineering, electrical engineering, or chemistry can now apply for commissioned officer status in the U. S. Navy for specific duty as an instructor in one of the the many Naval Schools established throughout the nation.

Men who pass the physical examination are sent to Officer Candidate School for 16 weeks of officer training and instructor schooling. Assignment to duty within their specialty immediately follows. The basic obligation for such duty is four years with normal pay and promotion schedules.

Additional information can be obtained at the Naval Armory or the Naval Recruiting Station, Federal Building, Raleigh.

The swivel chair was invented by Thomas Jefferson.

Student Wives To Hear Talk On Old Silver

Dr. Robert Senior of Chapel Hill will speak to the UNC Student Wives Club Jan. 22 in the Morehead Planetarium.

Senior will speak on the history and artistry of Old English Silver, and will show and discuss his own collection of antique silver—some of it dating back to the mid-1700's.

Special guest at the meeting will be Miss Francis Floore, whose collection of antique silver, now on display in the Morehead Planetarium, will be open to the club for view. Miss Floore's collection includes a silver piece made by Paul Revere's father.

All student wives and their guests are invited to the meeting. Refreshments will be served.

Dr. Senior, a Chapel Hill pediatrician who frequently lectures on child care, wants it made clear that he will not discuss children unless they were born with a silver spoon in their mouth.

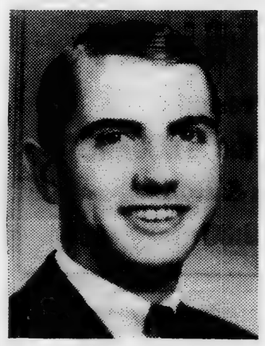
Review Students Win Movie Passes

Three journalism students of Professor Walter Spearman's film review course have been given free Rialto theatre tickets as prizes for their reviews of "Last Year at Marienbad," a French motion picture which recently played at the Durham theatre.

Kay Barnhart split first-prize with James T. Bond. The theatre management said they felt Miss Barnhart best captured the spirit of "Marienbad," an experimental feature by Alain Resnais, and that Mr. Bond had written the best "technical" review for a newspaper. Third prize went to John Medlin for "liveliness" of his review.

Paintings and etchings by Robert Shannon of Chapel Hill are now on display in the lounge of the Durham theatre. Shannon teaches art and design at Duke University.

Shannon's paintings are also included in an exhibition currently at Durham Allied Arts. Others have shown in the North Carolina Artist Annual, Raleigh (for five consecutive years); in the South Carolina Student Annual Exhibition (two years), in which he was an award winner in 1960; the Irene Leach Memorial Exhibition in Norfolk, 1960, and in a one-man show last year at Paintings Upstairs, Chapel Hill.



His work also has been shown in Young Americans Gallery in St. Louis, Mo. and the IFA Gallery, Washington, D. C.

Shannon studied at the Newark, N. J. School of Fine and Industrial Arts and received his A.B. and Master's degrees at UNC. He, his wife and two children live in Chapel Hill, and he maintains a studio in Carrboro's Town Hall.

All exhibitions at the Rialto, including Shannon's, are open to the public from 1 to 5 p.m. daily.

"Let's see now, I'll have ten cents worth of marble fudge, please."

That one statement is the one most heard by the employes of the Scuttlebutt, the Monogram Club Circus Room and the Y Court Soda Shop.

Marble fudge ice cream, known also as fudge ripple, chocolate fudge, chocolate marble and spotted vanilla is the most popular brand of ice-cream sold on the Carolina campus, according to spokesmen for the above-mentioned eateries.

According to a young lady at the Scuttlebutt, "Marble fudge ranks way above any other kind of ice cream we sell."

Oddly enough, all the soda shops agreed without comparing notes, that butter pecan was the next best seller.

After that comes the milk shakes, the most popular of which is vanilla.

Another young lady, this time at the Circus Room, said that the sale of milk shakes hasn't gone down much during the recent cold spell.

"It seems like everybody screams for ice cream whether it's cold or not," the lady said while dipping out two scoops of marble fudge.

Scholarship Is Prize For Labor Essay

The ABC Radio Network is sponsoring the Edward P. Morgan Essay Contest for undergraduate students in the nation's universities and colleges.

The essay must be 600 words on "Youth's Challenge in the Labor Market of the 60's."

Prizes include two scholarships for any course of post-graduate study and a three-day expense-paid trip to Washington for meetings with top leaders of government, education, labor and broadcasting.

Five semi-finalists will receive 24-volume sets of the new Collier's Encyclopedia.

Contest winners will be interviewed by Morgan on his nationwide radio program, and winning essays will be used as material on other programs.

Entries should be mailed to Edward P. Morgan Essay Contest, P. O. Box 43A, Mount Vernon 10, New York. They must be postmarked no later than January 31, 1963.

The AFL-CIO is joint sponsor of the contest. The U. S. Department of Labor is also supporting it.

Judges will be: W. Willard Wirtz, secretary of labor; Arthur J. Goldberg, Supreme Court justice and former secretary of labor; Frances Perkins, former secretary of labor; James P. Mitchell, former secretary of labor; U. S. Senator Jacob K. Javits; AFL-CIO President George Meany; John McConnell, Dean, Industrial and Labor Relations School, Cornell University; ABC Radio President Robert R. Pauley; and ABC newsman Edward P. Morgan.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X E
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Carolina And State Battle Here Tonight

By ED DUPREE

Any ardent North Carolina basketball fan would have little trouble remembering the last time the Tar Heels played North Carolina State.

The Wolfpack ran away from UNC by 85-57. It was the worst defeat a Carolina team had suffered in the rivalry in ten years.

Tonight the Tar Heels will be out to avenge that loss in the 100th game of the Consolidated University series. Dean Smith's cagers will put a 60-39 lead in the series on the line at 8 o'clock in Woollen Gym.

Everett Case, the dean of Atlantic Coast Conference coaches, brings his weakest team in years to Chapel Hill—but that doesn't brand his men as patsies. In 16 years under Case, State has had only one losing season—11-15 in 1960.

State is 5-4 for the season, winning half of six conference games. Clemson, Maryland and South Carolina fell to the Wolves, while Wake Forest, Duke and surprising Virginia stopped them.

UNC also defeated Clemson, South Carolina and Maryland. The Tar Heels smashed Maryland, 78-56, Monday night at College Park. Billy Cunningham again led the Chapel Hillians with 25 points.

Both State and UNC lost to Wake Forest by eight points, State by 76-68 and UNC by 78-79, but the comparison ends there. The Wolves squeaked past Clemson and Maryland and UNC triumphed easily.

A pair of senior guards, Jon Speaks and Ken Rohloff, lead the visitors. Speaks is the scorer, Rohloff the playmaker, yet neither is slack in other basketball talents.

Like most of the UNC opponents, State has a bigger front line than the Tar Heels. 6-8 John Key is the starting center, but has support from an improving Ron Gossell who stands 6-10.
